"That there are violations of the law all admit, but to cite that fact as an argument against the prohibition law is as futile as it would be to demand the cancellation of the whole decalogue because of repeated infraction of that law which is fundamental to all jurisprudence. We of the Salvation Army aspire to order our lives by the standard of these Ten Commandments, and to persuade others to do the same, and it would be about as sensible to engage in an effort to expunge that code from the Book of God because of its nonfulfillment in lives of men as it is to advance the theory that the prohibition law is a failure because it does not prohibit.

AMENDMENT MUST STAND.

"Because the laws against arson, theft, and murder are being violated, shall we abandon these laws and their penalties? Certainly not; and by the same token the eighteenth amendment and its supporting law must stand.

"The third count in this indictment is:

"'You can not by law make men moral.'

"This statement can not survive the acid test. Its reasoning is fallacious and its implications untrue.

"I must remind our friends that the question is not simply and only one of morals. That phase of the matter, I admit, to Salvationists looms up with singular distinctness. We hold that it is positively wicked to take God's good grain, capable of sustaining the lives of multitudes, who are now on the verge of starvation, and waste it, and not only so, but, in the process of waste, turn it into an unmitigated curse. No proprietary rights will absolve any from the moral obloquy of such conduct. To trade in that deceptive and destructive thing, apart from anything that statutory law may say, has long been regarded as of doubtful ethics. The beverage use of alcohol has proved with mathematical precision that it is a demoralizing and dehumanizing agent. Oh, yes! It is a moral question, but not only so. It is also an economic question, a sociological question, a political question, a scientific question, and startlingly these days have demonstrated it to be an international question. So it comes to pass that the economist, the scientist, the statesman, the sociologist, and the manufacturer have all joined with the moralist in the enunciation of this law that was graven by the hand of God in the constitution of human life.

LAW NECESSARY TO SOCIETY.

"The statement that morality is divorced from law is not true. Moral conduct is the aim and end of law. That is the meaning of law. Its enactment and administration has good conduct for its objective, and while conduct may at times be governed by a fear of penalty, law is still universally recognized as necessary to the existence of well-ordered society. When people say: 'You can't legislate people into good morals,' I reply: Into the whole fabric of our Nation's law is woven the ethical element, and any law that violates a correct moral standard is foredoomed to dishonor and its repeal is certain. By this test the old liquor-license laws were tried and condemned and ultimately superseded, and I feel quite happy in the realization that the same searching trial will reveal to the whole world the soundness of our present legislative position. Meanwhile depopulated prisons and rebuilt homes witness to the fallacy of this argument advanced against prohibition.

"The fourth indictment is:

"'Prohibition invades personal liberty.'

"Into this supposed tower of refuge probably more of our opponents run than any other, and from its flimsy ramparts they fling the cry: 'Prohibition invades our personal liberty by prescribing what we shall eat and what we shall drink; and we deny any man's right to proscribe our plum pudding or our exhilarating cup.'

"The principle, basic to the restraints of all law, is precisely that which enters into the prohibition law. No man objects to the denial of his liberty to steal; anyway, he doesn't object to the curtailment of his neighbor's liberty in this direction; therefore he should intelligently accept the application of this same principle to that house-breaking, home-destroying, child-abusing, business-wrecking thief—alcohol.

NO OTHER CONSISTENT COURSE.

"Liberty, true liberty, is a priceless heritage, but no man's liberty comprehends a right to strike another down, not even if that other is his own child. In the exercise of society's right to protect itself, the Nation came to an appraisal of the monstrous wrong that was perpetrated upon it by the permission of the drink traffic. The process toward that evaluation was slow and tedious, but the final appraisal was correct—correct politically, correct economically, correct scientifically, correct socially, and correct morally. With the soul of the people awake to this solemn fact, there was no consistent course possible but for the Nation to wash its hands forever from the cruel partnership that had dishonored it and refuse longer to traffic in homes, in happiness, in health, in the very lives of its children. To speak this holy purpose our Nation flung her starry pen across the Federal books and by strictly constitutional means wrote into the organic law of the land that which every officer and every citizen is pledged to support. There is no liberty apart from law. There is but one alternative—anarchy.

TEST OF RESPECT OF LAW.

"What about the enforcement of law?

"That splendid American, the Hon. Charles E. Hughes, Secretary of State, says: 'Everybody is ready to sustain the law he likes. That is not in the proper sense respect for law and order. The test of respect for law is where the law is upheld even though it hurts.'

"Law must be, and must be obeyed. Yet there are those who argue that the breach of the prohibition law is excusable. Some say it is laudable, while others are defiant and make it their business in life to forward their sinister work of doing those things that the law prohibits. There are others that go still further, and in their wild thirst for gain the lives of their victims count not, and murder is added to fraud when they trade upon the weakness of their fellows and for fabulous prices sell deadly poison.

"When I begin to analyze the crowd opposed to prohibition I must confess I am impressed neither with their quality nor their reasoning. Clean and loyal citizens opposed to prohibition place their reputation in jeopardy by such association. How sorrowful that opposition to prohibition has united, as in a great dragnet, the good and the bad, so that the respected citizen and the professional brewer are cogitating and cooperating together for the repeal of the eighteenth amendment! But—'they shall not pass'

"The prohibition law sprang from the soil and the soul. It germinated in remote and sacred places where mothers pray and fathers think. The country church, the country W. C. T. U., the country home and school took the lead—the West far in advance of the East. Long and wearisome has been the struggle. Shall those who fought and gained it never go back? 'Kansas,' William Allen White says, 'and States of her tradition and her kind would no more lose their 40 years' fight for prohibition than they would lose their 4 years' fight against slavery.'

COMPROMISERS ARE BANE.

"There are those that pronounce themselves in favor of light wines and beers. They are the 'happy medium' folk. To them the prohibition amendment is good, but its enforcement is bad. Their cry is 'modify.' Their name is legion. According to a recent independent poll, the number of these 'would-be' modifiers nearly equals the number of those who support unqualifiedly the amendment and its supporting legislation. Herein lies our danger. We have nothing to fear at the hands of the out-and-out 'wets.' They constitute a dismal and discredited minority. The compromisers are the bane that threatens the Nation's prohibition policy.

"A very large number, I might say nearly all, of these friends repudiate the saloon, and if it were a choice between the return of the saloon and prohibition then they would choose prohibition. But the menace of their position lies in the thought that light wines and beers are effectively divorced from the saloon and that the one can exist without the other. They say, 'No saloon—it is gone forever—but gives us light wines and beers.'

"Now, if it were possible to meet their demand, I am still for prohibition as prescribed by the present statutes. But it is not possible. It is not possible constitutionally. Intoxicating liquor is barred and little or no argument is needed to prove that so-called light wines and beers are of the proscribed class."

Mr. BROUSSARD. Mr. President, will the Senator from Minnesota yield to me to ask unanimous consent to have something inserted in the RECORD?

Mr. KELLOGG. If the Senator wishes to make any explanation, I wish he would wait until I get through. It will only take me about ten minutes.

Mr. BROUSSARD. I want to have something printed in the RECORD just at this point. It is the address delivered by Doctor Butler, and, inasmuch as the editorials have been offered, I would like to have the address follow the editorials.

Mr. KELLOGG. I have no objection to that.

Mr. WILLIS. I offered the editorials because the address of Doctor Butler had been referred to.

Mr. BROUSSARD. I understand. I ask unanimous consent that the address of Dr. Nicholas Murray Butler may be inserted in the RECORD, in regular RECORD type, immediately following the editorials offered by the Senator from Ohio.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The address is as follows:

LAW AND LAWLESSNESS.

AN ADDRESS DELIVERED BEFORE THE OHIO STATE BAR ASSOCIATION, AT COLUMBUS, OHIO, ON JANUARY 26, 1923, BY NICHOLAS MURRAY BUTLER.

In this presence of a distinguished and representative company of American lawyers and men of affairs, it would be quite easy to speak once again with appropriate rhetorical flourishes those sonorous platitudes concerning the law and its supremacy with which we are all familiar. One who does not venture beyond the limits of common consent may gain universal applause, but he does not contribute to progress. My preference is to raise, with such definiteness as the time at my disposal will permit, some fundamental and doubtless disputed issues which I conceive relate directly to the subject under discussion.

That disregard of law, disobedience to law, and contempt for law have greatly increased and are still increasing in this country is not to be doubted. Similar happenings are taking place in other parts of the world, but one may wonder whether the unenviable supremacy of the people of the United States in this field is not fixed for the time being. In all parts of the country judges and lawyers are discussing the prevalent spirit of lawlessness, and usually end by asserting emphatically that the law must be and shall be enforced exactly as it is written without fear or favor. This has a fine sound and is universally applauded, but it contributes absolutely nothing to an understanding or solution of the grave problem which widespread lawlessness has raised. An examination of the proceedings of the recent annual meetings of bar associations throughout the country establishes the fact that almost all of them have been hearing discussions of this topic. Its importance, therefore, and its nation-wide character may be taken for granted.

It is rather a sorry outcome of our century and a half of existence as an independent Nation, proclaiming to the world the discovery of the best possible method of providing for liberty under law, that we should now be pointed to as the law-breaking nation par excellence. At the meeting of the American Bar Association, held in San Francisco in August last, I listened to the report of a special committee on law enforcement. That committee called attention first to the fact that we in this country are without adequate and accurate statistical information as to crime, and will remain so until the Department of Justice is in position to establish a bureau of records and statistics, where all relevant information may be assembled and preserved and to which recourse may be had by courts and public officers throughout the Nation. That committee offered a most disheartening and indeed shameful comparison between the law-abiding character of the people of the Dominion of Canada and that of the people of the United States. They seemed to feel that the situation was somewhat relieved by the fact that when Canadians cross the border they become proportionately less law abiding than when at home. Some of us might think that, contrary to the adage of the poet Horace, these immigrants had changed both the sky above them and the spirit within them and that the inference was not complimentary to the United States. However that may be, the Dominion of Canada, with a population of some nine millions, stands in most enviable contrast to Cook County, Ill., with a population of some three millions, when burglaries, larcenies, and homicides are taken as standards of comparison.

It was of particular interest to hear in that report the statement that, particularly since 1890, there had been and continues to be a constantly widening and deepening tide of lawlessness in the United States. I hold that date, 1890, to have marked the turning point for the worse in more than one field of thought and action, and to be a truly significant date for anyone who would understand the prevalent lawlessness among our people. It seems clear that the remedies usually suggested for this lawlessness are very superficial and can have none but superficial and temporary results. It is all well enough to increase the number of judges, to make criminal trials more speedy and sentences after conviction more severe, and in various other conventional ways to strengthen the administration of justice. We may, however, do all these excellent things, and lawlessness will still continue to exist and to grow unless its underlying causes be reached and dealt with. Human experience has long since exploded the doctrine that a severe punishment will deter from the commission of crime. The fear of detection will so deter, but the fear of punishment will not.

In order to get at the fundamental facts in respect to lawlessness we must dig down somewhat deeper than ordinary. There is, first, the body of new information just being brought to general public attention, which appears to indicate that during the past hundred years and more the material progress of man and his power to control and apply the forces of nature have far outrun both his intellectual and his moral capacity and competence. One of the most distinguished of American scientists recently said in my hearing that he had about come to the conclusion that all his discoveries and advances were harmful rather than helpful to mankind because of the base and destructive uses to which they were likely to be put. He insisted that, in the present state of public intelligence, if there was a lofty use and a lower use of his discoveries and inventions, evidence multiplied that the lower use would be the first chosen. He pointed, among other things, to the fact that the Great War, with all its destructiveness and appalling loss of life and treasure, could never have been fought except by the use of two of the most beneficent and striking of modern inventions, namely, the telephone and typhoid phophylaxis. What, he added, is the use of inventing and improving the telephone or of discovering and applying typhoid prophylaxis if the killing of millions of men is the best use that can be made of them?

Frankly, we must face the possibility that we are living in a material world to which but a portion of the people are intellectually and morally adjusted. These, and these alone, be they few or many, are in a state of mental health. The others are pathologic cases from the intellectual and the moral point of view. They are not mentally defective as that term has been understood, nor are they in any technical sense insane; but they are sufficiently maladjusted to their environment to be lacking in complete mental and moral health. If conditions like these be superadded to the general temperament and known characteristics of the people of the United States, it is not difficult to see how a widespread spirit of restlessness, of dissatisfaction with law, and eventually of disregard for law, might be brought about. The more advanced of our students and investigators of mental life and mental health are quite alive to these conditions, but as yet they are voices crying in a wilderness.

The report of the American Bar Association's committee on law enforcement mentioned the year 1890 as significant in the history of the development of lawlessness in this country. That happens to be about the time when the standards and methods of general education which had existed in the United States for more than a half century began to give way before those that have since become increasingly influential not only in our schools and colleges but in our homes. For various reasons, which need not be gone into here, there then began to be an increasingly sympathetic response to the doctrine which had for some time been preached: That no youth should be asked to follow any course of study that he did not like and that was not of his own choosing. His tastes and early capacities or, perhaps, his whims were to take the place of human experience and the general interest in determining how he should spend his time while in the process of formal education. A quick effect, and, indeed, an almost unconscious effect, of the practice of such a doctrine is to displace discipline and to arouse in the mind of youth contempt and disregard for those things which he has not chosen to know, regardless of what may be the opinion of others concerning their value and importance. In this way the individual learns to separate his own tastes, his own interests, his own occupations, from those of the community of which he is a part and only to prefer and to follow his own. That subtle and many-sided influences would in this way be set in motion to make for lawlessness seems obvious.

Until about 1890 the ruling notion in American education was that there existed such a thing as general discipline, general knowledge, and general capacity, all of which should be developed and made the most of by cooperation between the home and the school. As a result of a few hopelessly superficial and irrelevant experiments, it was one day announced from various psychological laboratories that there was no such thing as general discipline and general capacity, but that all disciplines were particular and that all capacities were specific. The arrant nonsense of this and the flat contradiction given to it by human observation and human experience went for nothing, and this new notion rapidly spread abroad among the homes and schools of the United States, both to the undoing of the effectiveness of our American education and to the spread of a spirit which makes for lawlessness.

It would surprise a great many excellent persons to be told that the schools upon whose maintenance they are pouring out almost unlimited sums raised by public tax, were, quite unconsciously, doing all that they reasonably could to implant a spirit of lawlessness in those who come under their influence. And yet that is the sober truth. If a youth be taught at home or in school that there are no fundamental underlying principles, but that the world is his oyster, to be consumed at such time and in such fashion as he may see fit, or that it is to be made over to his heart's desire, one need not wonder when a spirit of lawlessness and restlessness under order and constraint finds expression in his life. The platitude makers tell us sometimes that education is preparation for life, and sometimes that education is life; take either horn of the dilemma, and the sort of education to which we are now subjecting our youth is too often a training in the spirit of lawlessness. No person can be called educated who will not do effectively something that he does not wish to do at the time when it ought to be done.

If these considerations be correctly stated, a secure foundation for lawlessness has been laid in our national life, and an invitation to lawlessness has been extended by the recent material progress of man and by the changes that have come over our national system of education. The sum total of the effects of these causes is to predispose to lawlessness. In such case there is no effective barrier raised against human passion, human greed, human revenge, or human cupidity. First comes individual interest and individual satisfaction; then group or class privilege or advantage; and last of all, the interest of the general public, which in a healthy and law-abiding society will always be supreme.

Upon the foundation so laid there has been rising for some time past a structure making for lawlessness, which has had the cooperation of many builders, most of whom have been quite unconscious of the part they were playing. Our legislatures, both State and national, and our various administrative boards and bureaus are largely made up of those whom Thomas Jefferson wittily described as demilawyers. Their ruling passion is a statute or an administrative order. Their constant appeal is to force, to what has come to be known as the police power of the State, and they exercise it with a ruthlessness and a ferocity from which kings and emperors have been accustomed to draw back. Shortly before retiring from public life former Senator Thomas, of Colorado, himself a learned lawyer of high type, made a speech in the Senate in which he pointed out that within a relatively short period of time we Americans had some seventy thousand statutes, State and national, passed for our guidance and government. To state this fact is to name a powerful force making for the spread of lawlessness. When the temporary is confused with the permanent, and when the unimportant and trivial is mistaken for that which has broad reference and wide implication, intelligent citizens must not be expected to look seriously upon statutes and statute making or to treat all statutes with equal respect. The strain is quite too much for common sense and for a sense of humor to bear. I well know that it is the opinion of lawyers that whatever enactments are duly made by a legislature and upheld by a competent court are part of the law. But that is an illusion. They are only part of the law if general public opinion supports and upholds them. There is a silent referendum in the hearts and minds of men on every important enactment by a legislature and on every important decision by a court which involves a fundamnetal principle of civil liberty. Without a favorable issue in that referendum, the statute and the decision alike are written in water. It must not be forgotten that law is but one form or type of social control.

It is not so many years ago that Americans used to laugh at the Prussian bureaucracy and to point with scorn at the signs "Verboten" that were to be seen on every hand in Prussia. Our bureaucracy is quite as bad as that of Prussia ever was, without being so efficient, and now we have a dozen Verboten signs in the United States to every one that Prussia can show. Not a few of the printed forms addressed to citizens by various bureaus of the National and State Governments are rude and peremptory to the point of insolence, and are justly resented by self-respecting citizens. The multiplication of petty crimes has gone on until the list includes scores of perfectly innocent departures from the conventional and scores of perfectly harmless infractions of good manners and good conduct.

No longer do the demilawyers stop with defining these acts as misdemeanors. Not infrequently they are elevated to the rank of felonies. Is it any wonder that an intelligent and self-respecting public revolts at that sort of official treatment? It may just as well be frankly stated that a very distinct contribution to the spread of lawlessness is made by the ease and inconsequence with which we make and modify the law. Did time serve, it would be possible to give illustration after illustration drawn from the statute books and administrative codes of States in all parts of the Union. Thomas Jefferson would rise in his grave if he could know what is now going on in the United States, not infrequently at the behest and under the influence of the political party which still professes allegiance to his name and principles.

In this respect things have come to such a pass that the really public-spirited legislator who should vote no on every roll call in respect to the final passage of a bill would be rendering public service nine times out of ten. The common law will take care of our developing needs in far better fashion than will statutes in all but a very small class of cases. The influence of a sound education and a true religion, if really believed in instead of being merely talked about, would in time build up a spirit of obedience to law, which no possible system of law enforcement can ever bring about. Through centuries a habit of obedience to the Ten Commandments may be built up among men, but the Ten Commandments can not be enforced by all the governments and armies in Christendom.

This is but one more phase of the never-ending struggle between reason and force in human life. Civilized States, and particularly those which rest upon a basis of popular government, are always steadily aiming to widen the area in which reason rules and to narrow that in which force controls, both as to their internal policies and as to their international relationships. We in this country, however, have of late been pursuing the reactionary policy of widening the area where force controls, and this is justly resented by a very large number of Americans. Their resentment leads naturally, in the case of not a few, to lawlessness in one of its many forms. It is no answer to say that these statutes and these administrative orders are made in pursuance of law, and that at bottom they rest, through the medium of our representative institutions, on the will of the majority. The will of the majority is under precisely the same limitations as was the will of the monarch. In the process of gaining freedom, it has never been the intention of modern men to substitute a tyrant with many heads for a tyrant with one head. They have endeavored and have struggled to mark out and to define an area of civil and political liberty into which no tyrant may enter, whether he have one head or many. The invasion of that area by the many-headed tyrant under the ostensible forms of law is just as repugnant to the lover of liberty as is its invasion by the monarch claiming to enter by divine right. When the law commits a trespass, it can hardly expect that sort of hospitable welcome which is cheerfully offered to an invited guest.

These were once fundamental principles of American public polity. They were universally accepted by the fathers and were laid down as the chart by which our ship of state was to be guided as it set out on its memorable voyage across the seas of political experience. It needs no argument to prove that we are tending to lose sight of these fundamental principles and to try all over again, although in new forms, the world-old experiment of tyranny and despotism and interference with personal life and private conduct. It has been settled and generally accepted law in the United States for nearly two generations that when an undertaking privately organized becomes charged with a public interest, then public supervision and control may rightly be established over it. Similarly, it is only when the private life and personal conduct of an individual become so charged with a public interest that public authority has any proper concern with them at all. It would not be unbecoming for us all to reread at intervals the Declaration of Independence and to reflect seriously upon its words. If the American of to-day were to read Thoreau's essay on Civil Disobedience, he might be startled but he certainly would be enlightened.

It would be lacking in frankness and sincerity not to point out two important and law-made influences which are now making, and seem likely long to make, for lawlessness in American life. The American people as a whole can not escape full share of the responsibility for these two influences, although they are in part due, no doubt, to what Walt Whitman described as "the never-ending audacity of elected persons."

The first is the fifteenth amendment, proclaimed in 1870, and the second is the eighteenth amendment, proclaimed in 1919. In form and in fact, and judged by all the usual tests and standards, these two amendments to the Constitution of the United States are part of the organic law, with all the rights and authority which attach thereto. Nevertheless they are not obeyed by large numbers of highly intelligent and morally sensitive people, and there is no likelihood that they can ever be enforced, no matter at what expenditure of money or of effort, or at what cost of infringement or neglect of other equally valid provisions of the same Constitution. The purpose of those who advocated and secured the adoption of these two amendments was excellent, but they did not stop to deal with the realities of politics and of public morals.

When the thirteenth amendment abolished slavery, and when the fourteenth amendment provided for the reduction of the representation in Congress from any State which abridged the right of any citizen to vote, except for participation in rebellion or other crime, the matter might well have rested there. All that was needed was the courage and the public opinion to enforce the fourteenth amendment, and speedily the several States would have made provision for their own protection by which the intelligent colored man would have been permitted to vote. Gen. Robert E. Lee himself testified in this spirit before the reconstruction committee of the Congress. The Civil War had but just ended, however, and passion ran high. Therefore, the fifteenth amendment was proposed and ratified, and the right of suffrage was given a national basis and protected by a national guaranty. What has been the result? After a half century the colored man votes in those States where he voted when the fifteenth amendment was passed, but he rarely votes, and certainly does not freely participate in public life, in those States where he did not vote then. Every attempt to enforce the fourteenth or fifteenth amendments has been denounced as a force bill. Oddly enough, it has been so denounced by those very Senators and Representatives who will go to any length to enforce the provisions of the eighteenth amendment. The practical question is not whether or not the colored man should vote in the Southern States, but whether the American people will frankly face the problem presented by the nullification throughout a large part of the land of a most important provision of the Constitution of the United States. Everyone knows what political results follow from the failure to enforce the provisions of the fourteenth amendment and from the skillful measures which have been enacted to escape its provisions without actually violating it. All this is a matter of history. No one in his senses wishes to overturn white government in the Southern States; but everyone with the American spirit in his heart wishes fair play and a fair chance for the colored man and the removal of any continuing cause of lawlessness which has its foundation in the organic law itself. It is elementary that an individual or a community may not defy law in one respect without developing a habit of disregard for all law. If the American people stand idly by and see the fifteenth amendment unenforced, and unenforceable because it runs counter to the intelligence and moral sense of large elements of the population, must they not either remove the offending cause from the law or leave off bewailing the lawlessness to which its presence naturally leads? This generation has become so accustomed to the cavalier treatment of the fourteenth and fifteenth amendments that it rarely weighs, and little understands, the influences flowing from them for lawlessness. It is a fair question whether, if the fifteenth amendment were repealed and the fourteenth amendment were enforced, the political and social condition of the colored man in the Southern States would not be vastly improved. Certainly a powerful and continuing cause of lawlessness would have been eliminated, and the political condition of the colored man would be no less advantageous than now.

The situation with regard to the eighteenth amendment is even worse, because the revolt against it is not confined to men and women of intelligence and moral sensitiveness in one section alone, but is Nation-wide. It will not do to attempt to silence these persons by abuse or by catch phrases and formulas of the hustings. These men and women dissent entirely from the grounds upon which the case for the eighteenth amendment was rested, and they regard its provisions and those of the statutes based upon it as a forcible, an immoral, and a tyrannical invasion of their private life and personal conduct. They have no possible interest in the liquor traffic, and they are without exception opposed to the saloon. But they are equally opposed to making the Constitution of the United States the vehicle of a police regulation affecting the entire country and dealing not alone with matters of public interest and public reference but with the most intimate details of personal and private life, including food, drink, and medical treatment. The moral sense, as well as the common sense, of very many people is affronted by a policy which will expend millions of dollars and use the methods of Czarist Russia and of the Spanish Inquisition to enforce one provision of law while others of far greater significance and public importance are accorded conventional treatment or less.

It will startle many excellent people to hear the following sentences from the recent book of Outspoken Essays, second series, written by the dean of St. Paul's Cathedral, London. The author, Doctor Inge, is one of the most learned and most eminent of English churchmen. "Suppose," says Dean Inge, "that the State has exceeded its rights by prohibiting some harmless act, such as the consumption of alcohol. Is smuggling in such a case morally justifiable? I should say yes; the interference of the State in such matters is a mere impertinence." (Inge, William Ralph—Outspoken Essays, second series (New York, 1922), p. 134.)

Or if one crosses the Atlantic he may find with increasing frequency expressions like these unanimously adopted by a recent grand jury in Kings County, N. Y., whose limits are identical with those of the community which has long been known as the City of Churches. Referring to the existing laws for the enforcement of the eighteenth amendment, this grand jury expressed itself as follows:

"Whatever may be our individual ideas upon the subject of temperance and prohibition, we believe that there can be no doubt but that this law tends to debauch and corrupt the police force. It interferes with the liberty and private life of moral, law-abiding citizens. It even goes so far as to brand good men felons because in their own conscience they desire to indulge in personal habits in which they find no harm. It has not checked the misuse of intoxicating liquors, but it has seriously hampered their proper use. We feel that it can never be enforced, because it lays down rules of private conduct which are contrary to the intelligence and general morality of the community. It is an attempt by a body of our citizenship, thinking one way, to interfere with the private conduct of another body thinking another way." (New York Globe, Dec. 29, 1922, p. 2.)

These are not expressions of a spirit of lawlessness. They are a simple declaration of the fact that lawlessness is certain to follow for some types of law. The answer which is made is instant and resounding. We are told that the eighteenth amendment was adopted in accordance with the provisions of the Constitution itself, and that its validity as an amendment has been affirmed by the United States Supreme Court. We are told then that all that those who disagree with its principles and purposes have to do is to accept defeat, to recognize themselves as in the minority, and to obey the law. Perhaps this ought to be the case, but it is not, and I greatly doubt if it ever will be, at least within the lifetime of any man now living. The majority is not always right, nor is its verdict final. The Old Testament records a leading case in which 450 prophets of Baal were worsted single-handed by the prophet Elijah, who had God and right on his side. Four hundred and fifty to one is a very unusual majority, but it was not enough.

As Abraham Lincoln pointed out in his argument against the finality of the decision of the United States Supreme Court in the Dred Scott case, he was not violating the law or urging its violation. He did not propose to set Dred Scott free by force in opposition to the court's decision. What he did propose, however, was to agitate and to lead an agitation for such political action as would make impossible the conditions which had led the Supreme Court to make its decision in that particular case. It is lawless openly to affront the law. It is not lawless to agitate for its modification or repeal.

No one who is familiar with the practical workings of our political system would expect either the fifteenth or the eighteenth amendment to be repealed within measurable time. So far as one can see, therefore, we are shut up to the alternative of their attempted enforcement by soldiers and police and special agents and detectives and spies or to their abrogation over a great part of the land by local initiative and common consent. Either alternative is humiliating and degrading. If our people have taken untenable and harmful positions in respect of securing suffrage for the colored man and in respect of promoting the cause of temperance and total abstinence and in removing the abuse and the nuisance of the public bar, they should be willing to retrace those steps and start toward their wise and splendid goals by other and more practicable paths. I know of no one who dares to hope for any such fortunate outcome of the unhappy conditions that now confront us.

Speaking for myself, I may say that my first political activity in my native State of New Jersey was in cooperation with colored men and on their behalf and in support of movements to restrict and to abolish the saloon or public bar. In my own congressional district there were large numbers of colored voters who were eager, intelligent, and public-spirited. To see colored men of that type participate freely in the public life of other districts and other States would be a great satisfaction. But it is now plain to me that the road which was taken to that end was a wrong road. It has delayed, not hastened, the political participation of the colored man in the public life of the United States. Similarly, it was my fortune as a member of the committee on resolutions of the New Jersey State Republican convention of 1886 to give the casting vote in favor of the platform declaration which declared war on the saloon. That platform declaration is supposed to have cost the Republican Party that election, but it was a sound and true declaration none the less. Later in the State of New York it was my lot to work vigorously with those who attempted to drive out the saloon by use of the power of taxation. Therefore I am personally committed through many years of practical political action to the cause of universal suffrage and to the abolition of the saloon. Perhaps for that very reason I feel so strongly as I do the disastrous mistakes that have been made and the evil consequences that have followed and are certain long to follow in the life of the people of the United States. Certainly there can be no more distressing and no more disintegrating form of lawlessness than that which arises from the resistance of intelligent and high-minded people on grounds of morals and fundamental principle to some particular provision of law.

The American people must learn to think of these things and to give up that unwillingness, which seems so characteristic, to discuss or to deal with the disputed and the disagreeable. We have almost gotten to a point where public men, and those who should be leaders of opinion, hesitate to speak until they know what others are likely to say and how what they say will probably be received by the press and the public. There are not so many as there should be who are willing to take the risk of being unpopular for the sake of being right.

SALARIES OF UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS AND MARSHALS.

Mr. NELSON. Mr. President, will my colleague yield to me?

Mr. KELLOGG. I yield if it is a matter that will take no time.

Mr. NELSON. I think it will take only a moment. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (S. 425) fixing the salaries of certain United States attorneys and United States marshals. I hope the Senator will allow me to make a brief statement.

The object of the bill is to confer upon the Attorney General the power to fix the rates of compensation of United States marshals and United States attorneys within certain limits. The salaries of United States attorneys are to be between a minimum of $3,000 and a maximum of $7,500, and the salaries of the marshals between $3,000 and $6,500. The salaries are to be based upon the amount of business done within the last four years.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, will the Senator from Minnesota allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. NELSON. Certainly.

Mr. ROBINSON. The Senate has entered into a unanimous-consent agreement to consider unobjected bills on the calendar under Rule VIII during the morning hour on next Monday.

Mr. NELSON. If the Senator will allow me, there has been a great demand for the passage of the bill, and I am very anxious to get it over to the House as soon as possible. The Committee on the Judiciary are unanimously in favor of the bill, and I think there will be no objection to its consideration if the Senator from Arkansas will allow me to make a brief explanation in reference to its subject matter.

At present, owing to the fact that the salaries of marshals and district attorneys have been fixed at different times, there is a great disparity and diversity in their compensation. An attempt was made to secure the passage of a bill prescribing their salaries in detail, but that measure was objected to. In 1919 Congress passed a law permitting the Attorney General to fix the salaries of clerks of United States courts within certain limits. That law has worked satisfactorily. It is now proposed in the pending measure to allow the Department of Justice, upon the basis of the work of these officials for the last four years ending this fiscal year, to fix the annual salaries of United States attorneys between a minimum of $3,000 and a maximum of $7,500, and to fix the annual salaries of United States marshals between a minimum of $3,000 and a maximum of $6,500. It is proposed only to make an exception in three cases, and those exceptions are as to the salaries of the United States district attorneys for the district of New York, for the district of Chicago, and for the District of Columbia, which may be fixed within a limit of $10,000 per annum. That is all there is in the bill, and I trust there will be no objection to its consideration.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill, which had been reported from the Committee on the Judiciary with an amendment to strike out all after the enacting clause and insert:

That the salaries of the United States attorneys and United States marshals for the several judicial districts of the United States shall be fixed by the Attorney General, beginning July 1, 1923, at rates not less than $3,000 nor more than $7,500 per annum for attorneys and at rates not less than $3,000 nor more than $6,500 per annum for marshals, the amount to be based in each instance upon the business transacted during the four years ending June 30, 1923: Provided, That the salaries of the United States attorney for the southern district of New York, the northern district of Illinois, and the District of Columbia may be fixed at rates not exceeding $10,000 per annum for each of said districts.

The Attorney General may increase or decrease any of the salaries fixed, as aforesaid, within the limits prescribed in the foregoing section if, upon investigation, he finds that there has been a material increase or decrease in the volume of business transacted: Provided, That no salary fixed under the provisions of this act shall be changed more than once in any four years.

All laws or parts of laws, in so far as they are in conflict with the provisions of this act, are hereby repealed.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The title was amended so as to read: "A bill authorizing the Attorney General of the United States to fix the salaries of United States attorneys and United States marshals of the several judicial districts of the United States within certain limits."

THE MERCHANT MARINE.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 12817) to amend and supplement the merchant marine act, 1920, and for other purposes.

Mr. KELLOGG. Mr. President, I listened this afternoon, with some degree of surprise and with deep regret, to an assault made in this Chamber upon the judiciary of the United States, which has been the protection and the bulwark of American liberty for more than 140 years. Manifestly it will be impossible for me at this late hour to attempt to answer a carefully prepared address which required an hour and a half to deliver; but I can not allow this opportunity to pass without entering my protest against doctrines which, if enforced, would be subversive of the liberty of the American people and destructive of all our institutions.

Should we take from the Supreme Court the power to declare a law which was passed in violation of the fundamental law of the land to be unconstitutional, we should place all the liberties of the American people in the hands of one body, and there would be no Constitution of the United States left. We can not have a written Constitution, Mr. President, which defines the powers of the Federal Government and of the State governments, which provides in the Bill of Rights for the protection of American citizens in their liberties for which our forefathers struggled, unless we have a Supreme Court to enforce the provisions of that Constitution.

Mr. President, three times in the history of this country, in periods of great political excitement, similar assaults have been made upon the power of the Supreme Court as that which was made in this Chamber this afternoon, and three times those assaults have failed because the American people are loyal to the principles which were established by our ancestors more than 140 years ago.

Mr. President, when the Constitution of the United States was adopted the people of the Colonies had just passed through the sufferings of a long, weary, and terrible war for liberty. They were determined to write their Constitution defining the rights and liberties of the American people, defining the powers of the legislature, prohibiting it from overstepping the bounds of constitutional limitations, and preserving forever the liberties written in that immortal document.

Mr. President, the principles of the Bill of Rights and many of the principles on which this Government is founded and which are written in the Constitution were not discovered by the men who wrote the Constitution. Many of them were principles for which the Anglo-Saxon race had struggled for 600 years since the memorable day at Runnymede; they were principles which had long been struggled for in the upward progress of the human race.

Not only that but the men who wrote the Constitution and the great men who interpreted it in the campaign for its adoption by the States perfectly understood that there was vested in the Supreme Court the power to declare an act of Congress unconstitutional if it violated the fundamental law of the United States—the Constitution. It was so announced by at least 20 of the delegates to the convention which framed the Constitution, and only 3 dissented from that view. It was so announced by Alexander Hamilton and Madison and by others in that the greatest of campaigns before the American people, the campaign for the adoption of the Constitution. That doctrine has been sealed by repeated decisions of the Supreme Court of the United States from the earliest day of our judicial history, even before the case of Marbury against Madison, down to the present time, in a long line of decisions, and there has been no decision to the contrary by any branch of the judiciary of the country. And why? Marshall pointed out the reason, namely, that it was necessary for the preservation of the American form of government that the legislative department should not have a right to overstep the bounds fixed by the written Constitution.

Oh, says the Senator from Oklahoma——

Mr. BROOKHART. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN in the chair). Does the Senator from Minnesota yield to the Senator from Iowa?

Mr. KELLOGG. No; I can not yield, because I only have a moment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Minnesota declines to yield.

Mr. KELLOGG. "Oh," says the Senator from Oklahoma, when asked the question what would happen under his proposal if the Congress should pass a law providing for unreasonable searches and seizures and providing further that the papers so unlawfully taken could be used to convict a man of a crime, "I decline to assume such a condition." Yet such an attempt was made in this country, and the Supreme Court of the United States declared it unconstitutional.

The Constitution would not have been adopted but for a general understanding that there was to be annexed to it certain amendments known as the Bill of Rights. Let me refer to them for a moment. The first amendment provides:

> Congress shall make no law respecting an establishment of religion or prohibiting the free exercise thereof; or abridging the freedom of speech or of the press; or the right of the people peaceably to assemble, and to petition the Government for a redress of grievances.

Those are immortal principles for which not only our ancestors struggled in the Revolution but for which generations before them struggled. If Congress shall pass a law in violation of those principles, has the Supreme Court no right to declare it unconstitutional?

Again, Mr. President, the Bill of Rights provides that—

> The right of the people to be secure in their persons, houses, papers, and effects, against unreasonable searches and seizures, shall not be violated.

That is the principle for which, as we know, the English-speaking race struggled for hundreds of years, and the men who wrote our Constitution proposed to put it where no legislature could take it away in the hour of passion. Again—

> No person shall be held to answer for a capital or otherwise infamous crime, unless on a presentment or indictment of a grand jury, except in cases arising in the land or naval forces, or in the militia, when in actual service in time of war or public danger; nor shall any person be subject for the same offense to be twice put in jeopardy of life or limb; nor shall be compelled in any criminal case to be a witness against himself, nor be deprived of life, liberty, or property without due process of law; nor shall private property be taken for public use without just compensation.

These are not merely expedients of Government; they are the everlasting principles on which our liberties depend and which were fought for on fields of battle and sanctified by the blood of martyrs. Are we to take them away by saying that any legislative body shall have the sole power to construe a law to determine whether it is in violation of that immortal document?

Mr. President, the genius of this Government, its true conception has been stated by a long line of jurists and statesmen from Marshall to the present time.

I know that at times, when legislative bodies or political parties have been restive under the restraints of the Constitution, there has been an agitation for an amendment to take from the Supreme Court the power to declare unconstitutional a law in violation of American rights under the Constitution; but the good sense of the American people always has prevented it. Under our form of government, under that Constitution, the greatest protection to human liberty ever written, we have grown from a little fringe of civilization along the eastern coast to a mighty Nation. We have increased in wealth and in prosperity and in happiness under a Constitution that has protected the American people. To say that that protection shall be taken away in the hour of prejudice or passion is to endanger the foundations of the Government and to endanger the principles of human liberty.

In three Congresses, at least, has this been attempted, and in three Congresses it has failed. I hope I shall never live to see the day when any Congress will propose to the American people the destruction of the Constitution by taking from the court the power to say that a law violates its principles, because upon that construction of our Constitution and upon the courts rests the perpetuity of American Government and American institutions. May that Constitution not only be, as it has been, a shield and a protection to us in times of stress and storm but may it be a protection to us through the generations and the centuries to come.

Mr. COLT. Mr. President, I desire to say only a word.

A constitutional provision may be treated in three different ways. It may be treated as the supreme law of the land, it may be treated as on a parity with a statute, or it may be treated as a declaration of public policy.

Under our Constitution, the provisions of the Constitution are directly made the supreme law of the land, and hence they are not upon a parity with a statute, because the Constitution says "the laws of the United States which shall be made in pursuance thereof."

Under the constitutions of Great Britain, of the Scandinavian countries, of Italy, and of New Zealand, the so-called constitutional provisions are treated as on a parity with the statutes, and therefore the parliament or congress may change or amend them.

Mr. NELSON. Mr. President, will the Senator allow me one interruption?

Mr. COLT. I yield to the Senator from Minnesota.

Mr. NELSON. The only other country in the world whose system of government conforms to ours, where the supreme court can declare a law unconstitutional, is the little country of Norway. It is the freest country in Europe. It has a government as free as that of this country; and in that country the supreme court can declare an act of the Parliament unconstitutional.

Mr. COLT. I was taking Lord Bryce's statement of the countries where the so-called constitutional laws are on a parity with statutes.

France has a written constitution, and Belgium has a written constitution. The provisions of those constitutions are not laws, and never have been treated as laws. They are treated as mere declarations of public policy, to be enforced by the public opinion of the country.

That is the French and the Belgian system. Under the Constitution of the United States, however, in express language, the provisions of the Constitution are made the supreme law of the land, and the Supreme Court has jurisdiction over all cases at law and equity arising under that Constitution. Hence, our Constitution in form is differently framed from the French constitution.

Our Constitution expressly says that its provisions are the supreme law of the land. If Congress can pass any act that it pleases in violation of these provisions, then these provisions, including the Bill of Rights, are no longer laws. They are mere declarations of public policy. Laws are rules of conduct enforceable by the courts. That is the only definition of municipal law known to the Anglo-Saxon race; and if the Constitution of the United States is the supreme law of the land, it is a law which must be enforced by the only tribunal that we have for judging and enforcing, namely, the Federal courts.

What is the Supreme Court going to do in a given case? Suppose a statute were passed saying that the salaries of the justices of the Supreme Court should be only $1,000 a year, in violation of an express provision of the Constitution. That case comes before the Supreme Court. The plaintiff relies upon the provision of the Constitution prohibiting any decrease in such salaries. The defendant relies upon the statute. The court must decide in favor of either the plaintiff or the defendant. The judges are bound by their oaths to support the Constitution of the United States. What judgment is the court going to enter? If it enters judgment for the defendant, then it must hold that the constitutional provision is on a parity with a statute, and is not the supreme law of the land; but if the constitutional provision is the supreme law of the land, the court must decide in favor of the plaintiff.

You are striking right at the very essence and foundation of the Constitution when you say that Congress can pass any law it pleases, regardless of the supreme provisions of the Constitution. Those provisions then become no longer laws enforceable by the courts. They are either on a parity with statutes, or else they are mere declarations of public policy.

That is all I desire to say.

Mr. BROOKHART. Mr. President, I desire to reply to some of the remarkable positions taken here to-day with reference to the relative positions of the Congress and the Supreme Court under the Constitution of the United States, but because of the lateness of the hour I will not proceed at this time, but I give notice that I shall proceed, if I can be recognized, on Monday.

JAPAN—A SEQUEL TO THE WASHINGTON CONFERENCE.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD an article by Mr. Hector C. Bywater on the subject "Japan—A Sequel to the Washington Conference."

Mr. Bywater is a British naval critic and the author of the volume "Sea Power in the Pacific." The article reflects a viewpoint which I am satisfied will prove astonishing to some Senators and interesting and important to all. I had expected to bring to the attention of the Senate some of the paragraphs in this article; but, in view of the lateness of the hour and the pressure of other business, I ask leave that the article be printed in the RECORD in 8-point type, and I call it to the attention of Senators.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The article is as follows:

JAPAN—A SEQUEL TO THE WASHINGTON CONFERENCE.

(By Hector C. Bywater, a British naval critic and author of Sea Power in the Pacific.)

[Reprinted from the Atlantic Monthly, February, 1923.]

I.

Sufficient time has now elapsed since the Washington conference to enable us to gauge the effect of its leading decisions on the naval position of Japan; and a study of this subject is rendered the more opportune in consequence of recent developments in the Far East which seem likely to react upon the naval policies of other powers.

The initial fact that emerges from a survey of the situation to-day is the patent failure of the conference to achieve its main purpose, namely, to check the further expansion of sea armaments in any and every shape or form. It has undoubtedly been successful in arresting the multiplication of capital ships, which are at once the most costly and—to the lay mind, at all events—the most aggressive instruments of sea power; but, through causes too notorious to need repetition, it imposed no veto on the building of other combatant types, save airplane carriers, and at least one signatory party has deemed it expedient to take full advantage of this omission. The result is that to-day, barely 12 months after the acceptance of the limitation treaty, a revival of shipbuilding competition seems inevitable if the balance of power as regulated by that treaty is to be maintained.

To state the case in a sentence: Japan, by diverting to the construction of cruisers and submarines no small part of the energy she formerly expended on capital ships, will soon be in possession of a fleet of auxiliary combatant vessels superior in some respects to that of any other power. The ratios of international strength formulated by the authors of the treaty have thus been upset, unless we assume the capital ship alone to possess any fighting value—an assumption manifestly absurd. Indeed, the relative importance of auxiliary craft has increased very considerably as the result of limiting the number of heavy ships. Therefore, when we find that Japan during the last five years has built or ordered no less than 23 light cruisers, as against a collective total of 16 for Great Britain and the United States, it would be futile to pretend that the Washington agreement has either stabilized naval strength on anything like a comprehensive basis, or relieved the naval authorities of Britain and America of all anxiety as to the future.

So far is this from being the case that at the moment of writing the United States Navy Department is understood to have in preparation a large program of auxiliary construction; and it seems only a question of time before the British Government will be compelled to take similar measures.

Japan, to do her justice, has been perfectly frank with regard to her postconference naval policy. Her intentions have been advertised to the world, even if their full significance has not been unduly stressed. She justifies her formidable program of auxiliary tonnage on two grounds: First, that it is necessary in order to save the national shipbuilding and kindred industries from the ruin that would have overtaken them had all naval construction come to a standstill; secondly, that the additional cruisers and submarines are really needed to compensate for the reduced strength of the battle fleet.

As regards the first argument, it is no doubt true that the sudden stoppage of all shipbuilding for the Navy would have been a most serious blow, not merely to the trades directly concerned but to the whole economic system of the country.

A few facts and figures bearing on this point will not be out of place. Under the impetus of conditions set up by the World War the industries of Japan flourished amazingly for a few years, and shipbuilding in particular was developed to a remarkable extent. In 1914 the number of yards producing seagoing ships did not exceed 6; by 1918 there were 57 such establishments in operation. The slump of 1920 drove more than half these newer yards out of business, and in August of last year only 26 remained.

At the close of the war, when orders for mercantile tonnage began to fall off and at length almost entirely ceased to come in, the shipyards were forced to depend for their existence largely on admiralty contracts. From their point of view the big naval program of 1920 was a veritable godsend. Irrespective of smaller vessels, it provided for the construction within eight years of a fleet of 16 capital ships, with an average displacement of approximately 42,000 tons, and of this number at least one-half were to have been built in private yards. Under the Washington agreement no less than 14 of these vessels were canceled, including six that were already building. When this decision became known in Japan there was an outcry from the shipbuilders, who saw themselves faced with ruin, and even louder protests came from the shipyard workers, who form one of the best-organized branches of Japanese labor.

According to official statistics there were in Japan nine large private yards that were generally engaged in warship construction, employing between them 96,000 hands, and four naval dockyards, employing some 61,000 hands. Consequently the number of workers who were interested in the building of warships was 157,000, of whom, it was estimated, 50 per cent would be thrown out of employment through the canceling of battleship orders alone. Had auxiliary ships been included in the limitation scheme, the percentage of men rendered workless would have been as high as 75.

Even as it was, organized labor became dangerously restive. Mass meetings of shipyard employees were held and violent speeches made against the Government for having "betrayed" the workers. Agitators, who had previously complained most bitterly of the burden of armaments, were now foremost in opposing a reduction of that burden.

It has been hinted in some quarters that this popular clamor against the suspension of warship construction was by no means distasteful to the Government, who saw in it an excellent excuse for continuing the development of the navy on as large a scale as was possible without transgressing the letter of the treaty. Be that as it may, generous concessions were granted with a promptitude that was rather surprising in view of the tendency of officialdom in Japan to resist any form of dictation by the masses.

Less than a month after the Washington conference dispersed it was announced at Tokyo that an agreement had been come to between the Government and the shipbuilders whereby the latter would be provided with other work in lieu of the countermanded battleships, and the wholesale discharge of shipyard workers would thus be avoided. The scheme was to retain practically intact that part of the 1920 program which related to auxiliary ships and to advance the dates of laying down these vessels. For example, contracts for cruisers which it had originally been intended to begin in 1923, 1924, and 1925, respectively, were to be antedated 12 months, so that the normal building programs of 1922, 1923, and 1924 would in each case be increased to that extent. In other words, twice as many auxiliary ships were to be laid down each year as the original program had legislated for. This plan embraced destroyers, submarines, and supply ships in addition to cruisers.

In alloting the new contracts special regard was had to the claims of the shipyards which would have benefited most under the preconference battleship program, orders for new light cruisers going to those State and private yards which had been promised or were already at work upon battleships and battle cruisers. The largest cruisers will therefore be constructed at the imperial dockyards of Kure and Yokosuka and the private establishments of Kawasaki and Mitsubishi and smaller units of this type by the Sasebo Arsenal and the Uraga Dock Co. At the same time contracts for destroyers, submarines, and fleet-supply ships are being distributed among the yards named and also among other establishments which suffered through the recision of the preconference program. Furthermore, extra work has been provided for the State dockyards by assigning to them the dismantling of condemned ships.

By these measures the crisis in the shipbuilding industry has been largely overcome, all the principal yards throughout the country have a fair amount of work in hand, and it has been necessary to discharge only a comparatively small number of workers.

On the other hand, the cost of all this auxiliary tonnage will be heavy enough to wipe out a great part of the sum saved by scrapping the capital-ship program, and the net saving effected in new naval construction will consequently be much less than the taxpayers had anticipated. There are not wanting those in Japan who censure the Government for adopting this policy of "robbing Peter to pay Paul." It would, they contend, have been better to encourage the shipyards to develop other branches of activity than naval construction, such as the manufacture of locomotives and other railroad and street-car material, iron and steel work parts for bridges and structures, industrial power plants, automobiles, and the like, as has been done by European armament firms since the war.

As it is, the critics declare, the wealth of the nation is being dissipated on fighting ships, which apparently have been ordered simply to keep the shipyards in operation and not because they are absolutely essential for defense purposes.

Another and still graver objection urged against the Government's policy is that this sudden expansion of the auxiliary combatant fleet may evoke suspicion abroad as to Japan's bona fides in respect to disarmament and lead other powers to strengthen their fleets in the same way, thus ushering in a new era of naval rivalry and mutual distrust. That these apprehensions are well founded has already been made clear by the reported action of the American naval authorities in drawing up a new program to counterbalance Japan's growing strength in cruising ships and submarines.

Figures showing the actual reduction that has been effected in Japan's naval expenditure by the limitation scheme are not yet available, but the gross amount appears to be in the neighborhood of 100,000,000 yen.

In 1920 the navy budget amounted to 320,000,000 yen, or nearly twice as much as it had been three years previously; and subsequent additions, due to the passing of the "eight-eight" program, brought the gross amount to nearly 500,000,000 yen. In the following year another big increase was made, and, but for the limitation scheme, naval expenditure during the current year would have been not far short of 750,000,000 yen.

According to Tokyo press reports the naval estimates submitted in July last provided for an ordinary expenditure of 120,000,000 yen and for an extraordinary outlay of 198,000,000 yen, showing decreases of 15,000,000 and 60,000,000 yen, respectively. On October 30 it was announced that the finance department had further reduced the navy estimates in the forthcoming budget by 30,000,000 yen, making a total reduction of over 100,000,000 yen, or approximately one-seventh of the amount that would have been spent on fleet armaments this year had the "eight-eight" program remained in force.

This saving is accounted for almost entirely by the deletion of the capital ships and the abandonment of new docks and harbor works; only a very small percentage is due to reductions in personnel; and, as we have seen, the bill for auxiliary construction, so far from showing any cut, has been greatly increased. Some money will also be saved by giving up Port Arthur as a naval station and reducing the status of the Maizuru base.

As no precise figures of the cost of man-of-war construction are published in Japan the expenditure that will be incurred by virtually doubling the auxiliary building program over a term of several years can be only roughly estimated. It is known, however, that the light cruisers of the Kuma class, 5,500 tons, have cost nearly $5,000,000 each; that the 7,500-ton ships of the Yubari class are priced at about seven and a half million dollars; and the new 10,000-ton ships, four in number, at not less than $10,000,000 each. First-class destroyers, of which many are building and 24 projected, probably cost one and a half million dollars per boat; the medium submarine—900 tons—about the same, and the new large type—1,500 tons—$3,000,000.

These prices are, if anything, underestimated, the cost of naval construction being abnormally high in Japan despite the relative cheapness of labor. In any case, it is sufficiently obvious that a program which embraces not less than 15 cruisers, ranging from 5,500 to 10,000 tons, 40 destroyers, and 50 submarines, besides a great many supply and depot ships, will eventually cost an enormous sum of money.

II.

It is patent to everyone that Japan is at present building more combatant tonnage than any other power, but what is not so generally appreciated is the fact that she is actually building more tonnage of this description than all the other powers combined. Once more it must be emphasized that the so-called "disarmament treaty," while certainly bringing dreadnought construction almost to a halt, has not only done nothing to limit the building of other man-of-war types, but has actually increased the number of these vessels in the case of Japan, and in all likelihood will eventually produce a corresponding expansion of the auxiliary ships of other navies.

It would occupy too much space to narrate in detail the various strategical reasons which the Japanese naval authorities have put forward, through the medium of the press, to justify the building of so many "auxiliary combatant ships"; but their argument may be summarized as follows: The battle fleet has been so reduced under the limitation agreement that it will no longer be capable of fulfilling its proper function, namely, going out to seek and engage an enemy fleet on the high seas; but must henceforth be kept in reserve as a last card, only to be played if and when the enemy's preponderance has been reduced or destroyed by tactics of attrition. Therefore to compensate for the loss of direct offensive power formerly vested in the battle fleet, Japan requires for her safety an unusually strong force of minor weapons of attack. She particularly needs an ample supply of swift ocean-going cruisers to guard her own communications and harass those of an enemy, and also to prey upon his commerce, with the ulterior purpose of diverting part of his strength from the immediate war zone.

For the same reasons it is essential to have a large fleet of ocean-going submarines which could be used alternatively for coast defense, for near and distant mine-laying expeditions, and for raiding commerce. The twofold problem confronting the Japanese Navy in war would be to maintain, as far as possible, the freedom of the ocean trade routes, and, above all, to guard communications with the Asiatic continent, which would represent a vital and indispensable source of supply for foodstuffs and raw materials. In the absence of a really effective battle fleet—effective, that is, in the sense of being able to engage the battle fleet of any potential enemy with reasonable prospects of success—these strategic tasks can best be performed by cruisers and submarines.

As regards the loss of power resulting from the limitation of the battle fleet to 10 ships this, it is argued, is far more serious than might be inferred from superficial observation. Four of the ships are battle cruisers of a design which post-war progress has made obsolete, and which could not be placed in the line of battle without exposing them to grave risk of summary destruction. This brings the battle fleet proper down to six ships, none of which could possibly be replaced if lost or disabled.

Japan is, therefore, at a grave disadvantage as compared with Britain and the United States, since their infinitely greater resources would enable either of those powers to build new capital ships very rapidly in place of any that were lost in action.

Another important factor in the revised scheme of defense is the chain of outlying naval bases with which Japan has girdled herself during the past few years; and, apropos of this subject, there can be no harm now in disclosing certain facts of which the American public has, perhaps, hitherto remained in ignorance.

In the fall of 1920 the Japanese naval authorities in cooperation with the general staff worked out a scheme for fortifying the principal islands that guard the approach to the coasts of Japan proper. This measure was intended to counteract the then impending development of Cavite and Guam as first-class bases for the American Pacific Fleet.

In September, 1920, a committee of experts, headed by Captain Mori, of the navy department, visited all the islands in question, reporting that the points where strong fortifications and naval facilities were needed most urgently were the Bonin Islands, Amami-Oshima, and Yajima in the Loochoo group. This report having been approved by the Government, steps were immediately taken to carry the proposals into effect, and the work of fortification was put in hand early in 1921.

For reasons of finance it was intended to spread the appropriations over two, if not three, years, as in view of the slow progress being made with the American works at Cavite and Guam it was thought that the completion of the Japanese insular bases might safely be prolonged till the end of 1922. But in the spring of last year (1921) it became known at Tokyo that the United States Government was meditating an appeal to the powers to join in a conference for the reduction of naval armaments, and this news decided the Japanese authorities to speed up the completion of their island forts, with the object of putting themselves in a favorable position strategically before the conference was summoned.

Consequently from May, 1921, the work at the Bonins went on with feverish energy. A large fleet of steamers was chartered to convey thither the thousands of laborers and the vast quantities of material needed to complete the task. So great was the demand for cement that a temporary shortage of this material ensued. Throughout the summer and autumn building operations went on night and day, and during this period the Bonin Islands were under a military administration which maintained a strict surveillance over visiting foreign ships. The Japanese press was also forbidden to publish any mention of what was in progress at the islands.

By December the last of the batteries had been constructed and armed with heavy long-range guns, the barracks, munitions depots, aerodrome, and radio station had been constructed, and every navigable approach had been rendered impregnable.

Meanwhile the Washington conference had assembled, and Admiral Baron Kato, of the Japanese delegation, had taken the first opportunity to inform his American colleagues that Japan regarded the abandonment of the Philippine and Guam fortifications as the condition precedent to negotiations for the reduction of her shipbuilding program. If the United States would agree to this, Japan, on her part, was prepared to suspend her own plans for fortifying her Pacific islands and would at the same time cooperate most willingly in any practicable scheme for limiting her floating armaments.

Baron Kato did not add, however, that Japan, having been secretly engaged in fortifying her island bases for many months previously, had just completed the work, whereas scarcely any progress had been made in the development of the American stations at Cavite and Guam.

III.

Whether the American naval experts were cognizant of the facts is a moot point, but it seems scarcely credible that they would have acquiesced in the status quo proposal for Pacific bases had they known that Japan was already in possession of a thoroughly equipped naval station at the Bonins. If they did know this, one is forced to conclude that their protests against the renunciation of the right to put the western islands in an adequate state of defense were overruled by the Washington Cabinet on political grounds.

In any case Japan scored a signal triumph in securing the adoption of the status quo agreement with regard to Pacific fortifications. From her point of view it was a strategical gain of the first magnitude, which more than compensated for the reduction of her battle fleet.

That the full significance of the clause has come to be appreciated by American naval students is clear from certain outspoken criticisms which have appeared recently. The Japanese Foreign Office, betraying a sense of humor for which few would have given it credit, issued the following communiqué on February 22 last:

"The treaty on the limitation of naval armaments signed at Washington on February 6, 1922, comes into force upon its ratification by all contracting powers. With regard, however, to certain fortifications and naval bases of the British Empire, the United States, and Japan in the region of the Pacific Ocean, it is provided in Article XIX of the treaty that the status quo at the time of its signature shall be maintained. In conformity with the spirit of this provision, the Japanese Government have decided forthwith to discontinue the work on the fortifications in the Bonin Islands and Amami-Oshima, and further to maintain the existing condition of fortifications and naval bases in Formosa and the Pescadores. The necessary measures for giving effect to this decision have already been taken."

Napoleon's dictum that "war is an affair of positions" applies to the sea no less than to the land, and to a far greater degree than was the case a century ago. A fleet in those days was largely self-supporting, and could remain at sea for months at a time independent of bases, because it had no fuel problem to contend with. But the conditions to-day are vastly different. The "reach" of a modern battle fleet can be measured with almost mathematical precision, governed as it is by the number and situation of the points d'appui available. In time of war no fleet dare venture to cruise for long in waters where ample facilities for refueling do not exist. If the ships of which it is composed have an average fuel endurance of, say, 10,000 miles, that does not mean that they would be able to advance to a point 5,000 miles from home and still be sure of getting back in safety, for the maximum cruising radius of a ship is always reckoned in terms of economical speed and bears no relation to the distance that could be steamed if the engines were running at full power. Thus a battleship able to cover 10,000 miles at a constant speed of 12 knots might be unable to travel more than 3,000 miles at her full speed of 21 knots—and in war-zone operations high-speed steaming is the rule rather than the exception. To cruise under a small head of steam in waters where enemy submarines might be encountered would be to risk destruction.

Now, the only insular base in the Pacific where the American battle fleet could be sure of finding adequate supplies of fuel is Hawaii, and we are therefore justified in assuming that 2,000 miles represents the utmost distance to which the fleet could venture to the west or south of Hawaii in time of war; and even this would leave a dangerously narrow margin of fuel for emergencies. But if America fights in the Pacific at all, she will fight for definite objects, among which will be the protection or—what is far more likely—the recovery of the Philippines, and to gain these objects she must be prepared to undertake active naval operations in the immediate zone of war, namely, the far western Pacific.

How this is to be done without local base facilities is a problem which apparently defies solution. It is certain that in their present defenseless condition, now to be stereotyped by the treaty, both the Philippines and Guam would become Japanese in the first weeks of war.

This is fully realized and freely admitted by American strategists, but it is interesting, nevertheless, to have Japanese testimony on the point. In the Dai Nihon of August, 1921, a thoughtful monthly review published at Tokyo, the editor, Mr. Seijiro Kawashima, discussed the probable course of hostilities between his country and the United States, and affirmed that should the outbreak of war find the main American naval forces at Panama, San Francisco, or even at Hawaii, "it will be open for Japan to take the Philippines, indeed Guam. * * * Should the worst happen, therefore, Japan would risk everything to destroy these two bases, and the ferocity with which she will fight may well be imagined." Clearly, therefore, the islands in question must be ruled out of any objective examination of the task that would confront the United States Navy in a war with Japan.

IV.

It remains, then, to consider how far offensive operations in the western Pacific would be feasible without bases. From Hawaii to the nearest Japanese coast is some 3,400 miles, making 6,800 miles for the round voyage, which would be well within the cruising capacity of modern battleships at economical speed.

But, as was emphasized above, ships steaming at low speed in an area frequented by hostile submarines would be in continual danger of attack. To be reasonably safe from submarines they must not only steam at a high rate of speed, but make frequent alterations of course, a method of progression which involves an abnormally heavy consumption of fuel in traversing a given distance.

It is therefore extremely doubtful whether the fuel endurance of the ships would suffice even for the outward journey of 3,400 miles; and if the fleet found itself close to the enemy's coast with empty bunkers and no friendly base at hand it would be exposed to certain annihilation.

Consequently, on the surface of things, it looks as if the American Navy would be physically incapable of undertaking major war operations in the western area of the Pacific; there is no visible means whereby the fatal handicap of nonexistent bases might be overcome. It is as if the United States, in pledging itself not to proceed with the fortification of its distant islands, had voluntarily surrendered not merely the power to defend these possessions, but the power to defend its interests in the Far East generally, no matter how vital they are or may become in the future.

Japan, on the other hand, has gained a strategical predominance in her adjacent waters far exceeding that which she could ever have hoped to achieve had the competition in naval armaments pursued its normal course. For good or ill, the doors of the Far East have been slammed, barred, and bolted, and the keys placed in Japanese keeping.

The British Empire, it is true, might be in a position to dispute this supremacy, thanks to its actual and potential base resources in the Pacific; but here again the factor of distance would come into play on the side of Japan by making sustained offensive operations against her coast next to impossible, even for a greatly superior British fleet pivoted on Singapore, New Guinea, or Australian harbors.

If these premises are sound they seem to warrant the conclusion that a naval war between the United States and Japan would speedily result in a stalemate, affording no opportunity for a decision by direct action from either side, since the opposing battle fleets would be unlikely to come within several thousand miles of each other. It is here, however, that the significance of the large program of minor naval construction, upon which Japan is now engaged, may be manifest.

Since history contains no record of a war having been decided wholly, or even mainly, by the destruction of maritime trade, the greatest authorities have always excluded the guerre de course from the domain of grand strategy, relegating it to a subsidiary place in the general scheme of belligerent operations at sea. Nevertheless there was one period of the World War when it seemed as if science had placed in Germany's hands the means of undermining what had come to be regarded as a fundamental principle of naval strategy. The submarine campaign came very near to breaking the resistance of the Allies, and did, in fact, produce that anomalous situation in which the power supreme at sea, whose warships held undisputed command of the ocean surface in nearly every part of the world, nevertheless found its marine communications menaced to a highly dangerous degree, and was able only by superhuman exertions to maintain the minimum amount of sea-borne traffic essential to the further conduct of the war.

At an earlier stage of the struggle grave loss was caused to shipping by the few German cruisers which were at large when the war began. It took a good many months to dispose of these surface corsairs, and the task was accomplished only by diverting a numerous force of swift cruisers from other war service and sending them to scour every ocean area where the raiders were likely to be met with.

Comparatively large as was the fleet of cruising ships at the disposal of the Allies, it barely sufficed to meet this demand. Had fewer ships been available the German commerce destroyers would have enjoyed a much longer lease of life, and the embarrassment they caused must have been infinitely more serious.

Among naval men a firm conviction obtains that the next great war will inevitably witness the revival of submarine attack on merchant shipping, since they believe that parchment safeguards against this practice will soon collapse under the stress of war. Assuming then that the naval methods in vogue during the World War are likely to reappear in the event of a Pacific campaign, the advantages which Japan would derive from her powerful fleet of cruisers and submarines are obvious. They would enable her, while maintaining her battle fleet intact behind its impregnable barrier of insular and coastal defenses, to wage ruthless war against her enemy's trade and communications.

When the current building program has been completed she will possess at least 25 modern cruisers of great speed and wide radius of action, together with more than 70 submarines specially designed for prolonged voyaging, the majority of them being well able to cross and recross the Pacific Ocean without needing to replenish their fuel.

V.

What resources has the United States Navy to deal with this immense fleet of potential commerce destroyers? On the basis of recent war experience it has been estimated that from four to six fast cruisers are required to circumvent the activities of one enemy surface raider; while some idea of the tremendous array of force necessary to cope with submarine attack on merchant shipping is conveyed by the fact that upward of 3,000 patrol craft of every type were kept in service by Great Britain alone, though the Germans never had more than 30 U-boats at sea simultaneously.

At the present time there are only 10 modern cruisers built or building in the United States. Even if all these ships were released from duty with the fleet in order to protect trade routes, what could they hope to achieve against 25 enemy raiders with speeds not inferior to their own?

The task would, of course, be hopeless from the start. Unless, therefore, the convoy system were adopted—and this would be at once a difficult and a precarious business under the peculiar conditions governing warfare in the area we are considering—American merchant shipping would, in all probability, be swept from the Pacific very soon after the outbreak of hostilities with Japan.

While there is not the least reason to suppose that this blow would force the United States into submission, the combined loss of trade and prestige resulting therefrom would be a serious matter. Nor would it be possible to retaliate with any marked effect; for the same dearth of cruisers that rendered the United States powerless to protect its overseas trade would debar it from molesting the communications of the enemy.

Moreover, provided that her connections with the Asiatic mainland were secure, Japan could afford to dispense for a time with other external sources of supply, and practically the whole of her cruisers and submarines, having but little patrol duty, would be free to engage in offensive operations.

Thus the widely held idea that a war in the Pacific must speedily end in a deadlock, in which neither opponent could inflict any appreciable damage on the other, is seen to be fallacious. It would have been sound enough had the naval limitation agreement embraced all types of fighting craft; but the failure of the conference to extend the ratio system to cruiser and submarine tonnage has completely altered the situation.

In view of the foregoing considerations, it would cause no surprise to learn that American naval authorities entertain profound misgivings with regard to future developments in the Far East. That their responsibilities have been immeasurably increased by the limitation treaty is self-evident. Indeed, it might be affirmed without fear of contradiction that the treaty, by depriving the United States of all power to intervene by force of arms, has placed her interests in the Far East completely at the mercy of a foreign State, upon whose good will they must henceforth depend. The task of defending them against aggression would have been difficult enough had the naval limitation scheme never been conceived. As things are, their defense—by warlike action, at any rate—has to all appearances become impossible.

LANDS IN WYOMING.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of Senate bill 4146. It refers to a little local matter in my State; and as I may not be in the Chamber on Monday morning, I should like to have it considered and passed at this time.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill referred to by the Senator from Wyoming?

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (S. 4146) granting certain lands to Natrona County, Wyo., for a public park.

The bill had been reported from the Committee on Public Lands and Surveys with an amendment to strike out all after the enacting clause and to insert:

That upon delivery to the Secretary of the Interior by the State of Wyoming of its properly executed and duly recorded deed or deeds reconveying to the United States of America in fee simple the lands in section 36, township 36 north, range 86 west of the sixth principal meridian, containing approximately 640 acres, the said State shall be authorized and permitted to select an equal number of acres from the unreserved, nonmineral, nontimbered, unappropriated public lands of the United States in said State, for the same purposes, and subject to the same conditions and limitations under which the lands so reconveyed were held.

SEC. 2. That when the title to section 36, township 36 north, range 86 west of the sixth principal meridian, shall have revested in the United States pursuant to the foregoing provisions, the Secretary of the Interior shall cause a patent to issue conveying the said section 36, township 36 north, range 86 west, together with the north half of section 1, township 35 north, range 86 west of the sixth principal meridian, to Natrona County, Wyo., in trust for the purpose of a public park, but in said patent there shall be reserved to the United States all oil, coal, and other mineral deposits within said lands and the right to prospect for, mine, and remove the same.

SEC. 3. That the grant herein is made upon the express condition that within 30 days of the receipt of any request therefor from the Secretary of the Interior the county clerk of Natrona County, Wyo., shall submit to the Secretary of the Interior a report as to the use made of the land herein granted the county during the preceding period named in such request, showing compliance with the terms and conditions stated in this act; and that in the event of his failure to so report, or in the event of a showing in such report to the Secretary of the Interior that the terms of the grant have not been complied with, the grant shall be held to be forfeited, and the Attorney General of the United States shall institute suit in the proper court for the recovery of said lands.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The title was amended so as to read: "A bill permitting the State of Wyoming to reconvey certain lands to the United States and select other lands in lieu thereof, and providing for the patenting of certain lands to Natrona County, Wyo., for public park purposes."

EUGENE FAZZI.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of House bill 3461, for the relief of Eugene Fazzi, a bill now on the calendar. I do not think there will be any objection to it.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the consideration of the bill?

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, I give notice now that in view of the unanimous-consent order entered to-day for the consideration of all unobjected bills on the calendar on Monday,

I shall hereafter object to the consideration to-day of any bill on the calendar. I shall not object to the present consideration of this bill.

Mr. McNARY. May I ask the Senator from Arkansas if he will not make an exception in the case of a bill I have here—a very important bill?

Mr. ROBINSON. I shall adhere to the announcement. An opportunity to consider all these bills will be afforded on Monday, and it is a bad practice out of the morning hour to call up for consideration bills on the calendar. There is really no necessity for taking them up by unanimous consent now, because the Senate has entered an order to proceed to the consideration of all unobjected bills during the morning hour Monday, and everyone knows an objection will take over any bill brought to the attention of the Senate. I have not objected to the request of the Senator from New Jersey because no notice had been given, but it is now very late, there are comparatively few Senators present, and I shall ask other Senators not to bring forward measures this afternoon.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the immediate consideration of the bill?

Mr. HARRISON. What does the bill provide?

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. I will explain it. The beneficiary was a deck hand on a Quartermaster Corps boat, the Johnston. His leg was cut off by a tow line, and the bill was introduced to compensate him.

Mr. HARRISON. I recall the facts.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill, which was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to Eugene Fazzi, the sum of $768, as compensation for the loss of a foot, on March 8, 1916, while in the discharge of his duty as a deck hand on the steamship General Joseph E. Johnston, in the service of the Quartermaster's Department, United States Army.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

PRICE OF COAL.

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. I ask unanimous consent that there be inserted in the RECORD, in 8-point type, the following letter from John H. Jones, of Pittsburgh, addressed to the Hon. DAVID I. WALSH, junior Senator from Massachusetts.

There being no objection, the letter was ordered to be printed in the RECORD in 8-point type, as follows:

FEBRUARY 14, 1923.

Hon. DAVID WALSH,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: After having carefully read your interview in the New York Times, we wired you as follows:

"Have carefully read your statement Sunday, February 11, New York Times. We are prepared to ship entire requirements of New England States, high grade, high volatile, bituminous steam or domestic lump steam, mine run, $3.25 per net ton f. o. b. mines; domestic lump, passing over three-quarter to 2-inch screen, $3.75 to $4 net ton f. o. b. cars at mine. Quality and preparation guaranteed; subject to inspection at mines; subject further to your furnishing railroad cars and transportation. Can arrange to load solid train daily to extent of requirements of your district. Coal to be shipped from mines in Pennsylvania and West Virginia. This coal similar to that now being furnished by us to the Taunton Gas Light Co., Taunton, Mass., and others in New England States. Also have mines in Ohio and Kentucky and can ship to any customer east of the Mississippi. We will be glad to have you refer any consumer east of Mississippi in need of coal to us immediately.

"BERTHA COAL CO.
"CONSUMERS FUEL CO.
"JOHN H. JONES, President."

(Paid—Charge us.)

We stand prepared to furnish bond of $100,000 to guarantee shipments as stated in our wire.

I am sure you will admit you have done the coal miners and operators of this country a great injustice in making such statements, as there is no shortage of bituminous coal to-day where transportation facilities are available.

Would it not be better when giving an interview to tell the public that the whole problem is one of transportation, and that the breakdown in transportation on the railroads has been brought about by a constant interference on the part of State and national agencies during the past 10 years? If these agencies will lend a helping hand to the railroads instead of continually interfering with them, there will be no shortage of railroad transportation for coal or any other commodity. What this country wants to-day is "more business in politics and less politics in business."

I note from your statement in the Times that the city of Lynn, Mass., is short of coal. On January 23, and even as recently as yesterday, we tendered coal to our customers in that city at less than $8 per net ton delivered at their plants, and we guaranteed delivery via rail and tidewater, but our customers advised us there was no shortage of coal at this point. Surely some one has exaggerated, or you have been badly misinformed on the conditions existing in that territory.

Our New York representative, Mr. G. N. Reed, telephoned Mr. H. K. Morrison, general manager of the Lynn Gas & Electric Co., Lynn, Mass., one of our customers, and offered to sell him coal at less than $8 per net ton delivered at his plant, and he advised our Mr. Reed that there was no shortage of coal at Lynn, Mass. The Taunton Gas Light Co., Taunton, Mass., one of our customers, advised us to the same effect over the long-distance telephone to-day. In both instances we have cited above we were able to secure transportation via all rail, or rail and tidewater, which would enable us to deliver coal at our customers' plants.

In conclusion, I wish to say that I feel it is not your desire to make such misleading statements to the public, and for this reason I have taken the liberty to address you on this subject. If you will make an investigation you will find there is enough coal loaded in boats now lying in Boston Harbor to take care of the requirements of that territory for some time to come, and additional stock can be rushed to this point on reasonably short notice.

Very respectfully yours,

JOHN H. JONES.

STANDARDS FOR FRUIT AND VEGETABLE HAMPERS AND BASKETS.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, I am sure the Senator from Arkansas does not want to make a harsh exception in my case, so I ask unanimous consent that the Senate proceed to the consideration of Senate bill 4399, to fix standards for hampers, round stave baskets, and splint baskets for fruits and vegetables, and for other purposes.

Mr. ROBINSON. I shall be compelled to object to the consideration of any other bills this evening.

The VICE PRESIDENT. There is objection.

TAXICAB RATES IN THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, I had expected to ask unanimous consent for the consideration of a joint resolution to-night, but because of the lateness of the hour and the temper of the Senate I shall not do it. I introduce the joint resolution and ask to have it referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

It is a joint resolution calling on the Public Utilities Commission to investigate the rates being charged in other cities by the owners and operators of taxicabs and public automobiles, to report to Congress their findings, and at the same time report to the District Commissioners, and the commissioners are directed to promulgate certain orders which will insure fair and reasonable rates on the part of taxicabs in the District of Columbia, and for the enforcement of the same.

The joint resolution (S. J. Res. 283) directing the Public Utilities Commission of the District of Columbia to investigate rates charged by taxicabs and automobiles for hire was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

THE MERCHANT MARINE.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 12817) to amend and supplement the merchant marine act, 1920, and for other purposes.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. President, there are two amendments, merely changing dates, which I would like to have acted on. The first amendment is on line 17, page 6, to change "1922" to "1923."

Mr. ROBINSON. What is the effect of the amendment?

Mr. JONES of Washington. It refers to the date of this act, if it should be passed. It is referred to as the act of 1922, but 1922 is past.

Mr. ROBINSON. It may have to be changed to "1924."

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. JONES of Washington. The next amendment is on page 8, line 3, to change "1922" to "1923."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I have here an address delivered by Mayor Curley, of Boston, Mass., on the shipping bill. There are two or three phrases in it which I thought Senators might not like, so I have cut those out. Outside of that, I would like to have the address printed in the RECORD in 8-point type.

Mr. HARRISON. Does not the Senator want to have it read?

Mr. JONES of Washington. I would be glad to have it read.

Mr. HARRISON. Would not the Senator like to have it read on Monday instead of this afternoon?

Mr. JONES of Washington. No.

There being no objection, the address was ordered to be printed in the RECORD in 8-point type, as follows:

SPEECH MADE BY MAYOR JAMES M. CURLEY BEFORE THE NEW ENGLAND TRAFFIC CLUB AT THE COPLEY PLAZA, BOSTON, FEBRUARY 13, 1923.

Gentlemen, it is of course a trite saying, and yet one that can not be too often repeated, that the transportation problems of the world are the same everywhere; and stripped of all their fine phrases are merely a question of distributing commodities and connecting communities, with speed, safety, and efficiency, to the end that commerce may flow with freedom and security, industry function profitably and uninterruptedly, work and wages be constant, agriculture prosperous, and the peoples of the earth contented and peaceful. Transportation is the link that binds the uttermost ends of the earth together, the most potent factor in the maintenance and growth of civilization, and which, by bringing men together to exchange the products of their industry and the children of their brain, fosters confidence and promotes fraternity.

In proportion as transportation is hampered on land or sea by the folly, stupidity, craft, or indifference of men, as visualized in the enactment of unwise laws and the failure to enact wise ones, the benefits it should yield are stifled and deferred. Every needless burden laid on transportation is written eventually in terms of sterility and futility in the life of this country and the daily experiences of its people.

With all its alleged defects the land transportation system of America—our continental railroad system—is admittedly the best in the world, but where the rails end on the shores of the continent and transportation on the seas begin the American people are at their weakest and worst.

It is of our ocean transportation, our merchant marine, as the essential and imperative supplement of our railroad system I wish to speak to-night, the vital importance of which to our real national life and prosperity is not fully understood even here on the margin of that ocean, out of which came the wealth that made Massachusetts great in industry and commerce, and amid whose toils and dangers were fashioned the character and courage that made the men who stamped their names on American history and carried the fame of the Commonwealth to the ends of the earth.

The American merchant marine—American ships, under the American flag, carrying American goods to alien markets and bringing home to us the commodities we need in American industry—is a national necessity and not a commercial luxury; it constitutes not only a second line of defense behind our Navy for the safeguarding of our national security and integrity, but it is the first line of protection for the maintenance of our foreign commerce which takes care of our industrial surplus and insures the constancy and prosperity of our home market.

The merchant marine—the ships—that carry a nation's commerce, dominates the markets it serves; the nation whose commerce is carried to alien markets in alien ships is at the mercy of the carrier, and by the sheer logic of that fact must sink commercially to a subordinate place.

The American merchant marine is the natural and national extension of the American railroad system; it should and must be fostered and protected by the American Government for the benefit of the Nation, since it serves intimately and vitally all the people of America. The people of the agricultural West have been misled by the clever and persistent propaganda maintained and disseminated by the alien shipping interests whose headquarters are in Washington, and have been insidiously taught that the merchant marine is merely a selfish concern of American shipowners. This alien shipping organization—rich, powerful, and sleepless—maintains a lobby in the National Capital, whose agents and spokesmen oppose every effort to foster the American merchant marine, who appear boldly and insolently in committee rooms and have been able to delude Senators and Congressmen into enlisting under foreign flags to destroy the commerce and ships of America.

It is time to rouse ourselves before America is reduced to a condition of commercial slavery by the combination of unscrupulous foreign shipping concerns. The agricultural interests of the West are seeking to remove the multitude of middlemen and parasites that stand between the farmer who raises the food of America and the workers who buy it and consume it; and yet he has been educated by foreign propagandists to oppose his own merchant marine and pay hundreds of millions of dollars every year to alien mercantile middlemen, who carry out of the country this money that should be kept at home to keep the wheels of industry turning and the American farmer's home market prosperous.

Treachery to American integrity, American prosperity, and American national interests did not become a lost art when Benedict Arnold took service in England's forces. It is still with us under other names and in new disguises.

In order to compete with the underpaid, cheaply conditioned, and heavily subsidized merchant marines of England, Japan, and other foreign countries and enable us to keep the American flag afloat on the seven seas, America must help the American merchant marine to meet their competitors by special laws and subsidies from the Treasury. Is there anything new or strange in an appropriation called a ship subsidy? There is not. We subsidize agriculture and education; we spend vast sums for irrigation in the arid West; we subsidize reclamation works all over the country; we impose protective tariff bills to protect industry and labor; and only yesterday we appropriated $49,000,000 to make our rivers and harbors safe for commerce and its fleets; and yet we have American Senators and Congressmen who oppose or hesitate to vote to keep alive and strong an American merchant marine to carry American commerce, market our surplus products, and keep busy and prosperous American industry and labor and maintain a profitable domestic market for American agriculturists, stock raisers, foresters, fishers, and miners.

Is there anyone who has the hardihood to say that the $49,000,000 of the river and harbor bill are to be spent for the safety and convenience only of the foreign ships that come to our waters and seek to destroy our merchant marine? Let him answer.

The maintenance and prosperity of the American merchant marine is not a party question; it is not a Democratic or Republican policy solely; it is a national, an American question, that concerns every vital interest of this great Republic that is of prime importance not only to Massachusetts and the States on the seaboard, but is of equal interest to all the Commonwealths that make up this United States.

It is for us to let our representatives in Washington understand that there must be no wavering, no dodging, no fence climbing on this great question and that they must make up their minds now whether they will stand resolutely and without equivocation for American interests and the American merchant marine or give their services to destroy those American utilities and go over to the flags of England, Japan, and other rivals.

They stand on the banks of the politican Rubicon. Across its waters lie American honor and interest; to hesitate to cross is to enlist themselves under alien flags and retire to dishonor and obscurity. They can not stand still; they must act.

ADJOURNMENT.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Pursuant to the order already made, I move that the Senate adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 5 o'clock and 50 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned, the adjournment being, under the order previously entered, until Monday, February 19, 1923, at 11 o'clock a. m.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

SATURDAY, February 17, 1923.

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. James Shera Montgomery, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Almighty God, our needs cry unto Thee; let Thy mercy and wisdom respond. Thy kingdom of love extends unto all men, and may we fear Thee less and serve Thee better. The Lord is sovereign and all things work together for good to them who love Thee. We are impressed with a solemn, yet wonderful, responsibility. In bearing it give understanding and poise to every phase of conduct and character. May our powers and privileges be held as sacred trusts for Thy glory, for the good of our country, and for the high interests of humanity. Bless all with a quiet heart in relation to the things that are and to the things that shall be hereafter. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

S. 2023, DEFINING THE CROP FAILURE, ETC.

Mr. TINCHER. Mr. Speaker, I call up the Senate Concurrent Resolution No. 40.

The SPEAKER. Will the gentleman from Minnesota give way? The Chair understands he has a conference report.

Mr. ANDERSON. I will yield for a moment.

The SPEAKER. Of course, the conference report has the right of way.

The gentleman from Kansas calls up the concurrent resolution, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That the action of the Speaker of the House of Representatives and of the President of the Senate in signing the enrolled bill (S. 2023) defining the crop failure in the production of wheat, rye, or oats by those who borrowed money from the Government of the United States for the purchase of wheat, rye, or oats for seed, and for other purposes, be rescinded and that the Secretary be authorized and directed to reenroll the bill with the following amendments:

On page 1, line 6, after the words "United States," insert "in the years 1918 and 1919."

Amend the title so as to read: "An act defining the crop failure in the production of wheat, rye, or oats by those who borrowed money from the Government of the United States in the years 1918 and 1919 for the purchase of wheat, rye, or oats for seed, and for other purposes."

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of this resolution?

Mr. ANDERSON. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I understand that this is for the purpose of making it clear that this does not apply to the loans of 1921 and 1922?

Mr. TINCHER. That is exactly right. They were made by different departments of the Government, handled in different departments of the Government.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The question was taken, and the concurrent resolution was agreed to.

Mr. BEGG. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that there is no quorum present.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will count. Evidently there is no quorum——

Mr. BEGG. I will withdraw the point for the time being—all right, go ahead.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Mr. Speaker, I move a call of the House.

A call of the House was ordered.

The Clerk called the roll, and the following Members failed to answer to their names:

The SPEAKER. Two hundred and eighty-four Members have answered to their names; a quorum is present.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, I move to dispense with further proceedings under the call.

The motion was agreed to.

REFERENCE OF A BILL.

Mr. McKENZIE. Mr. Speaker, the bill (H. R. 14306) introduced by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. WURZBACH] deals with legislation over which the Committee on Military Affairs has no jurisdiction under the rule. I ask, therefore, that the bill be referred to the proper committee.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will state the Chair thinks the question is debatable, but the Chair is not unwilling to have it referred. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

CONFERENCE REPORT—AGRICULTURAL APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. ANDERSON. Mr. Speaker, I call up the conference report on the bill making appropriations for the Department of Agriculture.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the conference report.

The conference report was read, as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the Senate numbered 33 to the bill (H. R. 13481) making appropriations for the Department of Agriculture for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1924, and for other purposes, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

Amendment numbered 33: That the Senate recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the House to the amendment of the Senate numbered 33 and agree to the same.

SYDNEY ANDERSON,
WALTER W. MAGEE,
EDWARD H. WASON,
J. P. BUCHANAN,
GORDON LEE,
Managers on the part of the House.
CHAS. L. MCNARY,
W. L. JONES,
LEE S. OVERMAN,
E. D. SMITH,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

STATEMENT OF THE MANAGERS ON THE PART OF THE HOUSE.

The managers on the part of the House at the conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on amendment No. 33 of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 13481) making appropriations for the Department of Agriculture for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1924, and for other purposes, submit the following written statement explaining the effect of the action agreed on by the conference committee and submitted in the accompanying conference report:

The Senate recedes from its disagreement to the amendment of House to Senate amendment No. 33, relating to the appropriation for forest roads and trails, and agrees to the provision adopted by the House on January 26, 1923, which provides an appropriation of $3,000,000, to be available until expended, and enables the Secretary of Agriculture to enter into contracts and incur obligations up to $6,500,000, as authorized by the Post Office appropriation act approved June 19, 1922, and further provides that appropriations heretofore and hereafter made shall be considered available for the purpose of discharging obligations created in any State or Territory.

SYDNEY ANDERSON,
WALTER W. MAGEE,
EDWARD H. WASON,
J. P. BUCHANAN,
GORDON LEE,
Managers on the part of the House.

Mr. ANDERSON. Mr. Speaker, this is the final conference report on the agricultural appropriation bill. It covers only one item which remained in disagreement after the consideration was recently had in the House and Senate. That is amendment No. 3, which related to appropriation for forest roads and trails. The Senate adopted an amendment appropriating $6,500,000 instead of $3,000,000 appropriated by the House. The House agreed to an amendment reducing the amount to $3,000,000 and providing that the Secretary of Agriculture should be authorized to make contracts for the total sum of $6,500,000 for the next fiscal year, and provided further that all sums heretofore appropriated should be available for payment upon any contract when payment upon that contract became due. The Senate conferees have agreed to agree to the House amendment. I move the previous question on the conference report.

The previous question was ordered.

The question was taken, and the conference report was agreed to.

REFERENCE OF A BILL.

Mr. KNUTSON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the bill H. R. 13492, which was referred to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, be rereferred to the Committee on Banking and Currency. I have here a letter from the chairman of the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce [Mr. WINSLOW], saying he has no objection to the bill being referred to the Committee on Banking and Currency, and his committee feels the bill properly belongs to that committee.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

FEDERAL FARM LOAN ACT.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Mr. Speaker, I submit a privileged report from the Committee on Rules.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Kansas submits a privileged report from the Committee on Rules, which the Clerk will report:

House Resolution 536 (Rept. 1629).

Resolved, That immediately upon the adoption of this resolution it shall be in order to move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of H. R. 14041, a bill to amend sections 3, 4, 9, 12, 15, 21, 22, and 25 of the act of Congress approved July 17, 1916, known as the Federal farm loan act; that there shall be three hours' general debate on said bill, one-half to be controlled by those in favor thereof and one-half by those opposed thereto; that at the conclusion of the general debate the bill shall be read for amendment under the five-minute rule. At the conclusion of the consideration of the bill for amendments the committee shall rise and report the bill back to the House with amendments, if any; the previous question shall be considered as ordered on the bill and all amendments thereto to final passage, without intervening motion except one motion to recommit.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Mr. Speaker, my attention has been called to the fact that the number of the bill has been wrongly stated; that the number of the bill is H. R. 14270.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, that correction will be made.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, we did not hear what it was.

Mr. JONES of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I desire to object.

The SPEAKER. A mistake in the number.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. I move to amend the rule by inserting "14270" instead of the number as given in the resolution.

Mr. JONES of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I make a point of order on the motion.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. That was the bill reported by the committee.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Yes; that was the bill reported by the committee, but I suggest that the gentleman had better ask unanimous consent.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will hear the gentleman from Texas as to its being germane.

Mr. JONES of Texas. I understood the rule was being presented now. This is not the time to offer an amendment to the rule.

The SPEAKER. Why not?

Mr. JONES of Texas. The rule was just being presented.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. The rule had been read.

Mr. BLANTON. I make the point of order that it is not proper, over an objection, to correct a rule that is brought in here by the Committee on Rules. They are presumed to bring in a correct rule when they bring one in.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman make a point of order on the proposed amendment?

Mr. BLANTON. Yes. My point of order is that it must be done by unanimous consent rather than by a motion.

The SPEAKER. The Chair overrules the point of order.

Mr. STAFFORD. This point of order?

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks there is a point of order that has not been suggested yet.

Mr. STAFFORD. I will not suggest that point of order, but I do not like the practice.

Mr. SANDERS of Indiana. Mr. Speaker, it has frequently been held that the other point of order must be made.

Mr. SNELL. The Speaker has ruled on it.

Mr. BLANTON. I make a point of order against the point of order that the Speaker has in his mind on this proposition. [Laughter.]

Mr. JONES of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that the Committee on Rules did not authorize the offering of this amendment at this time, and that the matter is only privileged by virtue of the action of the Committee on Rules.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks that it is not in order to amend a resolution naming one bill by naming another bill. The Chair thinks the same result would be accomplished by striking out the number entirely. Then it would be designated by title.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Then, Mr. Speaker, I move to strike out the number of the bill and designate it by the title given in the rule.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Kansas moves to strike out the number of the bill and designate it by the title in the rule. The question is on agreeing to that motion.

The question was taken, and the Speaker announced that the "ayes" seemed to have it.

Mr. BEGG. I ask for a division, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. A division is demanded.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 190, noes 17.

So the motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Kansas [Mr. CAMPBELL] is recognized.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Mr. Speaker, so much time having been wasted already on the rule, I will only briefly state that it brings before the House for consideration amendments to the Federal farm loan act that have been considered by the Committee on Banking and Currency and thought to be important for the more effective and beneficial operation of that act.

I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. CANTRILL].

Mr. McARTHUR. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield to me?

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. No; I yield to the gentleman from Kentucky.

Mr. CANTRILL. Mr. Speaker, I have been asked by many Members of the House to print in the RECORD a statement recently issued by Mr. James C. Stone, of Kentucky, the president of one of the largest and most successful farmers' cooperative associations in the United States. This statement gives a complete history, although it is very brief, of the Burley Tobacco Growers' Association, which has a membership of 77,000 members and this year will do a very successful business of almost $100,000,000. It has been very successful, and our president has recently summarized the activities of that organization. I have been asked by many Members of the House to print in the RECORD his recent statement. I ask, Mr. Speaker, the privilege of printing in the RECORD that statement, and I will also ask the privilege to extend my remarks on the bill now pending before the House.

Mr. Speaker, I am glad that this legislation is before the House, and I am always glad to raise my voice in behalf of any legislation which will be of service to the farmers of the United States.

The fact is now recognized by all that there can be no general prosperity in this Nation unless our farmers are prosperous. Any law passed by Congress which lays additional burdens on the farmers of our land retards the prosperity of our country, and any law which is of help to the farmers quickens all channels of trade and makes toward improvement in all lines of business.

I am glad to have had an opportunity to support the rule in committee making this legislation in order, and trust that the Congress will speedily enact the bill into law.

By proper legislation Congress can in great measure assist the farmers of our Nation and at the same time render a great service to all the people.

Agriculture in the United States is our basic industry, and nearly one-half of our population are directly interested in some branch of farming and live-stock raising. Under present distressing conditions surrounding the American farmer it is highly proper that the American Congress should enact some laws for the especial benefit of agriculture. I do not mean to say that this measure by any means provides all the relief necessary, but it is a little step in the right direction, and by all means let us accept it and ratify it with our votes.

There are other bills pending here which I sincerely hope will become laws during the life of this Congress, and I hope the committees of this House which have those measures in their keeping will soon report them, so we can vote upon them.

Since the World War closed the American farmer has been hit harder by declining prices of his products than any other business man.

The farmers of the South and Middle West have been subjected to cruel and heart-breaking declines in their products. Many of our farm crops during recent years have been sold for less than the cost of production, while at the same time taxes and living expenses have been increasing the burdens of the farmer. This process has almost doubled the mortgage indebtedness of the farmer during the past five years, and Congress must meet this great problem with its best thought and statesmanship or we will suffer a national calamity.

Were it not for the highest order of patriotism and splendid bravery in the face of heavy odds among the farmers of our land, we would to-day be in a deplorable condition. The American farmer never surrenders, but is battling on, hoping always that his Government will give him a square deal and give him a chance to stand up as a free citizen and not be laid prostrate as a bankrupt despite his hard labor and heavy investment. I am glad that the Congress of the United States is finally learning the lesson, which many of us have preached for many years, that the farmers' welfare means the welfare of the Government itself.

The farmer can not live when he receives only 37 per cent of the sale price of his products; and this is the condition in this Nation to-day.

Our banking system has recently been arranged to meet the needs of manufacture and business, and the farmer has a right to demand that his banking system be arranged to meet his needs. The farmer of necessity must have longer terms of credit than the business man or manufacturer and he is entitled to the same rate of interest. Any Government aid which is given to the manufacturer should also be extended the farmer. The farmer asks no special privilege, but he has a perfect right to demand that he be equalized with other lines of business.

Any legislation which brings about this result should be adopted by the Congress. I would not be understood as saying that the farmer must rely entirely on his Government. On the contrary, the farmer must realize that in the main he controls his own destiny. Unless the American farmer makes the effort to help himself his case is hopeless.

However, the Nation is fortunate in that a way has been found whereby the farmer can help himself, and that is by following the sound business plans which have been developed by the Farmers' Cooperative Association which in recent years have been coming into existence in different parts of the country.

For nearly 20 years I have been active in urging the farmers of the State of Kentucky to organize along cooperative lines in selling their chief cash crop—the tobacco crop. Many years ago I had the honor of being State president of an organization which taught the cooperative plan of selling farm produce. I have seen the idea grow until to-day it is considered safe and sound by the leading bankers and statesmen of our land. I am proud of the fact that I started at the beginning and have kept the faith until the plan has proven successful beyond our fondest hopes.

When the farmers of our Nation learn to organize and stand together in a cooperative selling plan and use the modern business methods in the conduct of their business, then their success is assured and hard times will cease to knock at the door of every farmhouse in the land.

It has been said a million times that the farmer could not be organized, but in Kentucky and elsewhere this statement has been disproved. In Kentucky we have had for several years one of the most successful cooperative farmers' organizations in the history of the world, and I am glad that I had the opportunity to help put it in existence. In fact, I believe the record will show that I made the first call to the farmers of my State to organize, and I am very happy to say that our plans have worked out satisfactorily to our large and prosperous membership. One of the organizations of which I am a member, and only farmers can be members, has a membership of 77,000 members, and this year will do a business of about $70,000,000. It is the largest business concern in our State. The organization is thoroughly representative and is in absolute control of the farmers themselves. We have splendid and successful men at the head of our business, and peace and prosperity is returning to the old Kentucky home. I will always look back with pleasure to the time and work I gave in assisting to building up this great farmers' organization.

The farmers of Kentucky were fortunate in having the press of the State almost solidly behind them in their effort to organize. Too much praise can not be given to the newspapers of our State and to hundreds of men and women who gave their time and means to building up our cooperative organization. Judge R. W. Bingham, owner of the Courier-Journal and the Louisville Times, gave his full personal support and financial credit and the powerful aid of his newspapers to perfecting the two great cooperative tobacco organizations in Kentucky.

Almost without exception the editors of our papers gave their loyal and splendid support, and the bankers of our Commonwealth stood with us until our organization was completely successful.

I have been asked by several Members of the House to give a history of this organization, so that it may go into the RECORD as a guide for others who wish to build up similar plans in their States. The president of our organization, Mr. James C. Stone, Lexington, Ky., recently reviewed the business affairs of our cooperative association for the last two years, and I will print in the RECORD his statement. Mr. Stone has the full confidence of the people of our State, and his statements can be accepted at their full value. I print his statement with the hope that farmers in other States will follow the example of the Kentucky farmer and join with us in our prosperity:

FIRST OFFICIAL STATEMENT MADE BY PRESIDENT STONE SHOWS MILLIONS BROUGHT INTO BURLEY DISTRICT THROUGH ORGANIZATION OF COOPERATIVE ASSOCIATION.

LEXINGTON, KY., January 27.—President and General Manager James C. Stone, of the Burley Tobacco Growers' Cooperative Association, in a statement given to the press to-day reviews conditions in the tobacco business for the past two years, says the 1921 crop has brought an average of $21.98 a hundred, and that warehousing expenses on this has been 89 cents a hundred, and that the organization of the Burley Tobacco Growers' Cooperative Association has been the means of bringing into the burley district from $45,000,000 to $50,000,000 more than would have been paid the growers but for the organization of the association.

Mr. Stone urges the growers to recall the conditions existing in the tobacco district two years ago, when the growers were on the verge of violence because of the low price at which their product sold and when they had to accept less than half what it cost them to raise the crop of 1920.

Analyzing the review of the two years Mr. Stone says that the growers received $11,400,000 more for the crop of 1921 than for that of 1920, in spite of the fact that it was 40,000,000 pounds below the 1920 production. He estimates the 1922 crop at 240,000,000 pounds and the price average as 31 cents a pound and says this will bring into the Burley district $36,600,000 more than was paid for the 1921 crop.

Besides the 89 cents a hundred which it actually cost to handle the 1921 crop, Mr. Stone says that an additional expenditure of 64 cents a hundred was made for interest, insurance on tobacco, and for the purchase of real estate, the latter, of course, being an investment and not an expense.

In closing his statement Mr. Stone urges all the members of the association to remember that the association belongs to them, and that if they will continue to give it their loyal support, the results which will be obtained in the next five years, not only for the grower member himself but for the "whole business fabric of the entire territory, will be so outstanding and beneficial to everyone that they will be proud to say that they have been a part of an association which has produced such results."

Mr. Stone's statement, which is the first official information in regard to the exact figures on the 1921 crop, as well as the probable average of the 1922 crop, follows:

"For the benefit of our members, as well as the other business interests throughout the Burley territory, I want to call their attention as strongly as I can to the conditions that prevailed just two years ago this month.

"It is not difficult for anyone to recall the unrest and dissatisfaction that prevailed at that time, which in practically all the territory bordered on violence. What was the cause of this? Has anyone forgotton the cause of this condition? It was because the grower of tobacco was not satisfied with the price that his 1920 crop was selling for on the auction markets.

"The farmer owed the merchant, the bank, the doctor, and the lawyer, and his crop of tobacco sold for not one-half of what it cost him to produce it.

"From this distressing condition the leaders in the Burley territory got together in order to work out a plan of relief. Not only to relieve the condition at the time but to prevent its recurrence, if possible.

"From this effort developed the Burley Tobacco Growers' Cooperative Association, which is nothing more than over 80 per cent of the tobacco growers in the Burley district having agreed among themselves to organize and operate their business on an intelligent business basis, and through their own representatives to grade their tobacco and sell it for a price that will give them a fair return on their invested capital and labor.

"The association has now been in operation about one year, and the result of the operation is as follows:

"On December 15, 1922, in order to provide the members of the association a convenient place to deliver their tobacco, we entered into a contract with 124 loose-leaf warehouses throughout the territory to lease these properties for six months at a rental of 8 per cent, based on a fair value of the property, each owner of the property having the right to accept one of three plans of sale to subsidiary corporations of the association, the sales to be consummated and the price of the property to be agreed upon before the 15th of June, 1922. This gave the association immediate possession of the receiving plants.

"In the month of January, 1922, the legislature passed what is known as the Bingham cooperative marketing act. We immediately reincorporated the association under this act in Kentucky. We adopted a uniform system of grading for Burley tobacco, employed 94 graders and instructed these graders as to each grade, and employed managers, clerks, weighmen, and the necessary help for the 94 receiving plants, and actually began to receive tobacco on January 26, 1922.

"We borrowed a sufficient amount of money from the local banks and the larger banks in Louisville, Cincinnati, and Lexington to make an initial advance to the grower upon the delivery of his tobacco of an average of about 8 cents per pound.

"The total number of pounds received by the association in 1922 was approximately 120,000,000 pounds, and of this amount a little over 60,000,000 pounds was sold in winter order, and the balance was redried and sold in October and December, 1922.

"From the proceeds of the sales in winter order we paid back all the money we had borrowed from the banks, and had $3,500,000 left in cash. By April, 1922, it was deemed absolutely necessary that the association make another distribution to the members, as transplanting time was almost at hand, and the grower needed additional money with which to transplant and grow his 1922 crop. In order to make this distribution in time to be of help to the grower, it had to be paid to him as early in May as possible, and it was decided to give each man in this second distribution the same amount that was paid to him in his initial advance.

"To create a fund with which to meet this payment the cash on hand from the proceeds of the sales was used and the balance borrowed on warehouse receipts on redried tobacco from the War Finance Corporation and the Louisville and Lexington banks.

"In October, 1922, we sold 54,000,000 pounds of redried tobacco; 25,000,000 pounds of this tobacco had to be sampled, and the sampling and delivery of it was done in about 40 days.

"On December 4 the balance of the holdings of the association, amounting to approximately 3,100,000 pounds, were sold. These tobaccos were stored in 30 different locations, and aside from the 25,000 hogsheads which had to be sampled it all had to be weighed, shipped, and billed, and the money collected before calculations could be commenced to determine just what each grower was entitled to out of the proceeds.

"When this sale of redried tobacco was made the office force of the association began to work night and day to try to get the final distribution of the 1921 crop in the hands of the members before Christmas, if possible. Owing to the immense amount of work in calculating each grade delivered by each member of the association, it soon developed that it would be impossible to get these checks out by that time. We are now working 18 hours a day with a large force to get these checks out by February 1, and if the work continues to progress as it is now this will be done.

"The following is a résumé of what has been accomplished in the first year's operations:

"More than 80 per cent of the tobacco growers of Kentucky, Indiana, Ohio, West Virginia, and Tennessee have organized an association for the purpose of eliminating the old dumping system of selling their tobacco and to handle their own business in a more intelligent and businesslike way. Receiving plants have been created, an organization built, and 120,000,000 pounds of tobacco received, and all sold within the first year's operation. The average price received for the 120,000,000 pounds received and sold is $21.98 per 100 pounds, which is an average of $9.98 more than the growers received on an average for their 1920 crop—the 1920 crop being recognized by tobacco men as a better crop in quality than the 1921 crop was.

"It may be well to analyze this in order to show what it means to the growers over the territory in dollars and cents.

"The 1920 crop amounted to approximately 220,000,000 pounds, and sold for an average of 12 cents, bringing a total amount of $26,400,000. The 1921 crop, of which the association handled its percentage, amounted to approximately 180,000,000 pounds, and sold for an average, both in the association and out, of around 21 cents, and brought a total of $37,800,000. The 1922 crop, estimated at approximately 240,000,000 pounds, at 31 cents per pound, will bring a total of $74,000,000. The increase in dollars of the 1921 crop, a commoner crop than the 1920 crop and much smaller in pounds, over what the 1920 crop brought is approximately $11,400,000. The increase in dollars of the 1922 crop over the 1921 is $36,600,000, showing in the first two years' operation of the association that there will be between $45,000,000 and $50,000,000 more money distributed among the growers in the Burley section than would have been distributed if the association had not been organized. These are facts that no man can successfully contradict.

"The actual expense incurred by the association in the physical handling of the 1921 crop was 89 cents per 100 pounds, and the deductions for interest, insurance on tobacco, and for the purchase of real property was 64 cents per 100 pounds, the part used for the purchase of property being an investment and not an expense.

"On the 11th of December we began to receive the 1922 crop. Since that time we have sold 120,000,000 to 125,000,000 pounds of the 1922 crop, which is about two-thirds of the amount of tobacco which we expect to receive.

"The delivery of this tobacco is now being made as fast as received, and the prospects are good at this time for the sale of the balance of the association's tobaccos in winter order.

"The association has developed, as everyone predicted, into the largest organization in this part of the country. We realize that this organization is not yet perfect, but the officers and directors are working day and night to develop it into a smooth-running machine, the guiding light being honesty, efficiency, and justice.

"If the members will only realize that the association belongs to them, is their business, and a business that is of such vital importance to them financially and in every other way, and will continue to give it their loyal support and encouragement, the results which will be obtained in the next five years, not only for the grower member himself but for the whole business fabric of the entire territory, will be so outstanding and beneficial to everyone that they will be proud to say they have been a part of an association which has produced these results."

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Kentucky asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD for the purpose indicated. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. CANTRILL. Mr. Speaker, I yield back the balance of my time.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Mr. Speaker, I ask for a vote on the resolution.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

The resolution was agreed to.

Mr. McFADDEN. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of a bill to amend sections 3, 4, 9, 12, 15, 21, 22, and 25 of the act of Congress approved July 17, 1916, known as the Federal farm loan act.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania moves that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union to consider a bill to amend sections 3, 4, 9, 12, 15, 21, 22, and 25 of the Federal farm loan act. The question is on agreeing to that motion.

Mr. WINGO. Before that is done, Mr. Speaker, can we not agree upon the question as to who will control that time? The gentleman understands my position. As the bill is reported, I am opposed to it. I hope an amendment will be adopted that will enable me to support it. But without that amendment I am against the bill.

Mr. McFADDEN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that three hours' time be divided equally between the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. WINGO] and myself.

Mr. YOUNG. There are some Members on this side opposed to this bill. I would like to know how they can get time.

Mr. McFADDEN. It will be perfectly agreeable to me. If the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. WINGO] can handle on his side those who are opposed to the bill, I shall be glad to yield on this side to those who are opposed to the bill.

Mr. WINGO. Personally I do not care much about controlling the time; but if this arrangement is made, my intention is to try to take care of both sides on this side of the aisle and let the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. McFADDEN] take care of both sides on his side of the aisle. I think that will expedite consideration of the bill.

Mr. McFADDEN. That is agreeable to me, Mr. Speaker. Therefore I ask unanimous consent that the time be divided equally between the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. WINGO] and myself.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman asks unanimous consent that the time be equally divided, the gentleman from Pennsylvania to control one-half the time and the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. WINGO] to control one-half the time. Is there objection?

Mr. LANHAM. Is that with the understanding that half the time on each side will be allotted to those who are opposed to the bill?

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks that ought to be so.

Mr. WINGO. Mr. Speaker, here is the difficulty: Some gentleman do not know just exactly what particular point they will be opposed to. I think I agree with 90 per cent of the gentlemen who if we had a roll call now would vote against the bill; but I think it is possible to cure the bill so as to vote for it. If any other genteman wants to take the responsibility of controlling the time on this side, he is perfectly welcome to it and I shall be glad to be relieved of the responsibility.

Mr. JONES of Texas. Mr. Speaker, further reserving the right to object, I do not think anyone wants particularly to control the time, but we would like to have an understanding that if these gentlemen control the time, one-half of the time on each side shall be yielded to those who are opposed to the bill. There are a number on this side who are opposed to it, and I understand there are a number on the other side who are opposed to the bill.

Mr. COCKRAN. Mr. Speaker, may I suggest that the time be controlled by the Chair, and that the Chair recognize gentlemen on one side or the other according to his best judgment.

Mr. WINGO. Here is the difficulty. I will be frank with the gentleman. I have made some promises of time, but of course I intend to try to be fair to gentlemen on my side of the House and to give them a fair division of time. I intend to do it the very best I can, but I do not propose to be held up in advance by a promise to give any man time. If he can not trust me to treat him fairly, let him object.

Mr. LANHAM. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WINGO. I yield to the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. LANHAM. The rule itself that we have adopted divides the time equally between those in favor of the bill and those opposed to it. It would not be a matter of the gentleman's courtesy. It would be a matter of the action of the House.

Mr. WINGO. The gentleman does not understand me. I intend to be entirely fair, and to conform to the provisions of the rule.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Mr. Speaker, I demand the regular order.

Mr. COCKRAN. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Kansas demands the regular order. The Chair under those circumstances can not hear any more suggestions.

Mr. COCKRAN. Can the Chair answer a parliamentary inquiry?

The SPEAKER. Certainly.

Mr. COCKRAN. Will an objection throw the control of the time into the hands of the Chair?

The SPEAKER. It will.

Mr. COCKRAN. Then I object.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York objects. The question is on the motion to go into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill.

The question being taken, the motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill (H. R. 14270) to amend sections 3, 4, 9, 12, 15, 21, 22, and 25 of the act of Congress approved July 17, 1916, known as the Federal farm loan act, with Mr. MCARTHUR in the chair.

Mr. McFADDEN. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to dispense with the first reading of the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania asks unanimous consent to dispense with the first reading of the bill. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania is recognized for one hour.

Mr. McFADDEN. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. McFADDEN. I understood that the rule provided for three hours' debate. I understood the Chair to say that I was recognized for one hour.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman has one hour.

Mr. WINGO. I thought the rule provided for three hours.

The CHAIRMAN. The rule provides for three hours, to be equally divided; but in the absence of any agreement as to who is to control the time, the Chair recognized the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MCFADDEN] for one hour.

Mr. McFADDEN. Mr. Chairman, this bill provides for important amendments to the Federal farm loan act. It amends in certain particulars some of the vital sections of that act. It amends sections 3, 4, 9, 12, 15, 21, 22, and 25.

In the first place, I am sure you will recall that during the war emergency the United States Treasury was authorized to purchase farm-loan bonds to help out the farm-loan system so that they could come somewhere near meeting the demands for loans from the agricultural sections. When that amendment was enacted a provision was also placed in the law that so long as the Treasury retained any of the bonds so purchased the temporary organization of the Federal farm-loan system should continue, so that under this amendment the Treasury Department would continue the directors who were to handle the affairs of the 12 banks. This bill corrects that situation and provides for an immediate permanent organization which will keep the system, we hope, out of politics or the control of selfish or rival interests, and confer cooperative management between the Government and the stockholders. This bill provides for a definite, permanent organization method by which the directors shall be elected. It gives due consideration to the farm-loan association or borrowers by permitting them to elect a certain number of directors. It also provides that the Federal Farm Loan Board shall appoint certain members. It also provides that the borrowers' association shall submit a list from which the odd member of the board shall be chosen and that he shall be chairman. It provides that at least one member shall be a dirt farmer, so the control of the organization is placed where it properly should be placed.

Now, in addition to that it provides—I do not want to take up too much time of the House because a number of men want to speak upon different phases of the bill—it provides also for agents for the purpose of closing loans in those sections of the country which have not had proper service through the farm loan associations. It has been made known to the Farm Loan Board that certain sections have not been properly served, and so it is given the right to appoint agents to act in closing the loans. That matter is safeguarded by providing for a deposit of the 5 per cent stock for security for the payment of the loan that is now provided under the association plan. It is not my understanding nor the understanding of the committee that that destroys the association. My understanding is that the control, notwithstanding the fact that many people fear and claim that the association will be destroyed under this plan, will be continued, and the new agency plan can be made workable for the relief of the farmers where they have not been properly served.

Mr. BARKLEY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McFADDEN. I will.

Mr. BARKLEY. We are all interested in the farm-loan legislation. In view of the short time between now and the adjournment of Congress, I am wondering why the Committee on Banking and Currency has not taken action on a measure passed by the Senate, so that it might be considered here, and with the hope of obtaining legislation, instead of bringing in an independent bill that will have to pass the Senate.

Mr. McFADDEN. I will say that the bill under consideration was in the committee and was being considered by the committee before the Senate had taken any action. The Senate has only recently passed two rural credit bills, and the committee has been diligently considering the subject of rural-credit legislation. The committee has been having hearings right along and working as rapidly as possible on the so-called Capper bill, and we hope to reach a definite conclusion in the early part of next week. I think the gentleman from Kentucky will be satisfied with the activities of the committee.

Mr. BARKLEY. I trust that Congress will not adjourn until some legislation is enacted. I think it would have been better to have passed the bill that has already passed the Senate than to pass a measure that has to go to the Senate.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McFADDEN. Yes.

Mr. BANKHEAD. What is the attitude of the well-recognized farm organizations throughout the country as to this bill?

Mr. McFADDEN. Many of the organizations have been before us, and there is a divided opinion. There is some opposition to this measure from farm organizations, but I think the greater portion of the farm organizations, the Federal Farm Loan Board, and, I understand, the Treasury Department are in favor of the bill. I know that there has been a great deal of propaganda about it. There is a great deal of misunderstanding about the bill in that regard, and I might call attention to the fact that the most of the opposition was to the bill as originally introduced. It has been amended in some very important particulars, and I believe the greater portion of the farm organizations, if they could study the bill as it is to-day, would not have the same criticism to make as has been meted out in the past.

Mr. BANKHEAD. We all received this morning a letter from Mr. Lyman, the secretary of the national board of farmers' organizations, and his objection to the bill seems to be as to the new method of electing directors of the Federal land banks. Will the gentleman explain the necessity for this change of the law?

Mr. McFADDEN. I will say in that connection that that subject was given very careful consideration by the committee and the Federal Farm Loan Board. We believe that we have worked out an equal representation on the boards in this bill, and that it will prove so in its operation.

Mr. WATSON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McFADDEN. Yes.

Mr. WATSON. I notice that you increase the loans from $10,000 to $16,000.

Mr. McFADDEN. There is such a provision.

Mr. WATSON. What were the conditions that gave the committee the thought to increase the loans to that amount?

Mr. McFADDEN. I will say to the gentleman that that is the result of the demand of the agricultural sections of the country for an increased size of the loan. It has been pointed out to the committee that in many of the central western States the farms are larger and the price of real estate is higher, and that it is necessary in order to take care of the needs of that large class of farmers residing in that section and farming larger areas than are usually farmed, say, in Pennsylvania, that the size of the loan should be increased.

Mr. WATSON. Is the increase founded upon the assessed value for taxation, or upon the census report?

Mr. McFADDEN. There is no change in the method of valuing the farms under this bill.

Mr. WATSON. I know, but the gentleman states that values have increased. Do you obtain the increased value from assessment for taxation or from the census report?

Mr. McFADDEN. In some of these central western States the value of land has increased to such an extent that the Federal Farm Loan Board has to put a maximum limit upon the amount that they will loan on acreage, regardless of the value of those farm lands. In the State of Iowa the rule is not to loan in excess of $100 per acre, while the value of the land might be $400 or $500 per acre.

The board felt that the system should be safeguarded in that particular. Reverting again to this increase of the loan from $10,000 to $16,000, and under certain conditions the bill provides that it shall be increased to $25,000, but, of course, those must be unusual conditions and must have the approval of the Federal Farm Loan Board. There was some difference of opinion in the committee in regard to this increase of the loan limit on the theory that the money market for this class of securities might by the sale of a vast amount of these bonds be somewhat limited, but as I understand, and I think many Members of the House so understand, in the farm loan act the original idea was for the relief of the poor farmer, to do away with tenant farming, and that it was the duty of Congress to help the little fellow more than to help the wealthy farmer. Because of that idea still predominating, many members of the committee have felt that it might work a hardship on the little farmer by absorbing all of the available money if the big loans were granted.

Mr. McKENZIE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McFADDEN. Yes.

Mr. McKENZIE. Right on that point, having in mind the State of Illinois and particularly the district in which I live, I favor the increase in the amount of the loan, and in reply to the point raised by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. McFADDEN] that it was intended to help out the little farmer, in my judgment, if we can take care of the man who needs $16,000, or even $25,000, on a valuable farm, and can relieve financial interests of the country to that extent and leave that amount of capital liquid in the local banks to be loaned to the little farmer to put a load of cattle on his farm during the summer time, we will have accomplished a great deal.

Mr. FIELDS. Mr. Chairman, if the gentleman will yield, I would like him to go on with his explanation in regard to the local cooperative borrowing associations. When the first bill was reported or introduced there was a great deal of complaint that that bill would destroy the local cooperative borrowing associations. I understood the gentleman to say that this bill would correct that and I would like to have him explain why.

Mr. McFADDEN. Mr. Chairman, as I said previously, there is no thought in the mind of the chairman, and I think that applies to many members of the committee, to do anything to injure the associations. I do not believe this bill will. If the gentleman refers to the destruction of associations, having in mind the provisions for the election of directors, I will say to him that I do not believe it will destroy the associations. As a matter of fact the very great local interest in associations is greatly relieved the moment that a farmer gets a loan. When he gets his loan closed his interest in the local association is practically nil from that time on, because he has financed himself over a long period of time, and in the manner we have provided for the selection of these directors we believe we have provided for sufficient representation from the borrowers or the associations, and that they will be protected in the representation on the boards as well as they are at the present time being protected. Other gentlemen who are to speak are going to cover that point a little more in particular and I think the gentleman will be entirely satisfied with the explanations given later on.

Mr. BURTNESS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McFADDEN. Yes.

Mr. BURTNESS. What incentive will there be for the formation of new farm-loan associations if we adopt the provision in the bill for the appointment of individuals who can deal with the new borrower in the future just as well as the association can?

Mr. McFADDEN. My understanding in regard to that question, and we have been assured by the Federal Farm Loan Board to that effect, is that agencies would only be established in those localities that were not being served by associations and I believe the same inducements of associations in the way of borrowers getting together will exist as exists at this time. It may be to the advantage of the farmer to apply to an agency that has been appointed if there is one, if there is no local association to which he can apply.

Mr. BURTNESS. The main inducement for the farmer getting into an association now is the fact that he needs the money, he wants to make a loan, and that is about the only way in which he can get the loan. If there is an agency appointed, and he can deal direct with that agency, he may not want to assume the responsibility of becoming in part at least liable for the loans of the other members of the association. Would he not then naturally simply go to the agent and attempt to get a loan from him rather than to join the association?

Mr. McFADDEN. I think the gentleman is putting up a man of straw. He is anticipating what a farmer may do. My experience with the farmer is that when he wants his money he wants it, and if he can not get it through the organization or association, and there is an agency available, he will go to it. What we are trying to do is to make this system available with the least possible trouble to the farmers of the country, so that their interests can be taken care of.

Mr. BEGG. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McFADDEN. Yes.

Mr. BEGG. It is supposed that there is a double liability back of every one of these bonds issued on mortgage, and the mortgage is supposed to represent 45 or 50 per cent of the value of the land. Is not that right?

Mr. McFADDEN. I would not say a double liability in the sense that the gentleman has pointed out. Every borrower is required——

Mr. BEGG. I do not mean from the borrower, I mean the thing back of the bond that the buying public gets hold of. There is supposed to be a double security back of that bond, is there not?

Mr. McFADDEN. Well, if the gentleman will let me explain.

Mr. BEGG. I beg the gentleman's pardon, I thought he did not get the question.

Mr. McFADDEN. The plan of the system is that the farmer borrows from the system on a mortgage. In order to get loans he must subscribe to 5 per cent of the amount of the loan from the farm loan system, of its stock, and the Federal land bank holds that stock. My understanding is that there is a double liability of that stock in case the loan is not paid.

Mr. BEGG. Where is the double liability? That is the thing I wanted pointed out.

Mr. McFADDEN. On the stock which the man deposits with the Federal farm loan system under the present plan. Now the Federal land banks—there are 12 of them—get together and issue bonds. This bill strengthens in that particular the liability of the 12 banks, the guaranty upon all of the bonds issued.

Mr. BEGG. Well, I do not want to consume unnecessarily the gentleman's time myself——

Mr. McFADDEN. I think the gentleman before the debate is concluded will have a clear answer, better, perhaps, than I have been able to give at this time. There are plain provisions for the retention of the stock subscription when the loan is acquired through an agency, just the same as the association plan. Mr. Chairman, how much time have I used?

The CHAIRMAN. Eighteen minutes.

Mr. McFADDEN. At the request of W. W. Flannagan, former secretary of the Farm Loan Board, I insert in the RECORD his letter to me under date of February 16, with a statement of a part of the minutes of the Farm Loan Board and a letter from the farm loan commissioner under date of June 30, 1920.

I reserve the remainder of my time.

The letter is as follows:

FLORENCE COURTS, February 16, 1923.

Hon. LOUIS T. McFADDEN,
Chairman House Banking and Currency Committee.

DEAR MR. McFADDEN: I have seen to-day for the first time the official copy of the hearings by your committee on the Strong bill (H. R. 13125).

On page 270 of said hearings there is a statement made by the farm loan commissioner (Judge Charles E. Lobdell), which, to say the least, is uncalled for and which creates a false impression.

I am asking you in fairness to correct this statement in whatever manner your own sense of justice may dictate, with the knowledge you had of the facts of the case at the time and which this communication now gives you.

The objectionable statement in question is to the effect that the "activities" of Mr. Charles A. Lyman, the secretary of the National Board of Farm Organizations, and myself in opposition to the passage of the Strong bill is due to the severance of my official connection with the Farm Loan Board, which Judge Lobdell terms a "dismissal," and his refusal to "reinstate" me under threats from Mr. Lyman that the influence of his organization would be turned against the Farm Loan Board, as if Mr. Lyman and I are not acting in good faith in our opposition to said bill, but by reason of "hostility" created by my so-called "dismissal."

These are the facts:

1. At the time Mr. Lyman had the interview to which Judge Lobdell refers I had no knowledge thereof, not even an acquaintance with Mr. Lyman; nor did I know of the existence of any such organization as "the National Board of Farm Organizations."

2. With reference to my "dismissal," the Farm Loan Board furnished me at the time of my resignation as secretary thereof an official copy under seal of an extract from the minutes, which is appended hereto.

Yours sincerely, W. W. FLANNAGAN.

The following is an extract from the minutes of the Federal Farm Loan Board of a meeting held July 9, 1920:

FEDERAL FARM LOAN BUREAU,
TREASURY DEPARTMENT,
July 9, 1920.

Resolved, That the resignation of W. W. Flannagan as secretary of the Farm Loan Board, this day filed, be accepted effective August 7, 1920, and that the order of the board made June 2, vacating certain positions, including that of secretary, be modified to conform to this resolution:

That said letter of resignation and the commissioner's reply thereto be spread upon the minutes and made a part of the records; that a certified copy thereof be furnished to Mr. Flannagan, and that copies be mailed to the several land banks.

JUNE 30, 1920.

FEDERAL FARM LOAN BOARD,
Washington, D. C.

GENTLEMEN: Referring to your resolution of June 2, no one can regret more than I do that the suspension of business of the Farm Loan Bureau caused by the delay of the Supreme Court in rendering a decision as to the constitutionality of the farm loan act has in your opinion produced the necessity for economy in the administration to the extent that the salary paid to the secretary of your board must be discontinued.

I have been connected with the rural-credit system from its embryonic state and with great pride have seen it develop into the farm loan act and its benefits already reaped to an immeasureable extent by the agricultural interests of the country under your administration, with a foundation laid for even yet more permanent and increasing benefits.

To sever my connection is breaking my hearstrings, but I appreciate you have a great public duty to perform and that my personal feelings must not stand in the way of its performance nor embarrass you in the discharge thereof. I therefore tender my resignation as secretary of the Farm Loan Board, to take effect at any day named by you.

I beg to thank each of you personally for the kindly consideration you have always extended to me, and to assure you that it will always be my endeavor and pleasure to further the work in which I have been privileged to join with you.

Yours sincerely,

W. W. FLANNAGAN.

JUNE 30, 1920.

Mr. W. W. FLANNAGAN,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR MR. FLANNAGAN: I beg to assure you that each member of the Farm Loan Board fully appreciates, and, so far as they are personal, fully reciprocates the fine sentiment expressed in your letter of this date.

Upon the organization of the Farm Loan Board your familiarity with the farm loan act, and the active interest you had taken in formulating it, suggested the practical wisdom of availing ourselves of your services in the organization of the system. The board accordingly created the position of secretary and tendered the same to you. You accepted with fine spirit, although it was not the recognition you had been led to expect, and might properly have received, and entered upon the duties of that office with zeal. You became at once not only secretary but a valued counselor to the board on the details of the law, and I am sure each of the then members of the board would concur in the acknowledgement, which I am glad to make, of special obligation for that service. In addition, your high sense of honor, genuineness of character, and devotion to duty have won for you the unqualified personal esteem of each of us.

The work of organization, you then so willingly undertook, is in the judgment of the board substantially finished and the services of a secretary are not at this time necessary to the conduct of the business of the board. Your task in this connection seems finished, but the services you have rendered the system, and through it the agricultural interests of the country, and thereby the whole country, will permanently endure to your credit. We are sure your busy mind will find still further constructive work to do which will be done, as has your work with the farm-loan system, not for compensation but for the sake of doing.

We are glad to be assured of your continued cooperation and friendly interest, and shall always be glad of counsel and suggestions from you, and please be assured that you have always our high personal esteem and genuine personal friendship.

Very sincerely yours,

CHARLES E. LOBDELL,
Farm Loan Commissioner.

I, Charles E. Lobdell, farm loan commissioner, do hereby certify that the foregoing is a correct transcript from the minutes of the Federal Farm Loan Board, and in testimony thereof I have affixed my signature as farm loan commissioner and caused the official seal of said board to be attached hereto, the same being attested by the signature of the assistant secretary of said board this 9th day of July, 1920.

CHAS. E. LOBDELL,
Farm Loan Commissioner.

Attest:

JAMES B. MORMAN,
Assistant Secretary.

Mr. WINGO. Mr. Chairman, I will yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. GOLDSBOROUGH].

Mr. JONES of Texas. Mr. Chairman, in reference to the control of the time, of course the rule requires half to be yielded to those opposed to the bill. I understood Mr. WINGO, in reference to being opposed to the bill, wanted it understood he was opposed to the bill.

Mr. WINGO. I made my statement to the House as to my position. I tried to reach an agreement by which I could control an hour and a half for the Democratic side. But that was objected to, so that as a result the Republicans will have two hours and I will control only one. I have yielded 10 minutes to the gentleman from Maryland.

Mr. JONES of Texas. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. JONES of Texas. I think I have a right to state it has been told me——

Mr. WINGO. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that a parliamentary inquiry can not interrupt the gentleman who has the floor.

Mr. JONES of Texas. I raise the point of order and propound a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. JONES of Texas. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Arkansas made a statement that he was opposed, unless an amendment was adopted. I understand the committee agreed to adopt that amendment, and there is no opposition to the amendment, and I do not believe the gentleman has the right to control the time by simply going under the guise of being opposed to the bill.

Mr. WINGO. I am not going under any guise, and the gentleman can not make any such statement.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. Chairman, I demand the regular order.

The CHAIRMAN. The regular order is demanded. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Maryland for 10 minutes.

Mr. GOLDSBOROUGH. Gentlemen of the committee, I regret because of the limited time I shall have to hurry, and it will be necessary for me——

Mr. JONES of Texas. Mr. Chairman——

The CHAIRMAN. For what purpose does the gentleman rise?

Mr. JONES of Texas. May I make a suggestion?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Maryland yield?

Mr. GOLDSBOROUGH. I will yield.

Mr. JONES of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I do not know in just what form my language may have been couched awhile ago, but I wish to make a statement——

Mr. STEAGALL. Mr. Chairman, I have no objection to the gentleman making a statement, but I suggest in all fairness it should not be taken out of the time of the gentleman who has the floor. This is a matter that should stand by itself.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman has yielded to the gentleman to make a statement.

Mr. JONES of Texas. Mr. Chairman, as I started to say, I do not know in just what form my language may have been couched and I had not intended a reflection upon the motives of anyone, and if I used such language I desire to have that language withdrawn, if I may get consent to do so. I want to make this statement in connection, that when the question of the division of time arose there was some controversy before the House went into the committee as to how the time should be divided. I was perfectly willing that the time should be divided one-half to those in favor and one-half to those opposed. The suggestion came to me from somewhere that there was an amendment which the committee had practically agreed to adopt, and that was the gentleman's objection to the bill; and in that I was probably mistaken, and I am perfectly willing to withdraw any statement that may bear the inference that he is not in good faith opposed to the bill. I thought I ought to make that statement, because my language may have been subject to being misconstrued.

Mr. STEVENSON. Mr. Chairman, if the gentleman will yield, I am a member of the committee, and we are agreed over here that those opposed to the bill shall have their fair share of the time that is accorded to this side of the House, and Mr. WINGO had arranged that somebody should be next recognized, and I regret the occurrence that has occurred, and I think the gentleman's withdrawal is proper.

Mr. JONES of Texas. I desire to withdraw any remarks that might be considered as a reflection on anyone. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas [Mr. JONES] that he be permitted to withdraw his remarks from the RECORD? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. GOLDSBOROUGH. Mr. Chairman, how much time have I?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman has 10 minutes.

Mr. GOLDSBOROUGH. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, due to the limited time for debate on this bill and the fact that there is a certain statement that I want to make, I shall ask not to be interrupted.

Mr. Chairman, the bill before the committee is the result of extended hearings and careful analysis on the part of the Committee on Banking and Currency, and while the bill as presented to the House with committee amendments is the result of much mutual concession within the committee we believe it is a bill covering the subject which will receive substantially the widest approval of the American people, both in numbers and scope of territory. While the bill changes administrative features of the law, we believe that these are matters which can be adjusted from time to time as public policy dictates. The modifications of the loan limit is a matter which in my opinion demands from the House the most serious consideration. Feeling as I do that the committee did as well as it could under all the circumstances I am in favor of the bill as reported with committee amendments and will now ask the attention of the Committee of the Whole House to a somewhat collateral consideration, which seems to me most important and can well demand the closest consideration by every Member of the National Congress.

On February 1, addressing the Committee of the Whole on the bill from the Banking and Currency Committee limiting expenditures in the construction of Federal reserve bank buildings, the distinguished gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MADDEN] in referring to the Federal reserve banks, spoke as follows:

Every time the banks show an excess amount of earnings they should be compelled to reduce the rediscount rate so as to keep their earnings in reason and thereby give to the borrowing public of the country an opportunity to get money at cheaper rates than they have been able to get it.

As a matter of fact, Federal reserve banks are only allowed to retain 6 per cent of their earnings for themselves, the remainder going back to the people through the Federal Treasury, but the point I wish to make is that the immoderate use of the rediscount facilities of the Federal reserve system is the thing which has caused the speculation, the inflation, the deflation, the economic unrest, the drop in the price of farm products, and the general suffering of the last few years.

Due to the increase in the gold supply from the gold discovered in Alaska, in the Klondike, and South Africa our bulk of money and available credit expanded from 1896 until 1914, and the primary purpose of the Federal reserve act was not to make available more credit but to prevent the contraction of credit and the artificial causing of depression and panics by large financial interests. The Federal reserve act legislation was passed, of course, at exactly the right time because without its machinery we could never have financed the war, and the public and private burden of debt is, of course, too great to justify our going back to the old system even if it were desirable for any reason, but there is grave danger of the primary function of the Federal reserve system being lost sight of and of its being made the means of a most unwholesome credit situation.

There are inserted in this speech as a part of it certain figures which can easily be verified and which I believe can be profitably studied by every Member of Congress and which are as follows:

I am only going to refer to a very few of them at this time. In 1914 the reporting banks of this country had loans and discounts aggregating $13,164,435,000. They owned bonds, stocks, and other securities amounting to $3,729,448,000. In 1922 the figures were: Loans and discounts, $24,859,018,000; stocks, bonds, and other securities, $9,540,274,000, whereas the physical volume of production was only 12.3 per cent greater in 1922 than in 1914. We find the wholesale price index for 1922 49 per cent higher than in 1914, and it has since gone up about 13 per cent. We find Federal reserve notes in circulation as of February 14 amounting to $2,243,603,000 and the reserve at 75 per cent.

There are various bills in the process of enactment through the Congress, the merit of any one of which I am not here and now discussing either favorably or unfavorably, which, if enacted into legislation, frankly contemplate immense additional credit structures, all to be ultimately supported by the Federal reserve system. If the present resources of the reserve system are allowed to be fully extended with our present immense supply of gold, the general price level of 1920, 126 per cent higher than the price level of 1914, will be exceeded, and this is exactly what will happen within the next four years unless there is some Federal legislation to stabilize the purchasing power of money. The Federal Reserve Board can not control the situation. The power of the Federal Reserve Board is defined by subsection D of section 14 of the Federal reserve act, which subsection gives to the Federal Reserve Board the final authority over rediscount rates to be charged by the Federal reserve banks—which shall be fixed with a view of accommodating commerce and business and which, subject to the approval, review, and determination of the Federal Reserve Board, may be graduated or progressed on the basis of the amount of the advances and discount accommodations extended by the Federal reserve bank to the borrowing bank.

Under this section no board would have the hardihood nor, in my judgment, the legal right to interpret this section so as to regulate rediscount rates with a view to perpetuating substantial stability in the general price level, and the very least, it seems to me, that the Congress should do would be to amend subsection D by placing the word "agriculture" before the word "commerce," and, after the word "business," add the words "with a view of moderating fluctuations in the general price level." If some affirmative authority of this kind is not given the board it must ultimately give way to clamor for credit, first from one source and then another, and culminate in a situation worse than the collapse of 1921 and 1922.

My friends, few of us realize the awful possibilities for good or evil of a colossal credit structure like the Federal reserve system. Credit beyond the legitimate needs of business expansion breeds inflation in general price levels; inflation in general price levels appears to justify another margin for credit; when further credit is extended the inflation in general price levels which follows furnishes a new basis for credit, until the whole structure falls in on itself.

This system must be supported by some sort of legislation to stabilize the purchasing power of money. The House Committee on Banking and Currency have just completed some very interesting hearings on a bill introduced for the purpose of securing this very stability. It is not my purpose here and now to discuss the merits of that bill, but I believe that every Member of Congress upon a reading of the hearings will be convinced of the necessity of prompt legislation which will place our immense credit structure under such measure of control as to prevent inflation and its consequent following period of speculation, deflation, and collapse, so that we will have a democracy indeed in finance, where every man, be he farmer, business man, banker, or laboring man, can have the credit he needs in order to carry on and to extend the scope of his usefulness in a conservative and wise manner as well for himself as for the public at large; but where, also, the machinery of credit will be so adjusted as to sound its own warning when a period of healthy expansion is being passed and a period of overproduction and speculation being reached.

What the farmer buys is costing him now around 76 per cent more than it did in 1914, whereas the price of what he had to sell during his selling period in 1922 was less than in 1914, although now the price level of farm products has risen to about 25 per cent more than it was in 1914. Stabilization of the general price level will very rapidly bring the price of farm products up to a point of yielding a wholesome and satisfactory profit, but another period of inflation and collapse will only increase the burden of debt under which the farmer is struggling. As for the man or woman with the average income, and the wage earner, a period of inflation, during which the dollars they receive will constantly buy less and less, is a period of acute suffering and a grave type of economic and social evil. Let us act now before the lessons of the last three years are entirely forgotten.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Maryland has expired.

Mr. McFADDEN. Mr. Chairman, I yield 20 minutes to the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. STRONG].

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Kansas is recognized for 20 minutes.

Mr. STRONG of Kansas. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, I think I ought to speak first of the propaganda that has been sent broadcast over the country and that is being sent to the Members of Congress against this bill. I think the Members of Congress and the farmers of the country are entitled to know the motives behind this propaganda.

I am a representative of an agricultural district. I am also the owner of a farm, and a member of a farm-loan association. I have never lived in a town of over 2,000 population in my life and have always been interested in the problems of agriculture. I have had some experience regarding the opportunity of the farmer to get loans under this farm-loan system, and I thought when I came to Congress that I would try to improve it.

Three years ago I introduced a bill to appoint agents where the farm-loan associations were not functioning, or where there were no farm-loan associations, so that all farmers could be reached and served. I immediately met with opposition from Mr. Flannigan and Mr. Lyman, who have been associated together in putting out the propaganda against this bill. I thought they were working for agricultural interests, but I have come to learn that they are working the farmers in their own selfish interests; but it has become apparent that some legislation should be passed amending the farm-loan system.

This Federal farm-loan system was built around the report of a commission that was sent to Europe to investigate rural-credit systems, and we followed largely the systems that were in force in Europe; but now, after five years' experience of our own, we have found that our system needs some amendments.

The original act provided that the 12 farm-loan banks should each issue their own bonds. That was very successful in Europe where the bond buyers are distributed throughout the entire country and surround the banks. But in this country the bond buyers are situated mostly east of Lake Erie, and when the 12 farm-loan banks came to such market they found themselves in competition with each other, and so without any authority of law, under the act at least, they joined together and asked the Farm Loan Board to sell their bonds. And they have so sold them, very successfully. We want now to provide by law for a central bond-selling agency to sell these bonds.

There is another provision that we might as well be frank about. One of the Eastern States has passed a law giving the bonds of their banks preference in their trust companies, thus putting their bonds at a premium. If that thing is allowed to continue, the banks located in the great money centers will have laws passed favoring their banks, and the farm-loan banks in the local territory where they most need farm loans will have their bonds go at a discount and make them hard to sell.

Mr. BEGG. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield right there for a question?

Mr. STRONG of Kansas. I will be very glad to.

Mr. BEGG. If this particular bonding feature becomes a law, can a bank in South Carolina and a bank in Ohio and one in Kansas pool their interests and put out a million-dollar bond issue that is apparently backed by the Federal Farm Loan Board, so that when I buy a bond I will not know whether my bond is secured by land in South Carolina or in Ohio or in Kansas? Is that correct?

Mr. STRONG of Kansas. No; and if you had read the entire act you would know that could not be done.

Mr. BEGG. I have read it several times, and that can be done.

Mr. STRONG of Kansas. You are mistaken; it can not be done.

Mr. BEGG. It certainly can, and anyone who has read the bill knows that it can be done.

Mr. STEVENSON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STRONG of Kansas. Yes.

Mr. STEVENSON. Every farm-loan bank in the United States and every borrower is back of every farm-loan bond issued now, but they are made on the face the joint and several bonds of all the banks, instead of the individual bank.

Mr. BEGG. That is exactly my position as I maintain it.

Mr. STEVENSON. But it only writes on the face of the bond what is now in the law.

Mr. STRONG of Kansas. Yes. We have not changed the law in that respect.

Mr. BEGG. If you have not changed it, what do you want to have it in here for?

Mr. STRONG of Kansas. We want to establish a central bond selling agency, so that all the banks will join and issue one consolidated bond, so there will be no discrimination and they may all be served with funds at the same costs and the bond buyers have a single standard bond, guaranteed by all the banks, that will be so attractive that it will sell at a lower rate and reduce the interest rate to the farmer borrowers.

Now, there is another proposition we wish to solve. Under the European systems where the landowners have small tracts of land in densely settled districts and the land or leasehold descends from father to son, they have farmers' cooperative credit systems. They get a good many cooperative benefits from forming such associations. So when this law was framed it was provided that loans should be made through farm-loan associations composed of at least 10 farmers; but we find in this country, where the farms are large and require larger loans, or in communities not very densely settled, it is hard to get 10 farmers ready to take 10 farm loans, and in many counties we do not have any farm-loan associations to serve the farmers under this system.

Again, when the farmers try to get 10 farmers who need loans to form an association together, some outside loan agency steps up to 2 or 3 of them and says, "We will make your loan a little easier," and when the farmers meet to form their association they have not enough men ready to take loans to form an association. That has happened in one county in my district until we have been unable to get a farm-loan association formed, and the farmers are not served.

Then there are places where churches have organized farm-loan associations and have refused to take in anyone outside of their own membership, and where families have formed a farm-loan association and have refused to take in any other farmers. Also, in some instances, associations have been formed and after getting a few farmers into the association have refused to take in others.

Sometimes a mortgage banker gets control of the office of secretary-treasurer, and while he takes the application for the farm loan from the farmers, he neglects to get the board of directors together to pass the loan; and finally, after a week or two, he says to the borrower, "If you are in a hurry for that loan I can make it for you through another mortgage-loan agency if you will pay a little higher rate."

So we find that in many communities the farmers do not have an opportunity to secure loans under this system, and we want to fix it so that the farmers everywhere can have the benefit of these amortized loans at low rates. So in this bill we have provided an amendment authorizing the Federal land banks to make loans through agents under proper bond in communities where farm-loan associations have not been formed, or where they fail, neglect, or refuse to properly serve the farmers of their territory. Loans made on applications taken through agents will, of course, have the same inspection and appraisement as loans made through associations or by agents of the joint-stock banks. This will in no way interfere with active farm-loan associations, but will enable the farm-loan banks to serve the farmers where there are no associations or where those in existence are not functioning properly.

Mr. WILLIAMSON. Will the gentleman yield in that connection?

Mr. STRONG of Kansas. I am very glad to yield to the gentleman.

Mr. WILLIAMSON. I notice you have eliminated most of the old features of the law in connection with these agencies. The law as it now exists provides that only a duly incorporated bank, trust company, mortgage company, or savings institution, chartered by the State in which it has its principal office, shall be employed as an agent, and these agents in taking loans and turning them over to the Federal farm-loan banks are required to indorse the paper and assume the same liability as the original mortgagor. Under this law you propose to appoint anyone an agent, no matter what his responsibility may be, and to have him give a surety bond.

Mr. STRONG of Kansas. That is Mr. Manson's statement, who, I think, is in the employ of the joint-stock land bank, and I can answer without the gentleman going through the rest of it. I know it by heart. But I do not want to take up too much time.

Mr. WILLIAMSON. The point is——

Mr. STRONG of Kansas. All right, I will answer the gentleman's question.

Mr. WILLIAMSON. I have not asked it yet.

Mr. STRONG of Kansas. I know what it is. When we started out to amend the act so as to appoint these agents to serve the farmer where he is not now being served, we found objections coming from the same source. They said we would make poorer loans and lessen the security of the bonds, but the mortgage banker, the joint-stock land banks, and all other agencies make loans through agents. It is said we are breaking down the cooperative feature of the farm-loan association.

I belong to a farm-loan association, but I do not believe that the farmers receive any cooperative benefits from them after their loans are secured. The Farmers' Union, the National Grange, and the American Farm Bureau and other farm organizations supply the farmers of this country the advantages to be derived from cooperation which I very much believe in and which I intend to foster and support in every way. I think it is because they have these associations that they do not use the farm-loan associations for any other purpose than to secure their loans, but because of the propaganda that has been sent out charging that the appointment of agents would destroy the cooperative features which it is claimed these associations have, we provided in this bill that where an agent was appointed in the territory of an association that had become inactive and the association decided to resume its service to the farmers and should pass a resolution to do so that no more loans through agents should be made in that territory. We also have provided that any 10 borrowers whose loans should be made through agents could form a farm-loan association.

Mr. BURTNESS. What incentive would there be to the 10 men to form an association after they have gotten their money without becoming responsible in any way, shape, manner, or form to the other fellow?

Mr. STRONG of Kansas. No more incentive than induces them in the first place, as far as the cooperative features are concerned. There is no cooperative beneficial feature in the farm-loan association after the farmers have secured their loans; they obtain such benefits through their farm organizations, and all this talk about the cooperative benefits to the farmer in farm-loan associations is pure, unadulterated bunk, intended to fool the farmer.

Mr. STEVENSON. The gentleman from North Dakota [Mr. BURTNESS] says, "without becoming responsible in any way, shape, manner, or form." The gentleman has not read the bill. The man who gets a loan through an agent has to have the profits that are accruing to his stock put aside to create a reserve to take care of the defaults of the fellows who borrow through the agency, and he has got the responsibility after the fellow acts through the association.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STRONG of Kansas. I had rather not. I am trying to explain these propositions without taking too much time. You are all my friends and I would like to yield to you, but I have not the time.

The matter of the permanent organization of the banks we feel makes necessary another amendment. The original act provided for a temporary organization under the supervision of the Federal Farm Loan Board and that when the stock subscriptions in any farm-loan bank should reach the sum of a hundred thousand dollars a permanent organization should be effected consisting of nine directors, three appointed by the Government and six elected by the farm-loan associations. In January, 1918, Congress passed a law authorizing the purchase by the Treasury of two hundred millions of the farm-loan bonds, with a provision that so long as any of the bonds so purchased remained in the Treasury the temporary organization should continue in force. So up to this time we have had Government supervision and management by the Federal Farm Loan Board. It has been most successful. The bond buyers have furnished a ready market for the bonds, interest rates have been reduced, and loans made to farmers during the past year at the rate of a million dollars a day.

Whether or not the confidence of the bond buyers will continue if Government supervision is removed and the system turned over to the borrowers is a grave question, and after a good deal of earnest consideration we have provided in this bill a permanent organization with a cooperative management between the Government and the stockholder borrowers, the Government through the Farm Loan Board to name three directors and the stockholder borrowers to elect three, the seventh director to be chosen from candidates nominated by the stockholder borrowers.

Our committee had hearings upon this bill for over two weeks and then appointed a committee, of which I was chairman, to revise and rewrite it. Then the whole committee spent more than a week in perfecting it, and we are confident that if the bill is passed it will insure the system's good service to the farmers, all of whom can be served at still further reduced rates of interest. Chairman Charles E. Lobdell and Gov. Robert A. Cooper, present members of the Federal Farm Loan Board, and Hon. Herbert Quick and Hon. F. A. Lever, past members of the board; Merton L. Corey, representing the Farm Loan Bank of Omaha and the Secretary-Treasurers Association of the eighth Federal land district; George S. Mornin, secretary-treasurer of the Federal Farm Loan Association of Cedar Rapids, Iowa; Gray Silver, representing the American Farm Bureau Federation, and several Members of Congress from agricultural districts all appeared before our committee in support of the bill.

The only opposition came from Benjamin Marsh, whose principal objection was to increasing the loan limit above $10,000, and Mr. Flanagan and Mr. Lyman and Attorney Lester C. Manson, who represented their Federation of National Farm Loan Associations. These gentlemen are responsible for the immense amount of propaganda that has been sent out to the farm-loan organizations, misrepresenting the intents and purposes of the bill, which has caused them to write to Members of the House opposing the bill. I want to read from the record of the hearings before our committee a statement made by Chairman Lobdell in explanation of the antagonism of Mr. Flanagan and Mr. Lyman toward the Farm Loan Board:

Mr. LOBDELL. Mr. Strong has called my attention to a matter that I am somewhat reluctant to discuss, because it is in a sense personal. I made reference to it and said all that I ought, perhaps. But the activities of Mr. Lyman and Mr. Flanagan date back to Mr. Flanagan's dismissal from the Farm Loan Board, on which occasion he served notice of his hostility. In that connection Mr. Lyman called on the board and demanded Mr. Flanagan's reinstatement. After a discussion of the situation and his insistence, with a threat that he would turn the organizations he represented loose on the Farm Loan Board, the subject was dismissed rather summarily and perhaps with scant courtesy. And a couple of days later he and Mr. Marsh attended a formal sitting of the board that we had, and the reinstatement of Mr. Flanagan was demanded, with the threat on the part of Mr. Lyman of the hostility which has been manifested. That is the animus behind that organization.

Mr. Flanagan had secured, while secretary of the board, a list of the farm-loan associations, and, assisted by Mr. Lyman, proceeded to organize them into a national association, requiring that they should each send to their headquarters here in Washington yearly dues of $10 each, which at that time would have netted them $40,000.

Mr. STAFFORD. Something on the order of the Non-Partisan League.

Mr. STRONG of Kansas. The board objected to this use of the funds of the associations, and they checked it up to Attorney General Palmer, who decided that they could not use the funds of the associations. Then the warfare commenced between Lyman and Flannagan and the farm board, and they have succeeded in inducing 300 out of the 4,600 farm-loan associations to joint their organization and have told them it is necessary to maintain their services here in Washington to protect the farm-loan system against Congress and the Federal Farm Loan Board.

Up until this bill was introduced they have hoped through their association to build up an organization of farm-loan associations, and that they will enable them to secure control of the farm-loan banks instead of having continued Government supervision. They tell the farmers that we want to turn it back to political control and that they want to give it to the farmers.

The fact is they are the politicians that are trying to gain control and to destroy the supervision of the Government so necessary to the system if they want to sell the bonds to the bond-buying public.

Mr. GARRETT of Texas. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STRONG of Kansas. Yes.

Mr. GARRETT of Texas. How many agents may be appointed under the bill to take the place of the cooperative association?

Mr. STRONG of Kansas. No agent will take the place of a farm-loan association that is active and functioning. An agent is to be appointed only where there is no farm-loan association or where it is not functioning properly. The bill further provides that, if at any time a farm-loan association in the territory wants to resume operations and serve the farmers by passing a resolution and sending it to the board in Washington that they intend to do so, the board will instruct the bank to take no more applications through the agent.

Mr. GARRETT of Texas. Who determines that an agent is necessary in this section?

Mr. STRONG of Kansas. The farm-loan banks that make the loans in that territory.

Mr. GARRETT of Texas. Can not they make the loan directly to the borrower as well as through the agent?

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Kansas has expired.

Mr. HARDY of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from Kansas be allowed 20 minutes, not to be taken out of the time fixed by he rule.

The CHAIRMAN. The time has been fixed and can not be extended in the committee.

Mr. HARDY of Texas. If the House wants a full explanation, I think it can be done by unanimous consent.

The CHAIRMAN. It can not be done by unanimous consent in the committee.

Mr. McFADDEN. I yield to the gentleman five minutes more.

Mr. GARRETT of Texas. Now, to continue my inquiry regarding the loan made to the farmer by the agent. Why can not the loan be made as easily direct from the farm-land bank without the intervening of an agent?

Mr. STRONG of Kansas. Some one has got to be in that territory to take the application and fix up the papers.

Mr. GARRETT of Texas. There would have to be as many agents as there are farmers that want to make loans.

Mr. STRONG of Kansas. No, no; one agent in a community can serve just as well and better than a farm-loan association that has ceased to function.

Mr. GARRETT of Texas. The point I make is, as a practical proposition, why could not the farmer, if you are going to do away with the cooperative system to that extent, take his abstract of title to his land from his county and make the trip himself to the Federal land bank and lay it down on the counter and ask for the loan that he wanted?

Mr. STRONG of Kansas. He could; but he might be 200 miles away from the bank.

Mr. GARRETT of Texas. That would be cheaper even than to pay an agent.

Mr. STRONG of Kansas. Oh, no; it would not. Suppose he wanted a loan of $3,000. If he had to pay 1 per cent, he would pay $30.

Mr. GARRETT of Texas. He could mail it in and get all the action he wanted. Who will do the appraising under this bill?

Mr. STRONG of Kansas. The same men who do it now.

Mr. GARRETT of Texas. What would be the gain?

Mr. STRONG of Kansas. Simply a service to the farmer. Many farmers from my district are writing me that they are not being served.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STRONG of Kansas. Yes.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Some of us would like to hear the gentleman in his time make some reference to the necessity for increasing the amount of the loan which is permissible under the amendment.

Mr. STRONG of Kansas. I would like to proceed. There are some men who are very much interested in that feature who will speak later.

Mr. BLANTON. Would the gentleman mind telling us what a community is? There might be 50 communities in a county not being served.

Mr. STRONG of Kansas. It all depends upon the density of the population. In some of my counties we have only one association and in some we have two, and in some places a county and a half takes one association.

Mr. HAUGEN. Does the Federal Farm Loan Board limit the number of cooperative associations?

Mr. STRONG of Kansas. Not at all.

Mr. HAUGEN. Then any 10 farmers can get together and form an association?

Mr. STRONG of Kansas. Yes. I am sorry, but I must refuse to yield any more. I want you gentlemen to know where this propaganda you are receiving comes from. This morning there was sent to the office of each one of you a letter headed "National Board of Farm Organizations," signed by Charles A. Lyman, secretary. In that letter he says:

By authority given me by Mr. Charles S. Barrett, chairman of the National Board of Farm Organizations and the president of the National Farmers' Union, I appeared before the Committee on Banking and Currency of the House on January 4.

And so forth. By that statement he was trying to give you gentlemen the idea that in the opposition to this bill he is representing the National Board of Farm Associations under the direction of Mr. Barrett. I called up Mr. Barrett and asked him who gave Mr. Lyman authority to go down before the committee. He said he gave him authority to go down before the committee, but he did not tell him to oppose the bill, and he gave him no authority to send out this statement. They are trying to fool you on this proposition.

Mr. DAVIS of Tennessee. Does Mr. Barrett himself indorse the bill?

Mr. STRONG of Kansas. Mr. Barrett has known that this bill has been before us for some time, but he has not been before the committee, either for or against it. I think he has been out of the city most of the time.

Mr. SUMMERS of Washington. Will the gentleman state in regard to his own association, which is referred to in the letter?

Mr. STRONG of Kansas. They propagandized my association just as they did every other, telling them that we were trying to destroy the farm-loan system, to give it over to the bankers, and all that kind of trash. They got my fellows to send me a protest just as they have succeeded in misleading a good many others.

Mr. BEGG. I saw a copy of a letter that purported to be a reply to the gentleman's letter from the association.

Mr. STRONG of Kansas. The gentleman saw a copy of a letter of one man asking me for more information. They have misled a good many. Mr. Manson, the attorney who came before our committee, said that he was working for love; that he was writing these briefs and sending them over the country without any fee or expectation of a fee. We have become very nearly convinced that he is in the employ of the joint-stock land banks. The joint-stock land banks, it seems, are against this bill. Those, however, who have succeeded in making it serve the farmers so successfully are earnestly supporting it, such as the present and past members of the Federal Farm Loan Board and the presidents of the farm-land banks and a great majority of the farm-loan associations.

I have here a wire from the president of the association of secretaries and treasurers of the eighth Federal land district that I will read.

CHICAGO, ILL., February 16, 1923.

Congressman JAMES G. STRONG,
Washington, D. C.:

Association of secretary-treasurers of eighth Federal land bank district has carefully considered Strong bill amending farm loan act. We indorse every provision for the following reasons: First, the banks are able and willing to pay expenses of administering the system; second, the plan for permanent organization gives the associations a voice in the management of the banks now denied and preserves such Government supervision as will insure confidence of bond-investing public; third, provision is properly made for stock to be issued by Federal land bank when association liquidates; fourth, enlarges purpose of loan, enabling banks to care for severe losses among farmers during deflation period on which they now are paying high interest rates; fifth, the increase of loan limit to $25,000 is absolutely necessary to enable the banks to serve the Corn Belt and ranching territory, and it is important to all farmers that the Federal farm-loan system shall be permitted to function in the best agricultural States both because it is just to the farmers so burdened with debts, and the inclusion of these loans will make larger profits for all borrowers as well as satisfy the bond investors with the strength of the securities; sixth, loans through agents are necessary in many places to enable the banks to serve farmers who do not have access to associations; seventh, the provisions for issuance and sale of consolidated bonds will facilitate the work and render the bonds more attractive.

Farmers of this district are practically unanimous for this bill, as they have not been misled by the propaganda of some opponents of the measure, who, while pretending to serve the association and the Federal land banks, are seeking to shackle the system so it can not compete on fair terms with the selfish interests they represent. Distressed conditions in agricultural districts demand early passage of your bill.

JOHN CARMODY, President.

FEDERAL LAND BANK.

BERKELEY, CALIF., February 16, 1923.

The proposed amendments to the farm loan act contained in H. R. 14041, known as the Strong bill, we believe have been well considered, and if passed will serve the best interests of our borrowers, both present and future. There can be no serious objection to section 1; it is fair and just. Section 2 provides a plan of permanent organization for the banks that should prove beneficial. It gives the associations representation on the directorate, to which they are entitled, and which should prove beneficial without subjecting the banks to the criticism that the farmer's interest only and not the public interest in the system is being considered. This plan is fair and we believe will meet with the approval of the associations in this district. Section 3 is a necessary amendment. Several associations in this district have expressed a desire to liquidate. This section provides a fair and safe plan. Section 4 does not go as far as it might, but will undoubtedly enable the banks to care for many farmers who otherwise would be unable to obtain our services. Section 5 will enable us in this district to take care of many farmers who at the present time are being denied our service, because they are not in association territory or are unable to get service from existing associations. We do not consider that it in any way destroys the cooperative principle of the system. Section 6, in order to save expense, confusion, and possible discrimination in bond sales and purchases, we believe the adoption of this section necessary. Sections 7 and 8 seem necessary in view of previous proposals and amendments. We hope the Strong bill may be passed this session.

NEW ORLEANS, LA., February 16, 1923.

COMMISSIONER FEDERAL FARM LOAN BOARD,
Washington, D. C.:

In answer to your telegram of February 14 in re Strong bill amending farm loan act, the board of directors of the Federal Land Bank of New Orleans, in special session this February 16, beg to reply unanimously, as follows: We heartily indorse said bill, with the exception of that portion thereof relating to permanent organization of the Federal land banks, concerning which portion we have grave misgivings. We have always regarded governmental control of the banks through the Farm Loan Board as the keystone of the endurance and success of the system. The method of permanent organization of the banks prescribed in said bill seems to point to a passing of governmental control, and this would, in our opinion, work irreparable injury to the system both in the management of the banks and in the credit of the system in sale of bonds to the investing public, who in every loan have an interest of 95 per cent.

BOARD OF DIRECTORS,
T. F. DAVIS, President.

ST. LOUIS, MO., February 15, 1923.

Judge CHARLES E. LOBDELL,
Farm Loan Commissioner, Washington, D. C.:

We believe Strong bill amending farm loan act would insure more economic and efficient administration of Federal land banks and more adequate and extended service to farmers. Increased loan limit is simple justice to deserving farm units now excluded from cooperative system. Permission to use agents in extreme cases would provide more universal service. Participation in management by borrowers, as here provided, should not be longer delayed. Government should be relieved of administration costs. Other provisions of Strong bill would further tend to perfect functioning of farm loan act. We are convinced that a large majority of our 416 associations favor this bill.

Hon. CHARLES E. LOBDELL,
Farm Loan Commissioner, Federal Farm Loan Board,
Washington, D. C.:

We strongly indorse the Strong bill (H. R. 14041) as favorably reported by the Banking and Currency Committee of the House. We believe it is of prime importance in the development of the system. We sincerely trust that it will pass this present session of Congress, as we consider it of importance that it be made effective as soon as possible.

OMAHA, NEBR., February 14, 1923.

FEDERAL FARM LOAN BOARD,
Washington, D. C.:

We have given careful consideration to the Strong bill, now pending in Congress. We consider it is very wisely drawn, and provides very necessary and desirable changes in the farm-loan act, which, if enacted, will strengthen the Federal land banks and enlarge their opportunities to serve borrowers. This bank is ready and willing to pay its share of the expenses of the Farm Loan Board and relieve the Government of that expense. The plan for electing directors of the Federal land banks safeguards both the interests of the borrowers and the interests of investors who furnish funds for loans. Section 3 provides a method by which associations may voluntarily liquidate, which is lacking in the original act. The provision increasing the maximum loan limit to $25,000 is very greatly needed in order to accommodate borrowers operating ordinary farm units, many of whom were tenants, who are struggling hard to pay for homes for themselves and families.

Farmers can not keep their sons on the farm unless they have farm units of sufficient size to keep them profitably employed and of sufficient size to divide and start their sons as farm owners instead of tenants when they marry and start out for themselves. The restriction providing that all applications for loan, between $16,000 and $25,000, shall be submitted to the Farm Loan Board at Washington should, however, be eliminated, as it will cause unnecessary delay in closing loans and consequent dissatisfaction with the system. Over the larger part of our district loyal and faithful secretary-treasurers give prompt and efficient farm-loan service to the farmers in their communities. Other localities, however, are not served by associations and should have the opportunity of procuring their loans through agents as provided in the Strong bill. Experience has proven that it is of utmost importance for the Federal land banks to join together in marketing their bonds. Section 6 provides a practical organization for the sale of our bonds, aiding not only in securing a better market but also promoting economy, simplicity, and prompt and efficient service and is altogether desirable.

CHAS. E. LOBDELL,
Farm Loan Commissioner, Washington, D. C.:

We and our organizations favor all the amendments in the Strong bill except the last amendment. Our associations believe the last amendment could well be left out at this time. We strongly urge the passage of all the other amendments in order to increase the efficiency and service of the Federal land bank system.

FEDERAL FARM LOAN BOARD,
Washington, D. C.:

Our executive committee feels that the proposed amendments to the farm loan act outlined in the Strong bill will increase efficiency of service to eligible borrowers. There is special need of increase in loan limit in this district. We furthermore feel that the matter of permanent organization ought to be settled; and, speaking generally, we favor the Strong bill.

Our executive committee favors the Strong bill as reported by House Committee on Banking and Currency; other than that we doubt advisability of designating seventh director as ex officio chairman of board.

THOMSON, Secretary.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Kansas has again expired.

Mr. STEVENSON. Mr. Chairman, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. JONES].

Mr. JONES of Texas. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the House, I am always somewhat opposed to tinkering with a machine that is running in fine fashion. I understand that farm-loan bonds are selling above par, that more applications are on file than they are able to take care of, that the bonds are very much in demand, so I think if we make any radical changes in the system, in so far as the management of the system is concerned, it should be done very carefully and cautiously. There are two sections in the bill that seem to me to be calculated to interfere with the present workings of the system in the best way. Section 2 changes the methods of control and the election of directors of the banks, placing three in the hands of the farm-loan associations, three in the hands of the bank, and the odd one to be selected, as I understand, from three who have been approved by the farm-loan system.

Mr. STEVENSON. Will the gentleman tell us who appoints the directors who are now in control and have been up to the present time?

Mr. JONES of Texas. I understand they are appointed from those who are approved by the national associations.

Mr. STEVENSON. Oh, no; they are not. They are appointed by the President, and they have never had an opportunity to name one up to this time.

Mr. JONES of Texas. I just want to say that at the present time the voice of the associations has been pretty strong in it, and I understand that when the Government's money is returned and the permanent organization is formed six, perhaps, out of nine are to be selected by the farm-loan associations. At least that is the way I construe section 4 of the original act. However that may be, I think the principal objection to this bill, and that is what I want to discuss principally in view of the limited time which I have, is section 15, I wish gentlemen would look at it. There is just one great principle running through the farm-loan system, and that is this.

The present loans are made through loan associations consisting of 10 or more members. Let us take the gentlemen who are sitting on these two front seats. Suppose they get together and form a farm-loan association for the purpose of securing a loan. Each of those men must buy 5 per cent of stock in the Federal land bank, and each must be responsible to the amount of 5 per cent of his loan for any loss that occurs among his neighbors.

Mr. HUDSPETH. My colleague has referred to section 15. I do not see it.

Mr. JONES of Texas. It is section 5 of this bill, amending section 15. It is true that under the proposed system of direct loans by agents the man is also responsible, but each neighbor is not responsible in the community organization for his neighbor. If Mr. CLARKE, for instance, and Mr. DENISON and Mr. RAINEY are going to be in this association and somebody tries to get in whose credit is not very good, or whose security is not very good, they look after that, and see to it that this man either makes his security good, or that he does not get in.

Now, if this measure is passed, the agent will come around—he will have a commission under it—he can make the loan direct. The motive of that agent will be to make the loan, because he gets a commission. The motive of Mr. CLARKE and Mr. DENISON is not only to secure the loan in passing on their neighbor's loan or the others in the association, but their motive is to make those loans safe, is not that it? Under the new plan as evolved, the agent gets a commission of 1 per cent. He goes into a community, and instead of getting 12 or 10 or some other number of men together, all of whom are interested primarily in making these loans safe, that agent's commission depends upon his making the loan, does it not? Of course, the borrower is going to be responsible over the whole banking district for any loss that occurred, but if he is only going to be responsible in that way, even though it is for the same amount, he is not particularly interested in the man in his locality having a safe loan. He will not pass on it, because it will be done through the agent. Now, the reason that these farm-loan bonds are selling above par is because the investor thinks they are absolutely safe.

Mr. YOUNG. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JONES of Texas. In a moment. The best way in the world to have somebody who knows the parties in a small local loan is to have the local association where each neighbor of 12 neighbors is interested in having the loan absolutely safe, because his loss, if there is any, depends on the delinquency of somebody in that community who forms part of that association. I favor increasing the loan limit. However, I think the bad features of the bill outweigh the good features.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

The committee informally rose; and Mr. SNELL having taken the chair as Speaker pro tempore, a message from the Senate, by Mr. Craven, its Chief Clerk, announced that the Senate had passed bills of the following titles, in which the concurrence of the House of Representatives was requested:

S. 3955. An act to compensate Lieut. L. D. Webb, United States Navy, for damages to household effects while being transported by Government conveyance;

S. 4308. An act to authorize the general accounting officers of the United States to allow credit to certain disbursing officers for payments of salary made on properly certified and approved vouchers; and

S. 3084. An act to authorize and provide for the payment of the amounts expended in the construction of hangars and the maintenance of flying fields for the use of the Air Mail Service of the Post Office Department.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed with amendments the bill (H. R. 14254) to amend the act entitled "An act to create a commission authorized under certain conditions to refund or convert obligations of foreign governments held by the United States of America, and for other purposes," had insisted upon its amendments, had requested a conference with the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses upon the pending bill, and had appointed Mr. MCCUMBER, Mr. SMOOT, and Mr. WILLIAMS as the conferees on the part of the Senate.

FEDERAL FARM LOAN ACT.

The committee resumed its session.

Mr. STEVENSON. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself 10 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The time is in control of the gentleman from Arkansas.

Mr. WINGO. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from South Carolina control the rest of the time.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. STEVENSON. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman met himself the first round. He said that the management that had control of things up to now and made this thing go like this did ought not to be interfered with. Then he complains we did not turn it over to somebody else absolutely without any string. The temporary organization of directors appointed by the President of the United States are to-day in the control of this institution and have been, and until the $100,000,000 of bonds of the farm loan association are taken out of the Treasury of the United States they will be in absolute control, and no association has had anything to say about the appointment or direction of directors and will not have until those bonds are taken out, and they are left for 14 years yet to act. In this amendment the first thing we propose to do is to turn over to the stockholders, regardless of that situation, the right to control and elect the majority of the directors of these institutions, because we are satisfied that now they will go on. Now, what is the proposition about that? They say now the original bill as introduced retained control of the majority in the Farm Loan Board. The committee did not stand for that. The committee said that this is a good concern, that everybody has confidence in it, and we did not intend to keep a hierarchy here that might override all the stockholders of this concern, and therefore they should have the right to take over a majority of the directors. We provided they elect three directors, that the board appoint three, and that the stockholders nominate from the district—say the District of Columbia banking district—nominate as many as they want, and the Federal Farm Loan Board can appoint one of the three highest. We give the stockholders the right to say from what list the other director shall be taken, and he is to be president of the board. But if these stockholders in a district nominate only one, the board has to take him. That is the provision. Do you want any other security than that for the stockholders?

Mr. HARDY of Texas. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STEVENSON. I will.

Mr. HARDY of Texas. For information, what is meant by the stockholders in a district?

Mr. STEVENSON. The stockholders in a district are the stockholders of the farm-loan association and the people who borrow through the agency.

Mr. HARDY of Texas. If the association disappeared, they still have——

Mr. STEVENSON. I am glad the gentleman asked that question, because there is no chance that the association would disappear.

Mr. HARDY of Texas. That is what I wanted to know.

Mr. STEVENSON. The gentleman referred to section 5 and to section 15 but did not read it. Now, I want you to look at that language as it stands to-day. Look at section 15 as it stands to-day. I will read it:

SEC. 15. That whenever, after this act shall have been in effect one year, it shall appear to the Federal Farm Loan Board that national farm-loan associations have not been formed and are not likely to be formed in any locality because of peculiar local conditions, said board may, in its discretion, authorize Federal land banks to make loans on farm lands through agents approved by said board.

Mr. JONES of Texas. They can only make loans through the banks and trust companies, which must indorse the loans.

Mr. STEVENSON. I will come to that. The gentleman who sent this propaganda about this morning said that they can not do so under this bill; that they have to have the banks and trust companies and nobody else can act as agents, and therefore you can not make the loans regardless of that restriction. We have fixed it so that farm-loan banks can have any agent they want.

Mr. BEGG. If the Government makes money available at the lowest possible rate of interest, do you think it is then obligated to hire men to go around and solicit people to take that money?

Mr. STEVENSON. No, sir; the Government is not. The Government is not obligated to establish a farm-loan bank, but it is doing it, and the problem is to get for every farmer in this country a chance to avail himself of that opportunity.

Why do we put this agency proposition in here? Why have we liberalized it here? Because there was a community where 15 or 20 men in a county would organize an association and get their loans and then shut up business.

Let me read the language we have put in there, under which they are better off than in the original act:

When a local farm-loan association fails, neglects, or refuse to serve properly the needs of any territory in its locality—

And I hope the gentleman from Texas [Mr. HARDY] will get that, because I want him to understand that—

When a local farm-loan association fails, neglects, or refuses to serve properly the needs of any territory in its locality, then the board, after 30 days' notice to said association—

And so forth. We give them the opportunity of repentance, and if they do not take it, it is their own fault. Then, after 30 days' notice it may authorize the Federal land bank to make such loans as are approved by the board. Is there anything unfair about that?

Then, over on page 11 we have a provision that—

Whenever any local farm-loan association, located in territory served by an agent, appointed under the provisions of this section, shall by resolution declare its willingness to serve the prospective borrowers in such territory and transmit a copy of such resolution to the Federal Farm Loan Board, the Federal Farm Loan Board shall at once instruct the Federal land bank of that district to discontinue taking applications through agents in such territory—

And so forth. Then the Farm Loan Board can not loan through the agent at all. It has got to go back to the association.

Mr. TINCHER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STEVENSON. Yes.

Mr. TINCHER. Is not the bill under consideration valuable from the fact that on page 9, for instance, it gives reasons? It provides—

To liquidate indebtedness of the owner of the land mortgaged incurred for agricultural purposes, or incurred prior to January 1, 1922.

I know of a number of farmers who are being deprived of the privileges under this law by reason of the narrowness of the act.

Mr. STEVENSON. Yes. That is another amendment that we have made. We have made it prior to January 1, 1922. We have heard about deflation, and we have heard how the farmers have been injured by it. We provide that up to January 1, 1922, the farmer who has got in debt, whether for agricultural purposes or not, has the right to liquidate the indebtedness. When gentlemen talk about getting cheap money, we propose that the man who borrowed before January 1, 1922, shall be allowed to redeem his home under the provisions of this act.

The gentleman says the agency does not have to indorse. No bank has the right to indorse, and no bank has indorsed, and no loan has been made through the agency under that provision. But remember that when people borrow through an agency the bank shall set aside a certain part of the stock going to the reserve fund. We create a great reserve fund there to take care of any defaults that are made by any of these direct borrowers for whom the other borrowers did not stand, so that the great mass of direct borrowers will be standing for themselves only, and they will have a reserve fund there out of the reserve fund created by those direct borrowers which will enable the bank to get its money.

Mr. BURTNESS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STEVENSON. Yes.

Mr. BURTNESS. Will that have to be paid back to the individual stockholder?

Mr. STEVENSON. That will come when you come to liquidate the bank. That will be taken into account when you settle with the stockholders under the 40-year term.

Mr. BURTNESS. That does not provide that the shareholders shall be liable, but the next paragraph determines the liability of the shareholder, and that shareholder is not included.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from South Carolina has expired.

Mr. STEVENSON. I desire, Mr. Chairman, to take five minutes more, and then I will be through.

Of course, when the stockholder gets through and pays his loan and gets his settlement, the value of his interest in that reserve will be included and accounted for to him honestly, as all the insurance companies do.

Mr. BURTNESS. I would like to hear the gentleman also on the necessity or the reason for section 3 of the act providing for liquidation.

Mr. STEVENSON. Oh, yes; that is another of the complaints that the gentlemen all had this morning from Mr. Lyman. If the gentleman will turn to section 24 of the farm loan act he will see the following:

No national farm-loan association, Federal land bank, or joint-stock land bank shall go into voluntary liquidation without the written consent of the Federal Farm Loan Board.

That recognizes the right for a Federal farm-loan association to go into liquidation. All corporations can go into liquidation by the unanimous consent of the stockholders, and we have left it that way. They can not do it without unanimous consent. But there was no provision in there for what became of a man's stock in the farm-loan association when the association went into liquidation. He could not get it out. It was in a fix, where it was hung up between heaven and earth.

What did we put this in for? We put in this provision about what should become of the stock in order that there might be a settlement, and in order that the man would not lose his stock when the association went into liquidation.

Mr. BURTNESS. What relevancy has that to the original act to which it is appended?

Mr. STEVENSON. Section 9. That section provides merely for what becomes of a man's stock after the association liquidates, as provided for under the farm loan act as originally enacted. That is all it does. I do not think anybody will say that it is unjust or improper. It is not only just but exceedingly proper.

Now, as to the size of the loan, we had a great deal of trouble in that, and here is how we reached the figure $16,000. Everybody from all over the United States testified on this matter. If any one of you wants to look at it, you can read it in the hearings. The committee had its own idea, that the ideal farm unit in the Middle West was 160 acres, and the Farm Loan Board representatives testified that they had made it a rule that they would never loan more than $100 an acre for farm-loan purposes even in Iowa.

That made for the ideal farm unit the maximum loan of $16,000, and we put it at $16,000, and we provided that the man wanting $10,000 or less should be cared for first. Then occasionally an exceptional circumstance arises where it is necessary for some man to get a larger loan than that to pay for or save his farming outfit and his farm unit, and we provided that under exceptional circumstances they may submit an application to the board, and if the board see fit they may make a loan up to the limit of $25,000; but that is only under exceptional circumstances, and the small man must first be cared for before that is done. That is the situation as to that.

Now, gentlemen, a good deal of misinformation has gone out. There is just one other thing I want to advert to. This young man has sent you this statement about the loan associations all being opposed to this bill. I want to call your attention to the hearings at page 122. In the first place I call attention to the fact that this young man claims to represent only 800. His own testimony shows that there are over 4,000 of these associations, so as to numbers he represents only a minority of 20 per cent.

This bill has been submitted to the farm-loan associations of this country as originally introduced. Since then it has been cut all to pieces and rewritten three times, and I consider it a very good piece of legislation. As originally introduced it was submitted to the farm-loan associations of this country, and 1,017 people replied. Six hundred and seventy-four of them were for the first part of the bill; that is, where they take over the expenses. Nine hundred and sixty-five out of the 1,017 were for the second section, 905 were for the third, 919 for the consolidated bond section, 938 for the liquidation section, and 873 for increasing the loan limit. For the loan agencies there were 860 out of 1,017.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. STEVENSON. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. QUIN].

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. QUIN] is recognized for five minutes. [Applause.]

Mr. QUIN. Mr. Chairman, according to my conception, this measure changes the fundamental farm loan act, and I believe the changes in it deserve more than passing notice. For that reason in the closing days of the Congress I do not believe we ought to pass this bill. Every man on this floor knows that my heart and sympathies are with the farmers of the United States. In the caucus in 1913 in this very room for weeks a few of us fought to get this farm loan act made a part of the great Federal reserve system. We were unsuccessful, and did not finally get this bill through until the presidential-election year of 1916.

The enemies of that measure have gone the extreme limit, have run the entire gamut to tear down the Federal farm loan act. They even went so far as to get out an injunction and stop the Federal farm-loan associations of the United States from functioning for a long period of time. Now, one of the main things in the original act was to hold down to as small a sum as possible the amount that could be borrowed by any one farmer. That was finally agreed at the maximum of $10,000. I believed then it was wise to make it that low, and since this law has been in force I have still believed in the wisdom of the original act. So that every man in the United States who is a real friend of the farming classes knows in his heart and judgment that it should not be increased above that limit.

Mr. DICKINSON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. QUIN. I can not yield. My time is too short. In this bill they have increased the limit to $16,000. That is nearly double the amount that the original act carried. Why is it that the Federal farm-loan bonds are now marketed everywhere at above par? It is because they are secure from taxation and because the amount loaned to any one farmer is not sufficient to jeopardize these securities. A $10,000 loan has bonds back of it that of course will be better than if the limit were $16,000. Further, the amount of money that can go to these farmers in the United States is limited, and we must hold the sum down instead of letting it go up. This bill even says they may go higher than $16,000. They may loan $100,000 to any farmer.

Mr. STEVENSON. Oh, no; not to exceed $25,000 under any circumstances.

Mr. QUIN. If this bill becomes a law, in my judgment it will jeopardize the effective operation of the Federal farm-loan system. All of us want to do all we can for the farmers of this country. I would love to see every man get half the value of his farm, even if he had a $100,000 farm; but we can not do it in a Government institution, because of the very fact that we know the resources of the United States become limited at times. The money available to buy these bonds becomes limited at times, and therefore we must hold the amount down to as small a sum as possible.

In all probability we can all the time find buyers for the bonds if we do not lend more than $10,000 to any one farmer. If the limit is raised to $16,000 and $25,000 the small farmers will not be able to secure loans. Another thing: The bonds may be forced below par, which would compel the farmers to pay a higher rate of interest.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. QUIN. May I have a little more time?

Mr. STEVENSON. I yield to the gentleman three minutes more.

Mr. QUIN. My good friend from South Carolina [Mr. STEVENSON], a member of the committee, says it may not be over $25,000. Suppose they inaugurate the system of making half the loans at $25,000. Do you not know that the small farmer who wants $500 or $1,000 or $1,500 would be in a measure deprived of his loan, and would not that in a measure cause the bonds to be a drug on the market? We might get too many of them for the amount of money seeking such investments.

Mr. STEVENSON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. QUIN. I yield to the gentleman from South Carolina.

Mr. STEVENSON. The gentleman has overlooked the proviso that preference shall be given to applicants for loans for $10,000 and less.

Mr. QUIN. Yes; you put the preference there, but when you come to the actual reality what are you going to do? You know that the great farm-mortgage companies of the United States in competition with this farm loan act have done all in their power to discredit it and to destroy it. You know that if you put such language as that in the bill the same forces will continue to make inroads against the operation of this law as it was originally intended; and if the United States Congress will listen to all the sirens that come asking to have amendments made to this act they will finally get it so that the small farmers can not borrow the money they need; and that is what I am afraid of, and we must be careful to prevent that. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. STEVENSON. I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLACK].

Mr. BLACK. Mr. Chairman, since I have been a Member of Congress I have supported every bill that I thought would advance the cause of agriculture. I have done this because I thought it was for the interest of the Nation as a whole.

No other factor has contributed so much to make general prosperity possible in the United States as has the farming industry. Nothing is quite so essential to our future welfare as a nation, as a virile, home-owning, industrious contented rural population.

The measures which we have enacted from time to time to help agriculture have not always come up to our expectations in beneficial results, but I think it may be truly said there is one act which has not disappointed us.

That act is the farm loan act. Passed by a Democratic Congress in 1916 and signed by President Wilson on July 17 of the same year, it has now been in operation about six years.

During that time the 12 Federal land banks have loaned about $700,000,000 to 232,000 borrowing farmers. During the same period of time the joint-stock land banks have loaned about $230,000,000 to approximately 25,000 borrowers. Loans are now being made at the rate of more than $200,000,000 a year. It would be difficult to appraise the vast amount of good which has been wrapped up in this volume of business, in the lowering of interest rates, in providing an amortization plan of payments extending over a long term of years, and especially in making available funds for loans in sparsely settled and less-developed sections where the private loan companies had hitherto declined to go. These real benefits have been made possible, first, by reason of the fact that the law is based on sound and businesslike principles, and, second, because it has been administered in an able, conservative, and forward-looking manner. Naturally, in the administration of a law of this kind, owing to changed conditions and the profits of experience, it has developed there is need for some amendments.

The Farm Loan Board, under whose administration this splendid work has been done, in its several annual reports has recommended that certain amendments be adopted to the law. The gentleman from Kansas [Mr. STRONG] embodied the most important of these recommendations in the bill which he introduced several months ago. Our Committee on Banking and Currency has given full hearings on the bill, and after a painstaking consideration of every provision of the original Strong bill we have made certain important changes and modifications in it and it is now before us in a form which represents the collective judgment of the committee.

I want to notice in the brief time I have some of the major provisions of the bill. First, the bill provides that the expenses of the Farm Loan Board and its employees shall be assessed and paid by the Federal farm-loan banks and the joint-stock land banks in proportion to their gross assets. This is similar to the collection of the expenses of the Federal Reserve Board and its employees from the 12 Federal reserve banks. Inasmuch as all 12 Federal land banks are now on a dividend basis, I see no reason why that should not be done. This reason would all the more apply to joint-stock land banks, which are strictly private institutions under Government supervision. So far as I know it is universally agreed that this is a wise provision. No objection to it has been presented to our committee.

The next provision is one that has occasioned some discussion, and is that provision which provides that in the permanent organization of the Federal land banks there shall be a board of directors consisting of seven members. Under the present act when the permanent organization goes into effect there would be nine directors, six of them known as local directors, to be selected by the farm-loan associations, and three nominated and appointed by the Federal Farm Loan Board. The permanent organization has not yet gone into effect on account of an amendment which Congress adopted when it authorized the Secretary of the Treasury to buy $200,000,000 farm-loan bonds.

The provision we have in this bill is that three directors, known as district directors, shall be appointed by the Farm Loan Board. We also provide that three of the directors shall be elected by the national farm-loan associations. We provide that at the same time the associations elect these three directors they shall nominate three other men, and from that nomination of three the Federal Farm Loan Board will select the seventh director, who shall be known as the director at large and shall be chairman of the board.

Mr. KETCHAM. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLACK. I will yield to the gentleman briefly.

Mr. KETCHAM. In the judgment of the gentleman, where would the actual power to control be vested under that sort of arrangement, where the Federal Reserve Board would select from three the man who, if an issue was closely drawn, would cast the deciding vote?

Mr. STEVENSON. If the gentleman from Texas will permit me, I think it should be stated that they nominate three while the stockholders nominate one.

Mr. BLACK. Whatever director at large is selected must be nominated by the national farm-loan associations and borrowers through agencies. Let me give the reason why I think that is absolutely a fair proposition. We will all agree that the success of the whole system rests upon the ability to market the bonds. The investment public furnishes nineteen-twentieths of all the capital available for loans. The borrowers furnish only one-twentieth, because the law only requires them to take one-twentieth of the amount of their loans in stock. Now, is it not reasonable that the investment public, which furnishes nineteen-twentieths of the capital to operate the system, should have a fair representation through district directors selected by the Farm Loan Board?

Is there anything unfair, I will ask the gentleman from Michigan, in providing that three of these directors shall be appointed by the Farm Loan Board, three elected by the farm-loan association, and one director at large appointed from those nominated by the associations? Where is that unfair? It seems to me not only fair but eminently wise and proper.

Mr. KETCHAM. Fundamentally this is not desired as a measure of relief to the man who wants to invest but to the man who wants to borrow, and his interest is the predominant interest.

Mr. BLACK. How will they borrow unless the investment public buys the bonds? We must protect the system so that the public will have confidence and invest its funds. Once the confidence of the public is shaken in the ability of the management, then the system will go upon the rocks. Some gentlemen do not seem to recognize that fact.

Mr. KETCHAM. The answer to that is that the investing public are buying the bonds in increasing amounts and are happy to get them.

Mr. BLACK. And the answer to that is that up to this time all the directors have been appointed by the Farm Loan Board. [Applause.] Now, let me go further. Under another provision of the bill to which there has been a great deal of criticism directed, it is provided that in cases where the National Farm Loan Association have failed or refused or neglected to function, the Federal land banks may permit the making of loans to eligible borrowers through a direct agent. I will agree with my friend from Texas [Mr. JONES], who spoke awhile ago, that the system, looking at the entire results, has been an eminent success; but there have been counties where the borrowing farmer or those who wanted to borrow have not been adequately served. The system as a whole has functioned remarkably well. We have loaned $70,000,000 to something like 25,000 farmers in Texas. But I have a letter here now, signed by Mr. J. Y. Roberts, who lives in Judge HARDY'S town, secretary of a farm-loan association, who points out an instance where the people of a large agricultural county are not being served.

Here is what he said, and it illustrates the kind of cases that this bill is intended to reach:

> I think where eligible farmers are not being served that the Federal land bank ought to have the authority to remove the secretary-treasurer and put another in his place who would serve the farmers as they should be. There is a great agricultural county adjoining Navarro County with an association at the county seat, and it has been organized four years, and it has closed only eight loans to the sum of $13,000, and not a single loan has been closed in a year.

Mr. Roberts, in an adjoining county, is the secretary-treasurer of an association that has loaned possibly more than any other association in the United States, something more than a million and a half dollars. These instances show how some associations are functioning and some are not. Let me also read from a letter which I received from Mr. M. H. Gassett, president of the Federal farm-land bank at Houston, Tex. He says:

> While the Federal Land Bank of Houston broke all records in December, 1922, in the closing of 1,280 loans in the sum of $3,647,000 and with a promise of closing probably $3,000,000 during January, yet the body of this business came from about two-thirds of our 341 national farm-loan associations in this district. Many associations are inactive, some of them not having placed a loan in a year. Many secretary-treasurers are incapable or indifferent and are wholly failing to afford opportunity to eligible farmers in many parts of this State to avail themselves of Federal land-bank loans. If the Farm Loan Board had the right to appoint agents to operate in territories where there are no farm-loan associations, or where organized farm-loan associations are not functioning, many eligible farmers now being denied our services could receive same.

It is only in cases of that kind that the Farm Loan Board has the right under this bill to appoint agents.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Texas has again expired.

Mr. BLACK. Mr. Chairman, under leave to extend my remarks, I want to briefly refer to the two other major propositions in the bill:

1. The maximum loan limit is increased from $10,000 to $16,000, with a provision that in special cases loans may be made as high as $25,000 upon express approval of the Farm Loan Board. This section of the bill contains a provision requiring that loans under $10,000 shall be given the preference and insures that in times of scarcity of funds the small borrower shall be served first. I especially approve this last-named provision because it safeguards the system to the man it was primarily designed to help, to wit, the small borrower. Personally, I would like to hold the amount to not exceed $16,000, and will support Mr. STEAGALL'S amendment to that effect.

2. The bill provides for joint issues of bonds by the 12 Federal land banks. The original act provided that every time a farm-loan bank had closed loans to the amount of $250,000 it should make a separate offering of its bonds. This provision of law has proven inadequate and unsatisfactory, and this was early recognized by the administrators of the system, and all the banks by resolution called on the Farm Loan Board to handle the sale of bonds in group and in large volume instead of in separate and small issues. The last issue of bonds was $75,000,000, which were sold at par, bearing 4½ per cent interest.

It is the purpose of the pending bill to continue this system of selling the bonds, with some improvements.

It is my very earnest conviction that the adoption of this bill will increase the usefulness of the farm-loan system, and therefore I shall support it.

I am anxious to aid the success of the system in every way that I possibly can.

[By unanimous consent, Mr. BLACK was granted leave to extend his remarks in the RECORD.]

Mr. FOCHT. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for three minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. That can not be done in Committee of the Whole. The time has been fixed.

Mr. BEGG. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. BEGG. How does it happen that nearly every speaker on the floor speaks for the measure? I thought under the rule passed by the House that there was an absolute guaranty that the opponents of the measure would have time allotted them.

The CHAIRMAN. Three hours of general debate was provided for in the rule, and the purpose of the Chair is, as far as possible, to protect the rights of both sides.

Mr. BEGG. Up to date that has not been the case.

Mr. YOUNG. Their rights have not been protected up to this time. We will expect some better attention from the Chair from this time on.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair recognized the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MCFADDEN] for one hour. He is the chairman of the committee. He is in favor of the bill. After Mr. MCFADDEN yielded the floor and reserved the remainder of his time, the Chair then recognized the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. WINGO], who is opposed to the bill.

Mr. YOUNG. But he is for the bill.

Mr. BEGG. I will say that kind of recognition absolutely deprives the opponents of this bill of any time, save one-half of one-half, or one-quarter, and I do not believe the parliamentary situation and the rules of the House permit any such division of time.

The CHAIRMAN. The House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of this bill by virtue of a special rule, by the terms of which debate was limited to three hours, one-half to be controlled by those against it and one-half by those in favor of it. There was no provision and no unanimous-consent agreement as to who should control the time, and under the general rules the Chair had to recognize some gentleman who was in favor of the bill. Pursuant to that policy he recognized the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MCFADDEN]. Subsequently, after Mr. MCFADDEN had used 17 minutes of his time and had taken his seat, reserving the remainder of his time, the Chair recognized the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. WINGO], who rose and stated that he was opposed to the bill. The Chair recognized him for one hour, pursuant to the general rules of the House. It is not within the province of the Chair to order these gentlemen who have been recognized to reallot their time. That is a matter for determination by them according to equity and good conscience.

Mr. BEGG. I raise the question with the Chair in all seriousness, whether, if he recognized some gentleman as against the bill and that gentleman turns around and yields the time to men in favor of the bill, the Chair has not the absolute authority to refuse the floor to that man.

The CHAIRMAN. It has never been done within the history of the Congress, and the Chair would not presume to assume such high-handed authority.

Mr. STEAGALL. As far as this side is concerned, there is no complaint.

Mr. BEGG. I should like to ask one other question. Will the Chair give us a statement as to the time consumed on this measure up to date? We have been debating the measure for nearly one hour and a half, or more than that time.

Mr. DEAL. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. STEAGALL] says that so far as this side is concerned there is no complaint, but I want to join with the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BEGG] in raising a complaint, that the opposition to this bill has not been given the time on this side.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will recognize the complaints one at a time. The gentleman from Pennsylvania had 60 minutes at his disposal. He consumed 18 minutes and yielded 22 minutes, plus 5 minutes, to the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. STRONG].

Mr. BEGG. That is for the bill. That is 45 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. WINGO] had 60 minutes. He yielded 10 minutes to the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. GOLDSBOROUGH], 5 minutes to Mr. JONES of Texas, 15 minutes to Mr. STEVENSON, 5 minutes to Mr. QUIN, 2 additional minutes to Mr. QUIN, and 12 minutes to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLACK].

Mr. BEGG. That makes about 15 minutes of debate against the bill.

Mr. STEVENSON. I desire to say one word. The gentleman continues to wave his hand over here. I have been yielding the time, and I have offered it to every fellow over here who has asked for it, who is against the bill, and some of them are still waiting. I could only yield them time as they wanted it. I can not take them by the nape of the neck and make them speak, and I resent the intimation that we are dealing unfairly with anybody.

Mr. DICKINSON. Mr. Chairman, I call for the regular order.

Mr. STEAGALL. As to the time under our control I yielded——

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair does not think it is within the province of gentlemen to criticize the action of the Chair or gentlemen in charge of the bill. There is one hour of debate after these two gentlemen have consumed their time. It is the purpose of the Chair to deal fairly in this matter, as can be under the existing situation.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman——

Mr. YOUNG. Mr. Chairman——

The CHAIRMAN. For what purpose does the gentleman rise?

Mr. YOUNG. A parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. YOUNG. Is it true the gentleman promised 35 minutes to the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. NELSON] after their two hours are up?

The CHAIRMAN. That is not a parliamentary inquiry.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, if I may be permitted to make a suggestion. There are to be three hours of debate under the rule. Two gentlemen have been recognized. One gentleman is clearly in favor where the other gentleman favors some of its various features, and may I suggest it would be well to yield before the two hours of gentlemen who have been recognized are consumed to a gentleman on the committee who is against the bill—recognize him for an hour and the time then can be divided as the debate goes on.

Mr. McFADDEN. Men against the bill have already had part of the time.

Mr. MONDELL. There has not been any time yielded against the bill. Even with an hour used wholly against the bill the time will be unevenly divided.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is of opinion, in order to avoid further confusion, that the hour of the gentleman from Pennsylvania and the hour by the gentleman from South Carolina had better be consumed before taking up——

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, that is not the ordinary method of procedure. It is not a fair way of conducting the discussion, and if I may be allowed I would suggest that a member of the committee [Mr. MACGREGOR], who is opposed to it, have recognition at this time and yield some time.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Pennsylvania desire to reserve the balance of his time?

Mr. MONDELL. If the gentleman from New York is recognized at this time debate for and against the bill could go on together.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Pennsylvania desire to reserve the balance of his time?

Mr. McFADDEN. I do.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from South Carolina desire to reserve the balance of his time?

Mr. STEVENSON. If I have any time.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman has 10 minutes remaining.

Mr. STEVENSON. I will reserve that.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there any gentleman on the Banking and Currency Committee who is opposed to the bill?

Mr. MACGREGOR. I am opposed to the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will recognize the gentleman.

Mr. MACGREGOR. Mr. Chairman, without desiring to offend the sensibilities of the gentleman from Idaho, this seems to be an attempt to take the intestinal stamina out of the Federal farm loan act. The farm loan system has been in operation for some six years. It has up to the present time loaned to the farmers of the country something like $700,000,000. The total mortgage debt of the farmers of the country is $8,000,000,000. At the present rate of progress, if the doors are opened wide, as is sought by this bill, practically all the farm debt of the country will be within a very few years lodged with the Federal Government. The original proposition, the intention, the idea of the Federal farm loan system was to furnish relief to poor farmers and to reduce tenantry on farms. It was also to inculcate into the minds of the farming community of the country the cooperation idea. Now, this measure seeks to strike out the cooperative idea and to have the Federal Farm Loan Board appoint agents who can make loans directly through the Federal land banks, and it is a very important question as to whether Congress desires to destroy that system, which has been of great benefit, and make it of such a nature that all farm loans of the country shall be practically lodged with the Federal Government and, furthermore, create a vast political machine which will be subject to manipulation by a very few men in the country.

Mr. DICKINSON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MACGREGOR. Briefly.

Mr. DICKINSON. The loan associations of this country, amounting to 4,600, have answered the questionnaire in reference to this agency provision; 1,089 are for the provision and 389 against.

Mr. MACGREGOR. That does not answer the question.

Mr. DICKINSON. It shows they are favorable to it, does it not?

Mr. STRONG of Kansas. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MACGREGOR. The gentleman has had a lot of time, and I think gentlemen in favor of the proposition have had an abundance of time.

Mr. STRONG of Kansas. Does the gentleman decline to yield?

Mr. MACGREGOR. I decline to yield.

Mr. STRONG of Kansas. I thought the gentleman would if he got the time.

Mr. MACGREGOR. Now, under the present system the farmers of the communities are required to get together and present their applications for loans as an organization. They are responsible, each of them, for the loans granted through their organization. The only system of agents at the present time is that some financial institution in a community may be appointed an agent, and then if the agent turns that loan into the Federal farm loan system it must become liable for the loan. Now it is proposed that land banks shall appoint agents who do not have any responsibility so far as the loans they secure are concerned, but they go out through the country scouring the highways and byways as representatives of the Federal Reserve Board for the purpose of securing more loans for this system. There is no liability back of these loans secured through the agents coordinate or equal to the liability created through the association. It weakens the very foundation of the system.

Now, to go beyond that, in the creation of the boards of directors of Federal land banks it enlarges the power of the Federal Farm Loan Board. We have at the present time six directors, three elected by the local associations and three appointed by the Federal Farm Loan Board. Now it is proposed that we shall have three appointed by the Farm Loan Board, three elected from the local districts, and one, who shall be chairman ex officio of the land-bank board, appointed by the Federal land board, and so the Federal land board controls the board.

Mr. STRONG of Kansas. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MACGREGOR. No; I must decline to yield.

Mr. STRONG of Kansas. The gentleman is not stating the facts.

Mr. MACGREGOR. I must decline to yield.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman must not interrupt the gentleman occupying the floor without his permission.

Mr. MACGREGOR. Having the balance of power in the board, having the power to appoint these agents throughout the country, they thereby have an excessive power of control, a control over the very fate of it; and the very amendment contained in the act must necessarily, in my opinion, destroy the local association, because no man is going into an association of farmers and become liable for the mortgages which those associations make when he can go to an agent of the system and secure his mortgage and not assume any greater liability than that entailed in the mortgage itself.

Now, take another amendment, and I speak only briefly to these amendments: With reference to the increase in the limitation of the loan, it was the poor farmer who was sought to be aided by this statute, and $10,000 was placed as the limit of the loan. But now come the farmers of the Middle West, who have inflated the values of their land beyond all comprehension—and they acknowledge it, almost, that they have increased the asking price of these lands in the western country out of all proportion.

Take the situation out in Iowa, for instance, where land worth, two years ago, $95 an acre is to-day appraised at $227, and all through that country they have increased the asking price of their land, and therefore they come in here and ask for a greater allowance for the operation of the land. Up in my country any farmer who had a farm that was worth $50,000 would be regarded as a rich man, and it would not be necessary for him to go to a Government agency in order to secure sufficient funds to finance his operations. [Applause.]

That is how you are going to help the poor farmer! That is how you are going to reduce the number of tenants on farms in this country, by increasing the loan limit! The tendency of an increased loan limit would be to deny to the poor farmer any loan at all, because it will always be easier for these institutions to handle a large loan than a small one, and when a fellow who wants $200 or $300 comes along they will say, "We can not deal with you; we have this fellow, who wants $25,000, to take care of."

That is an instance of the viciousness of this system. The incentive would be to increase the value of these lands by speculation, because they can secure large loans from the Federal Farm Loan Board on farms throughout the West, and in that way they would go on increasing the value, because they would be able to get the money to finance the operation.

These land boards have put out $700,000,000. They have had up to the present time very good success. Two years ago they were complaining that they could not get it out fast enough; that they could not float the bonds. But within the last year they have put out $224,000,000 of it. Seventy-four thousand farm owners during the past year have taken advantage of the system, and it seems to me that that is increasing fast enough for the good of the country.

It is not more credit that the farmers need. It is an outlet for their products. And here they are trying to create more and more debt, and at the same time complain that they are laboring under the burden of present debt.

Furthermore, this creates, as I say, a political machine.

Mr. A. P. NELSON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield there?

Mr. MACGREGOR. No; I can not yield.

It is detrimental to the poor farmer, and it can not be of any benefit whatever to the great farming communities of the whole country. The poor farmer, the man whom we sought to benefit by the original passage of this act, will not be benefited. [Applause.]

Mr. Chairman, I reserve the balance of my time.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York reserves the balance of his time. Seven minutes remain to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MCFADDEN].

Mr. MCFADDEN. Mr. Chairman, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. A. P. NELSON].

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Wisconsin is recognized for five minutes.

Mr. A. P. NELSON. Mr. Chairman, in five minutes it would be impossible to make anything like a comprehensive survey of this bill. I want to speak on one or two features that have been proposed. The first thing I want to address myself to is the increase of the loan limit from $10,000 to $16,000, and under certain provisions and authority of the Farm Loan Board that limit may be increased to $25,000.

It is said this will operate against the poor farmer, and the last speaker, the gentleman from New York [Mr. MACGREGOR], said we are trying here by this extension to take care of the rich man instead of taking care of the poor man. We have provided against that possibility by making the provision that the Federal Farm Loan Board shall give preference to loans of $10,000 and under. Therefore that argument falls of its own weight. And I wish to say further that in this bill we have tried to make the farm loan act operative in the large agricultural centers of the Middle West, where we find that at the present time there is essential need for it in order that the distressing condition of the farmers in that section may be ameliorated.

In the hearings that have been held on this bill and in the statements of the members of the Federal Farm Loan Board and the statements of experienced men who have been out in the field we find all agree and believe that the present limit should be increased and that we should increase the limit from $10,000 to $16,000, and under certain conditions the limit should be increased to $25,000, at the discretion of the Federal Farm Loan Board.

Mr. HUSTED. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. A. P. NELSON. For a brief question.

Mr. HUSTED. Can not the little farmers get all the help they want now under the law as it stands to-day?

Mr. A. P. NELSON. Yes; up to the limit of $10,000.

Mr. HUSTED. The man who does not want a big loan can get all the help he wants under the law as it stands to-day?

Mr. A. P. NELSON. Yes. He can get a limit of $10,000.

Mr. HUSTED. May I ask one more question?

Mr. A. P. NELSON. I have only five minutes.

Mr. HUSTED. This is very brief.

Mr. A. P. NELSON. Very well.

Mr. HUSTED. I want to ask you whether the big farmer who wants a loan of $25,000 and is strong enough to have it can not get all the relief he needs from other sources without any amendment to this act?

Mr. A. P. NELSON. That may be so, but after you have taken care of the small farmer there is no reason why the man who needs a larger loan should not have the privilege of getting it in the Federal land-bank system.

Mr. HUSTED. I do not know about that.

Mr. A. P. NELSON. The other thing to which I wish to address myself briefly is this——

Mr. SINCLAIR. Does the gentleman know there are about twice as many applications for loans pending now as the farm-loan banks can accommodate?

Mr. A. P. NELSON. No.

Mr. BEGG. Are they good loans?

Mr. SINCLAIR. Yes.

Mr. BEGG. I should like to know where they are. There is more money available than there are loans.

Mr. A. P. NELSON. The bond market, I think, is sufficient to take care of all loans, both small and large, where the applications can properly pass the scrutiny of the appraisers and Federal land-bank requirements. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. MACGREGOR. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. MAGEE].

Mr. MAGEE. Mr. Chairman, I desire to make some remarks on the modified proposal of Mr. Ford for the acquisition and lease of Government property at Muscle Shoals. From whatever I may say I trust that no one will draw an inference of any intention on my part to criticize anyone. Mr. Ford, like any other citizen, has the right to submit a proposal to the Government without being criticized therefor, and to drive as hard a bargain as he can. But any citizen has the right to express his views in the premises, a right that I propose to exercise, confining my remarks to the subject matter of the proposal.

Mr. Ford submitted this proposal under date of January 25, 1922. It should be permitted to repose in the legislative wastebasket. An offer is made to form a corporation which will purchase Government property that cost approximately $85,000,000 for $5,000,000, payable $1,000,000 upon the acceptance of the offer and $1,000,000 annually thereafter until the purchase price shall be fully paid, with interest at the rate of 5 per cent per annum on deferred payments. In a communication from the Secretary of War to the Speaker of the House, under date of February 1, 1922, it is indicated that this property has a scrap value of $8,812,000 and a sale value of $16,272,000.

The company agrees to pay $35,000 annually for repairs, maintenance, and operation of Dam No. 2, and $20,000 annually for repairs, maintenance, and operation of Dam No. 3, during the lease period. If a dam should be destroyed by violence, by extraordinary flood, or by any other means during such period the Government would have to replace the same. It is estimated that it would cost $45,000,000 to replace Dam No. 2. This prospective liability of the Government is worthy of serious consideration. The company would pay no taxes on the valuable property leased.

For the purpose of enabling the Government to provide and create a sinking fund to retire the cost of Dam No. 3 at the end of 100 years, the company would pay at the beginning of the fourth year and annually thereafter during the lease period $3,505, and to retire the cost of Dam No. 2 would pay at the beginning of the seventh year and annually thereafter during such period $19,868.

Perhaps the most important provision is contained in section 3, providing for the lease of Dam No. 2 and appurtenances for 100 years for the annual rental of 4 per cent of the actual cost of acquiring lands and flowage rights and of completing the locks, dams, and power-house facilities, but not including expenditures and obligations incurred prior to approval of this proposal by Congress, payable annually at the end of each lease year, the construction work to be performed by the company. It will be apparent that this practically amounts to the Government loaning money to the company for 100 years at the nominal rate of 4 per cent. However, the proposal contains several provisions of material financial advantage to the company, which, when given due consideration, means an actual rate of interest materially less than 4 per cent.

The proposal has not now any binding force, because the Government since its submission has entered upon the completion of Dam No. 2. For work during this fiscal year the Congress made an appropriation of $7,500,000. The Army appropriation bill for the fiscal year 1924 carries an additional appropriation therefor of $6,998,800, and also an authorization to the Secretary of War to enter into contracts for such machinery, gates, or other metal parts and for such materials to be used in the construction of the locks, dam, and power house as may be necessary to prosecute the said project, and not to exceed in the aggregate $10,501,200.

Having in view this declared policy of the Congress and appropriations for the completion of Dam No. 2 and the above provision in section 3 that the annual rental of 4 per cent of the actual cost therein referred to shall not include expenditures and obligations incurred prior to approval of this proposal by Congress, it will be apparent that the proposal is as dead as Julius Cæsar, as it should be, not being at all in the public interest.

The political force in the proposal is found in section 15, which holds out to the farmers of the country a hope that they may be supplied with commercial fertilizer at fair prices. Under section 14 the company agrees to operate nitrate plant No. 2 at the approximate present annual capacity of its machinery and equipment in the production of nitrogen and other fertilizer compounds, said capacity being equal to approximately 110,000 tons of ammonium nitrate per annum, throughout the lease period. Under section 15 the company agrees that the maximum net profit which it shall make in the manufacture and sale of fertilizer products at nitrate plant No. 2 shall not exceed 8 per cent of the actual annual cost of production thereof.

It will be apparent from examination of these provisions in said sections that while the company agrees to operate said nitrate plant at capacity, it does not agree to sell a pound of fertilizer except upon the basis of a net profit of 8 per cent thereon. This nitrate plant No. 2 is a cyanamid-process plant, a process that is now conceded to be obsolete. Under the modern process of extracting nitrogen from the air, power is not a basic consideration. A plant can be constructed anywhere for the fixation of nitrogen at an approximate cost of $4,000,000 or $5,000,000.

It is conceded that the primary power at Muscle Shoals is too valuable to be used for fertilizer purposes. The use of secondary power, being intermittent power, therefore, would have to be supplemented by steam power. A plant thus operated, in the opinion of great hydraulic engineers, could not successfully compete with modern plants using a modern process for the production of nitrogen. (See supplement to House hearings on sundry civil appropriation bill, 1922, 66th Cong., 3d sess.)

No commercial fertilizer has ever been manufactured at Muscle Shoals and, in my judgment, none ever will be. Muscle Shoals is a power proposition. It has never been anything else and never will be. If the Congress should determine to furnish commercial fertilizer to the farmers at reasonable prices, which is most commendable, then the Congress should provide for the construction of modern plants in localities where distribution of products can be readily made. It is futile to attempt to supply the farmers of Kansas, Illinois, North Dakota, Montana, and Oregon with fertilizer manufactured at Muscle Shoals under an obsolete process. However, if Congress is insistent upon entering into a contract with the Ford company and providing for the manufacture of commercial fertilizer at Muscle Shoals, then the contract should require not only the production of nitrogen and other fertilizer compounds at the present annual capacity of nitrate plant No. 2, but also the sale of commercial fertilizer by the company to the farmers of this country, regardless of any profit thereon, and not in excess of the market price thereof.

In my judgment, the hysteria over Muscle Shoals is not worthy of serious consideration. After years of investigation and discussion Congress finally determined upon its policy in reference to water-power development, as set forth in the act approved June 10, 1920. Section 6 thereof provides that licenses under the act shall not be issued for a period exceeding 50 years. No reason can be given why the Congress should now reverse this policy. We should not go along the lines of least resistance. The Government should be administered for the public advantage, not for partisan and individual advantage. It is our duty to tackle the great problems that come before us and solve them solely in the public interest. If we do less than that we fail and insert in the lexicon of the Republican Party a word that Abraham Lincoln struck therefrom more than 60 years ago.

I appreciate that such a solution of the problem would not at all satisfy the clamor of the people individually and selfishly interested in the development of Muscle Shoals. There has existed for some time and still exists an extensive propaganda to induce the Congress to authorize the acceptance of the offer of Mr. Ford. I am informed that within a radius of several miles of Muscle Shoals speculators have prepared maps showing thousands upon thousands of village lots which they have been selling and are still selling throughout the United States at extravagant prices. Nothing would satisfy this individual and selfish demand except tremendous development of Muscle Shoals, including the construction of Dam No. 3 and of Dam No. 1, involving navigation on the Tennessee River.

It is useless to talk about getting satisfactory security for the performance of a contract covering a period of a century. The only adequate security would be a cash deposit, which probably would not be feasible nor desirable. I appreciate that millions and millions of dollars during the war were squandered at Muscle Shoals. However, I am satisfied that at Muscle Shoals exists one of the greatest water-power projects in the world, and that this project, viewed solely from the standpoint of water power, is not a white elephant on the hands of the Government but a great material asset, having a potential value of hundreds of millions of dollars. Several years hence when the Government has completed the project and has an existing property to dispose of the Congress can authorize the Secretary of War to accept the offer that may be of the greatest advantage to the Government, with equal opportunity to all bidders and favors to none.

I predict that there will be no lack of demand for all available water power at Muscle Shoals at reasonable prices. A constantly increasing demand for power will arise within at least a radius of 250 miles. The history of Niagara water power confirms this view. The Niagara Falls Power Co. was the pioneer in developing water power at Niagara Falls, beginning its operations about 1890, when the art was in its infancy. To-day the power at Niagara Falls is insufficient to meet the demands. Much power is obtained from Canada, and large sums have been spent to increase the efficiency of the American plants.

As an illustration of the possibilities at Muscle Shoals, I would remind you that the Government leased for one year from December 1, 1921, to the Alabama Power Co. the steam plant at nitrate plant No. 2. It was found that a complete overhauling and rehabilitation of this plant was necessary, which required four months' time and an expenditure of approximately $40,000. The power company operated and maintained the plant entirely at its own expense, and under the terms of this lease the company paid into the Treasury of the United States to December 31, 1922, $218,273.42.

We must not give away this birthright of the Republic. I make no professions of statesmanship, but if I read history aright no real statesman ever kept his ear to the ground listening for public clamor. Rather, men of vision blaze the trail and clear the way for progress. The foundation of every bulwark ever created affecting human rights that has stood the test of time has been equity and justice. In the disposition of Muscle Shoals I ask for equity and justice for the American people and that the action of the Congress shall be based upon the sole consideration of the best interests of our country.

Mr. WINGO. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. Box].

Mr. BOX. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, it is with considerable hesitation that I disagree with a committee for whose judgment and purity of purpose I have as much respect as I have for this committee. However, such consideration as I have been able to give to this measure makes me unwilling to support it. There are two fundamental objections to it which I will not be able to state in five minutes.

First, it centralizes the power of the whole system in the Federal land bank and the board, and correspondingly diminishes the power of the local associations. My own judgment is that it will result in the destruction of the associations, for it provides an easier method of securing loans through agents in a manner which will weaken the system and the securities it issues. It increases the compensation of agents and removes the liability of agents. It relieves the agent of the obligation to indorse the paper. Here is a thing to which I call attention, which I regard as typical of the spirit of the bill. The same disposition to eliminate the influence and power of the farmer threads through the whole bill. On page 5 of the original farm loan act you have this provision, for instance:

> The directors of Federal loan banks shall have been for at least two years residents of the district for which they are appointed or elected, and at least one district director shall be experienced in practical farming and actually engaged at the time of his appointment in farming operations within the district.

That is in the present law and is carefully eliminated from the proposed amendment, not carelessly at all. That is in keeping with many provisions in the bill. The purpose is to destroy or reduce the powers of the farmer in what should remain a farmers' system. My own judgment is that the effect of it will be to diminish the help it will give to the smaller farmers, the farmers who most need it, and to increase the power and the direct financial benefits of those who are stronger. I think the original act was sound in its purpose. My judgment is that this act greatly emasculates it and that it is very fitting that the bill should go somewhat into detail in providing for the dissolution of the farm-loan associations. In my judgment they will have little office to perform in the future and will pass out of existence.

If provision for them was wisely inserted in the bill as it was written at first, it should remain there at least until it has had a better trial. Certainly it has not demonstrated that it is a failure. The fact that it is there has not destroyed the credit prospects of the concern. It has not destroyed its usefulness, and I greatly fear that the good purpose behind the enactment of the farm land-bank law, which purpose it is serving now, will be in large measure defeated by this amendment to that act. Therefore I shall have to vote against it.

I ask the privilege of extending my remarks in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman asks unanimous consent to revise and extend his remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. WINGO. I yield to the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. HOOKER].

Mr. HOOKER. I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Virginia asks unanimous consent to revise and extend his remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The extension of remarks referred to is here printed in full as follows:

Mr. HOOKER. Mr. Speaker, quite a number of bills have been introduced in both Houses of Congress relative to credit legislation for the agricultural interests of the country. The Senate has passed two of these measures introduced in that body, one commonly known as the Capper bill and the other as the Lenroot-Anderson bill. Several measures have been introduced in the House and referred to the Committee on Banking and Currency, and the bill now under discussion, H. R. 14270, commonly known as the Strong bill, is the only one of the measures thus far reported. This measure has been so rewritten and amended by the very diligent committee which presents it here to-day that it has been shorn of some of its objectionable features and provisions. It is the object of the Strong bill, as well as of all the bills that have been introduced, to amend the Federal farm loan act. As this measure presents itself here, it undertakes to amend the original act in some very important features. One of these, and one that I think is objectionable and should not be adopted and to which I wish to refer, undertakes to amend section 15 of the original act by adding to it, as follows:

SEC. 15. That whenever it shall appear to the Federal Farm Loan Board that national farm-loan associations have not been formed, or the local national farm-loan association fails, neglects, or refuses to serve properly the needs of its territory in any locality, said board may, after 30 days' notice to said associations, in its discretion, authorize Federal land banks to make loans in such territory on farm lands through agents approved by said board.

Such loans shall be subject to the same conditions and restrictions if the same were made through national farm-loan associations, and each borrower shall contribute 5 per cent of the amount of his loan to the capital of the Federal land bank and shall become the owner of as much capital stock of the land bank as such contribution shall warrant.

The Federal Farm Loan Board shall by proper regulations require each Federal land bank to maintain, out of earnings apportionable to stock acquired on loans made through agents, sufficient reserves to cover and pay delinquent payments on such class of loans.

Shareholders in a Federal land bank under this provision shall be held individually responsible, equally and ratably and not one for another, for all contracts, debts, and engagements of such bank to the extent of the amount of stock owned by them at the par value thereof, in addition to the amount paid in and represented by their shares.

Such local agents shall serve at the pleasure of the bank and shall give surety bond for the faithful performance of their duties in such sums as the Federal Farm Loan Board shall prescribe and may collect from each borrower at the time the loan is closed such compensation as the Federal Farm Loan Board may approve, not exceeding 1 per cent of the amount of the loan made, with a minimum of $5 per loan: Provided, That no such agent or secretary of a national farm loan association shall engage in making land-mortgage loans through or for any other land-mortgage company or association.

This amendment if adopted would, I fear, strongly tend to undermine and eventually absolutely eliminate the local national farm-loan association feature of the law. In my judgment the local cooperative associations compose one of the chief features of strength of the Federal farm loan system. Under the present method the loans to farmers are secured by an application going to and through the local association composed of the neighbors of the applicant, all of whom are familiar with the property upon which the loan is sought and know the applicant as well. There is very small likelihood of the loan passing the local association unless it is absolutely all right, when each member of that association is, partially, at least, responsible for the repayment of the loan.

The local associations at present are the owners of by far the greater part of the stock in the Federal farm-loan banks. They are vitally interested in its success. It is their institution; they have the right, or should have the right, to manage it as to them seems proper—certainly when it comes to a question of loans. Likewise they should have the right to select a majority of the directors in the bank of which they are members.

This proposed amendment provides that the local agent which is provided for in this amendment shall serve at the pleasure of the Farm Loan Board. He will be absolutely a creature and an employee of the Farm Loan Board, and the local people will have no power whatever over him. He could approve or disapprove loans at will. He would, under this amendment, have all the powers vested by the law as it now stands in the local associations. He would take the place of the local association—its appraisers, secretary-treasurer, and, in short, have full power over all the applications and loans in his territory. The cooperative feature of the present farm-loan system would disappear under this proposed arrangement. It is contended by the proponents of this amendment that it will not have this effect; that these agents will only be appointed when the local associations are not functioning. In this they are doubtless sincere, but it is almost inconceivable, from a careful study of the system, that this would be the result. As at present operated through local associations, each member thereof is partially responsible for the loans of all the members of that association. Under the proposed amendment the loans would be made direct, or could be made direct through a local agent, and the borrower would have nothing to do with the loans of his neighbors. It would make a strong inducement for borrowers to go around the local associations and go through local agents instead. This feature is being strongly opposed here by many farmers and farm organizations. They see in it the dangers that are here pointed out, and it does seem that their fears are reasonably well founded. This amendment should, I think, be stricken out.

The present farm-loan system has been in operation since 1916 and has proven to be of great value to the farming interests of the country, and from a financial viewpoint at least it has proven successful. An examination of the recent report of the Federal Farm Loan Board reveals a splendid and gratifying record of achievement. It shows that during the past year there were made through this system 74,055 loans, aggregating a total of $224,301,400, representing, the board states, a complete response to the borrowing demands. The report shows that during the year 1922 there was sold to the public farm-loan bonds totaling the sum of $278,650,000. The board during the year voluntarily purchased and retired bonds held by the Treasury in the sum of $70,150,000. The bank was enabled during the year to reduce its loaning rate from 6 per cent to 5½ per cent, and the bond rate was decreased to 4½ per cent. The banks during the year retired Government stock in the total of $2,333,890. The report further shows that during the year 1922 there was sold, because of defaults in payment, 4,174 farms, the total loans on which were $15,000,000; and these farms sold in the aggregate for $39,701,625, showing that the loans on the lands were only 37 per cent of what the lands brought at a forced sale. These figures dispel all doubt that may have ever existed as to the safety of the appraisals of the property on which loans are made and the stability of the system under its present management, applied through the local farm-loan associations. The report shows that all the bonds offered to the public were immediately sold; that, as above stated, the rate to the borrower has been decreased one-half of 1 per cent; that all loans found to be satisfactory were made; that the bank added to its undivided-profits account all the lands purchased at foreclosures and all installments and interest payments more than 90 days overdue; that they paid liberal dividends to the stockholders, added $1,300,000 to their reserve account, and added $1,117,597.76 to their undivided profits account.

A splendid and gratifying record, indeed, that the Federal farm-loan banks have to their credit. The usefulness and stability of this system can no longer be questioned. The system has made good, probably beyond the fondest hopes of its original founders. In its brief career it has met with much stubborn opposition. The right of Congress to establish this system has been vigorously assailed and fought out in the courts, but in the face of all opposition it is shown by its actual operations to be sound and stable and of great value to the agriculturists of the country. Under the present system of appraisals and loans through local associations its bonds are among the best sellers on the market. The board reports that the bonds offered have been immediately bought by investors. The confidence of the investing public in the stability of the bonds is, of course, absolutely vital to the life of the system. It can not be successfully contended that the faith of the investors in the soundness of the bonds would be enhanced by eliminating the local associations and making the loans through local agents.

"Let well enough alone" is an old and true saying, and I think is applicable to the local-association feature of the farm-loan system. The record of achievements by this system in the brief time of its existence, I think, is convincing that if amendments are needed to the original act that the abolition of the local farm-loan association is not one of them. I trust that this feature may be retained in the law and that the farmers in the various localities of the country may retain control, as they now have it through their local associations. There are, of course, defects in this system that should be remedied by Congress, and I trust will be, but I do not regard the local-association feature as one of them.

In examining this measure, the Strong bill, which is now before us, I find one change it proposes to the original act that meets with the approval of the agricultural interests of the country, and that is the proposal to raise the maximum limit of the loan that may be made to one borrower from the present limit of $10,000 to a higher figure. There seems to be some reason and a considerable demand from agricultural sources for this proposed change. It is properly safeguarded in this bill. It is provided that loans shall not be made in excess of $10,000 when loans of $10,000 and under have not been granted. In view of the statement of the board in its recent report that they have no difficulty in securing money to meet all loans, I can see no reasonable objection to increasing the maximum limit, especially when it is proposed to prefer the small loans as against those over $10,000. The original intention of Congress in enacting this legislation was to help and to encourage those farmers of small means who might not be able to secure desired credit from their local banks and to enable those who do not own farms to secure money on long time to purchase the same. I do not think that this proposal to raise the maximum from $10,000 to $25,000 is objectionable, and I should be very glad to see it become part of the law.

In examining the statistics of the Farm Loan Board it seems to me that the system may not be reaching, as yet, as many farmers as it should. For instance, I find from the statistics that in the district that I have the honor to represent here a comparatively small number of farmers are taking advantage of its provisions. I find that in my district only 748 loans have been made by the Federal farm-loan bank since its establishment in 1916 up to October 31, 1922, though the district has a population of over 241,000 and is largely engaged in agriculture. This may be due to the strictness of the Federal appraisements and to the regulations of the farm board, and partly to the fact that the system is comparatively new. I do not believe, however, that the elimination of the local association will increase the number of loans or tend to cause the farmers in greater numbers to take advantage of the provisions of the system.

Let me say further, in passing, that I think the local associations, which are the owners of by far the greater part of the stock of the bank, should have the right to elect a majority of the directors. They own a majority of the stock and I can see no good reason for taking from them the power to elect a majority of the directors. I trust that whatever legislation is adopted by Congress relative to the farm-loan system will leave the local associations intact and will give them the power to select a majority of the directors of the bank. This bill has no provision for short-time credits to farmers, while some other measures that have been introduced and are yet pending before committees have provisions along this line.

There is a strong demand upon Congress to enact legislation whereby farmers may get credit from the farm-loan system on shorter time than the present long-term loan provisions of the law permit and on longer terms than are extended by the National and State banks. Our present banking system consists of the Federal reserve system, including 8,200 national banks; State banks, which number some 20,000, of which about 1,630 have joined the Federal reserve system; the Federal farm-loan banks, with their various local national farm-loan associations; and the joint-stock land banks, of which there are 63. The National and State banks now are the only agencies to which farmers can go for short-time credit. The Federal loan system and the joint-stock land banks furnish the source of long-time credit to farmers. The short-time credits are necessarily limited, particularly in banks of the Federal reserve system, for the reason that paper running longer than six months is not eligible for rediscount with the Federal reserve banks. There is a strong demand for intermediate loans to farmers, loans for longer time than can be reasonably secured from the State and National banks, and for a shorter time than can now be secured at the Federal farm-loan banks or the Federal joint-stock land banks. There is a gap between these two systems which should be bridged. Some of the measures that are pending before the committees here have provisions that undertake to remedy this defect. The bill before us does not in any wise touch upon that feature.

However, Mr. Speaker, I fear that at this session of Congress no legislation helpful to the agricultural interests of the country will be adopted. The Senate has passed the Capper bill and also the Lenroot-Anderson bill, and they are now before the House Committee on Banking and Currency. If we should pass this bill, it will go to the Senate committee and probably in the short time left before the ending of this session receive no action therefrom. The committee of this House has not reported on any of the others presented to it other than the Strong bill. It seems to me that if we expected to enact legislation at this session, considering the brief time that exists before the final adjournment, it would have been wise for our committee to have brought before us a bill that had already received the favorable action of the Senate. The farmers of the country need the aid of proper financial legislation, and have need of it now. Should this Congress adjourn without the enactment of proper legislation for their relief, it will be practically another year before anything can be done, unless an extra session should be called, which is not likely to be done.

But while I am talking, Mr. Speaker, permit me to digress for a moment to say that all the ills of agriculture can not be cured by extending credit facilities only. Giving farmers a more liberal system of securing money to enable them to produce, harvest, and market in an orderly manner their crops will help immensely. But some better method should be devised for the more economical distribution of farm products. There is far too heavy a toll taken of the products of the farm and field between the producer of them and the ultimate consumer. The farmer is suffering from the inadequacy of prices he receives for what he grows, and the village, town, and city dweller who buys and consumes these products is complaining—and justly complaining—of the high prices he has to pay for them. Both complaints are justified by the real facts.

There is necessarily something wrong somewhere when apples that grow in the orchards of Virginia within from 100 to 300 miles of Washington are sold at the orchards at from $3 to $5 per barrel and the consumers of this city have to pay at the rate of from $15 to $30 per barrel. There is something wrong, unequal, and unjust somewhere when the cattle growers of Virginia are getting from 5 to 10 cents per pound for their cattle and the consumers in Washington and other near-by cities are paying from 25 to 40 cents per pound for beef. And what is true of apples and beef is true of all the other products of the farm. This is not the problem and grievance of the farmers only; it is the problem and grievance of all classes of people of the country. For, after all, this tremendous enhancement in the price of the products from the farm to the ultimate consumer touches the pocketbook of every householder in the Nation. One of the contributing causes of this great increase in cost is the very heavy transportation charges. There can be no question but the freight and express rates are heavy and excessive, and the reduction of these whereby farm products could be transported at less cost would greatly aid in alleviating the situation. It is easy to at least partially account for the increased cost of the apples between Virginia and Washington when I tell you that a grower of apples in Patrick County, Va., has to pay $2.28 express charges per barrel to get them to Washington. If a grower produces at any sort of profit, the cost of transportation has to be charged up to the consumer. If he does not, he is producing at a loss. This is an instance that serves to illustrate how high transportation rates militate against both producer and consumer.

Permit me to say one other thing that this Congress could do and should do before it adjourns. The offer made by Henry Ford to take over Muscle Shoals should be accepted. The operation of this plant under Ford's offer would cheapen the cost of the farmer's fertilizers, reduce his expenses, and permit him to furnish his products to the consuming public for less money. It is in this case as in all others, where the farmer is helped the consumer is likewise benefited. So far as surface appearances, at least, go in this House, there remains but little open opposition to the acceptance of the Ford proposition. To those of us who are deeply interested in the Ford proposal great encouragement was felt when the distinguished chairman of the Committee on Appropriations [Mr. MADDEN] recently made a strong statement on this floor favorable to its acceptance. Likewise other leaders on the majority side have expressed favorable views toward the project; but as the days go by and the time for adjournment draws nearer and nearer we are becoming fearful that another session of Congress will adjourn without passing the necessary resolution accepting Ford's proposal. There can be but little question but the sentiment in favor of it is overwhelming in this body, and none doubt if it were permitted to reach a vote on this floor that it would pass; yet, for some reason it is not permitted to be considered here.

No more serious problem confronts the country to-day than the placing of the farming interests on a permanently profitable basis. All classes of people and all lines of industry are vitally interested in the welfare of the agricultural interest of the country. There can be no general prosperity in other lines of activity when the farmers of the country are producing the necessaries of life at a loss. The business of the country can not get back to "normalcy" until the farmers get up with it. It is absolutely impossible to have general, stable prosperity and normalcy in other lines of business when the farmers are producing the necessities of life under losing conditions. If it is the desire of those who control this administration to stabilize business and bring about normal conditions, the effort should begin with the basic industry—agriculture.

Mr. Speaker, let me urge upon the Members of this body the importance of enacting into law before this session ends the much-needed financial legislation being demanded by the agricultural interests of the country and to pass the resolution accepting the Ford offer. These are to-day the most vital and important matters before us, and it will be unfortunate, indeed, for Congress to adjourn without the final passage of these important measures.

Mr. WINGO. I yield the remainder of my time to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. HARDY], in opposition to the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas [Mr. HARDY] is recognized for five minutes.

Mr. HARDY of Texas. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen, I have five minutes in which to speak upon this bill, but the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BOX] has practically said just what I would have said. We have a law on the statute books that has been functioning for some time, and according to my understanding it is admitted that it has functioned well. There has been a vast volume of farm loans placed under the law as it now stands, and the law as it stands now has created more than 4,000 farm-loan associations, through which associations every loan has been placed. There is some complaint that some of these associations are made up of Lutherans, who will not accommodate a Presbyterian. [Laughter.] My county is more liberal than that; we have plenty of Presbyterians, and if they can not get into a Lutheran or a Baptist association they will form one of their own. [Laughter.]

I want to make a prophecy that if this bill goes into effect, in four years from now—yes, in two years from to-day—there will not be a local farm-loan association functioning in the United States. [Applause.]

Mr. DAVIS of Tennessee. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HARDY of Texas. Yes.

Mr. DAVIS of Tennessee. I believe the gentleman is correct, but if they eliminate the best of the farm-loan systems, will not they go forward and establish a cooperative system?

Mr. HARDY of Texas. That may be, but I want to abstain from criticizing the purpose of anyone. If the present associations are given a way by which they can dissolve and get stock in a farm-loan bank, they will do that. Another thing, when they appoint an agent who is paid by a fee and whose fee depends upon making the loan, it is easier to make the loan than through an association where everyone is held in a way responsible for the loan.

Mr. SMITH of Idaho. But the agent does not appraise the land.

Mr. HARDY of Texas. The land may be appraised, but you know, if you have had any experience in land loans and things of that kind, that it is very hard for an appraiser that does not know fully how valuable a tract of land is; if the agent is anxious to negotiate the loan and wants to make it, he will give the preference to the larger loan instead of the smaller loan because he would thereby get a bigger fee. Now I want to say that I question the sincerity of no man who advocates this bill, and as far as raising the limit to $25,000 in those sections of the country where land is high to-day, I have no objection. My sole objection is that the working of this bill will be the dissolution of the local farm-loan associations, and my prophecy is that you will see that to be the case.

Mr. KINCHELOE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HARDY of Texas. Yes.

Mr. KINCHELOE. This agent does not function until after the local association has refused the loan.

Mr. HARDY of Texas. You will not have any local association. Every local association can dissolve and liquidate and get stock of the farm-loan bank. You yourself, as one of 10 responsible for the joint performance of all 10 to the extent of 10 per cent of your stock, would be glad to surrender your stock in the local association and receive in exchange for it stock in the loan bank.

Mr. KINCHELOE. The gentleman is arguing what will be the effect of it and not stating the provisions of the bill.

Mr. HARDY of Texas. That is the effect and I am telling you what I think these provisions will do; what I think perhaps most of the proponents of the bill will admit that it will do.

Mr. McFADDEN. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BEGG].

Mr. BEGG. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, in order not to leave any misunderstanding in the minds of my colleagues I want to say to you that I know something about the operation of the banks, because I have paid for my experience. I am president of a joint-stock land bank. I believe I am better qualified to judge of the effect of these provisions than many who are advocating these measures. I would prefer to have the farm-loan bank continue to prosper and grow than to have happen just exactly what the gentleman from Texas, Judge HARDY, stated would happen in his speech a minute ago, namely, the elimination of the land associations of 10 or more for the purpose of borrowing money. They now are clean competition.

Let us see exactly what is the underlying principle of this farm-loan bank. Availability of money to be borrowed on long-time credit with a security so that the securities can be marketed at a distance in order to get more capital to go back and reloan 1,000 or 2,000 miles away. If you destroy the security of the bonds, if you weaken in any way the security of those bonds you will just as sure, as Judge HARDY said, see the bonds depreciated, and we can not market the farm-loan bonds unless below par.

That is my only selfish interest in this bill. I am frank to admit that I want to defend the market of the joint-stock land bank bonds, as well as I do of the Federal farm-loan bonds, because they are on a par. One does not sell above the other. If you destroy the market for bonds, you have destroyed the source of supply for the borrowing public, and you have ruined the thing that you have created to make available capital for the farmer who needs money on long time and can not get it out of his commercial bank. I think I know a little bit about the banking business, though not much. I know a good deal from the borrower's side, and I am interested in a way in the commercial banking business. I would not want any better bonanza to kill your institution than to be made the agent in my county for the Federal farm-loan bank under this bill that you are undertaking to pass. And why?

You start a farm bank in any community and you can get more applications for business than you can get capital to loan, but when you take your inspector out to find out what those applications represented, you will find that 75 per cent of them are not worth the paper they are written on.

Mr. STRONG of Kansas. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BEGG. I can not yield at this time. Suppose this becomes a law, they can appoint an agent in every county of the United States. Let us look at the thing in a practical way. Who is going to be the agent? You go into my county and you appoint a gentleman who represents a life insurance company or a banker, and if you appoint anybody else you may as well put in a wooden man. If you want an agent in a community, you want somebody who is going to get business; and who is the man who can do that? He is the man who is in touch with the borrowing public, and only those two kinds of men are available. I represent, we will say, a life insurance company—or, better, let us say that I am a banker and that I am loaning money on commercial paper. A good application comes in for a $10,000 loan at a good rate of interest, 6 per cent or 5½ per cent, and do you think I am going to take that over to the Federal farm-loan bank? Not on your life. However, if John Smith, out here in the country, who has a reputation for never paying any of his debts and whose borrowing reputation is bad, whose land is poor and who is starving to death, comes in and says to me that he wants to borrow $10,000 on his hundred acres of land, then I naturally reply to him that I am sorry, that we are loaned up to the limit in my bank, but that I can get it for him, and I refer him to the Federal farm-loan bank, and get my 1 per cent commission. My good friend from Idaho [Mr. SMITH] asked a question a few moments ago. He said, "Yes; but the agent does not appraise."

Do you know that no man on a salary ever did a job of loaning money as carefully as when he is loaning his own money? There is not a man living who can come into my county whom I can not stick on the value of land, because there will be a farm in some part of the county worth $175 an acre, while over the fence the land is not worth $75 an acre. That happens also in Michigan, because we make some loans in Michigan, and I know something about the land there, and I suspect that same thing happens in every State of the Union. After all is said and done, this law was not passed to send the Government out to solicit business, but it was enacted to make funds available to the man who wanted it and could not get it as cheaply or on as long a time as he wanted from any private source. I believe the Government has discharged its responsibility when you make available funds so that the borrowing public can get the money as cheaply as they can get it anywhere in the money market, and on as long a term. I believe the Government has discharged its obligations to the great borrowing public when it has done that, and I do not believe the Government obligation goes to the extent of sending out solicitors to solicit a man to borrow money.

Mr. STEAGALL. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BEGG. Yes.

Mr. STEAGALL. If the gentleman will turn to page 11 of the bill, line 10——

Mr. BEGG. I will ask the gentleman to hurry up with his question.

Mr. STEAGALL. I just want to set the gentleman right.

Mr. BEGG. Oh, I have that page all marked up.

Mr. STEAGALL. I read from line 10, page 11—

Provided, That no agent or secretary-treasurer of a national farm-loan association shall engage in making land-mortgage loans through or for any other land-mortgage company or association.

Mr. BEGG. But a land or mortgage company is not a bank.

Mr. STRONG of Kansas. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BEGG. I yield briefly.

Mr. STRONG of Kansas. Does not the gentleman know that loans made through agents under this bill are inspected in the same way that loans are that are made by agents of joint-stock land banks?

Mr. BEGG. That is not necessary to answer. My colleague from New York answered that a little while ago. I want to get back to my subject. The only thing that makes the Federal farm-loan bank system as successful as it has been is the confidence of the buying public in the bonds of the farm-loan system, and in the stability of the security. What have they done in this amendment they are seeking to put through? It is an amendment to provide for the soliciting of business from the borrowing public.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

The committee informally rose; and Mr. LONGWORTH having taken the chair as Speaker pro tempore, a message from the Senate, by Mr. Craven, its Chief Clerk, announced that the Senate had passed without amendment the bill (H. R. 13128) authorizing an appropriation for the construction of a road within the Fort Apache Indian Reservation, Ariz.

The message also announced that the Senate had agreed to the report of the committee of conference to the bill (H. R. 13481) making appropriation for the Department of Agriculture.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed the bill (S. 3973) to remit the duty on a carillon of bells to be imported for the House of Hope Church, St. Paul, Minn., in which the concurrence of the House of Representatives was requested.

FEDERAL FARM LOAN ACT.

The committee resumed its session.

Mr. MACGREGOR. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from North Dakota [Mr. YOUNG].

Mr. YOUNG. Mr. Chairman, I want to add one word to what the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BEGG] has said, in reply to the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. STRONG], who said that the joint-stock land banks act through private agents, and that because, as he claimed, the joint-stock land banks act through private agents the Federal land banks can safely do it. There is an essential, a fundamental difference. The joint-stock land banks are owned by private individuals. The men who manage them are themselves the owners of all the stock. These privately owned concerns, when they send out agents to do business for them, act the same as a big privately owned loan company does, like an insurance company does. It is idle to say that the Federal land banks, which are managed by men who have not a dollar invested in the banks, can do business through agents, appointed sometimes for political reasons, with the same safety as the joint-stock land banks who function through privately appointed agents.

The gentleman from Kansas [Mr. STRONG] says this system was patterned after the German system. There was a good deal of talk at the time this law was first passed that it was fashioned after the French and German systems, but the most important thing that made the systems of those two countries successful was never adopted here at all, and that was for these banks to permit deposits from farmers. The time came in Germany and France when they got more money on deposit for loaning to farmers than they got out of the bonds they sold. That made these concerns real farm banks, where the farmers themselves could have something to say about making rates. It was their bank. They were in large part loaning their own money. Whereas the original bill introduced here years ago provided for deposits, it was cut out later by the committee and not reported to the House. Just so long as the farmers have a system such as we have here at this time that does not permit deposits, all they can do is to sell their credit. The rates of interest are going to be made by somebody else The rates are going to be made by men who have money to loan.

The farmer is going to be in the position he is in when he tries to sell anything, and that is the other fellow fixes the price. According to the present law the farmers are not permitted to make deposits and they are not permitted to own stock excepting while they are borrowers.

Mr. Chairman, to my mind the best safeguard of the present system is going to be stricken down if we pass this bill, which provides for the creation of private agents who can take the business away from the loan associations because they can relieve the borrowers from much of their liability.

Mr. STEVENSON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. YOUNG. I have not the time. I can not very well. And if you take over the business of these local associations, you take away the best safeguard we now have against losses. Why do men invest their money in these bonds at this time? Because they know that every man who makes application for a loan is being watched by his neighbors. He knows the neighbors have to guarantee that loss to a certain extent. That is the safeguard, that is the thing that has made these bonds sell. There is no question about it. The men of money in the United States, who have money to invest, are not going to invest in a proposition unless it is sound. The reason they have bought these bonds is that they know that they have something better than the agent who goes out, who may be fooled or who may be dishonest; better than the safeguard of that agent who inspects the farm land is the safeguard furnished from the fact that his neighbors must go on his paper and guarantee the loss. The privately appointed agent is bound to get the business. That is very clear, because he can tell the borrower that he is only going to be liable on his 5 per cent of stock in case the Federal land banks in the United States fail. I will ask some gentlemen who defend this bill to get away from that fact if they can.

Mr. STRONG of Kansas. What is that? I am ready.

Mr. YOUNG. The privately owned agent can tell the borrower that he has 5 per cent of liability, not only as against the default of his neighbors but also in case of the failure of the land banks. Whereas if they do business through the agent, what might be called his liability for the default of his neighbors? He will get the business.

Mr. Chairman, under the present law the borrower becomes liable if any default occurs in his own neighborhood. That is what inspires confidence and sells the bonds. That is why men like HOMER SNYDER, a hard-headed business man, buy the bonds. They buy them because they know men living in the locality have an interest in scrutinizing every loan, because if there is a default in the interest of a neighbor he becomes liable on his stock.

Mr. SNYDER. Since the gentleman has mentioned my name, regardless of how many of these bonds I have bought, I want to say that he is making a splendid statement and I agree with every word of it.

Mr. YOUNG. There is obsolutely no question but that the agent can get all the business, because he can show every farmer he has a very remote liability on the 5 per cent of stock so far as the chance of the Federal land bank becoming insolvent is concerned. It is only in case the Federal farm-loan bank failed that loss will be incurred. No loan association can do business against that kind of argument. It will offer a competition that will be deadly. It will destroy the association. The local association will undoubtedly be wiped out, and when that is wiped out the bonds will fail to sell in the United States, and when the bonds fail to sell the farmers can not borrow. So you are striking a deadly blow not only against the loan associations but against the farmers themselves. And you people of the East who have bought these bonds, you should hesitate to take action which may depreciate the value of the land-bank bonds now in the hands of your constituents.

The key to the success of the present system is the local association.

It is a question of whether the man who borrows will be liable to that association and liable to a certain extent for the debts of his neighbor farmers, or whether he is going to be relieved of that liability and have only that remote liability by reason of the possibility that the big Federal farm-loan bank will fail, and which the ordinary farmer believes, at least, will never break.

Now, I want to suggest again: A farmer can not put a price on anything he sells. He can not put a price on anything he buys. The price is put on the things the farmer buys by those who make those things. On the contrary, on what they sell to the other fellow they can not fix a price. When it comes to the question of the farmer's personal credit, there also the rate of interest is fixed by somebody else. And so long as we can not get a better arrangement than this, to my mind it is very essential for the farmers that the security they have to offer, that the credit they have to sell is put in a form that will be the very best, that will offer the very best security, and therefore command the very lowest possible rate of interest.

Now I will yield to the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. STRONG] if he wishes to ask me a question.

Mr. STRONG of Kansas. No; I do not care to, except to say to the gentleman that the members of the Farm Loan Board who came before our committee, in the presence of the 12 farm-loan banks all insisted that this does not do away with the farm-loan association.

Mr. YOUNG. The gentleman may have been fooled, just as he claims the rest of us have been fooled by the letters we have received from our districts.

Mr. STRONG of Kansas. By propaganda.

Mr. YOUNG. I think it is just as inexcusable to be fooled by members of the Federal Farm Loan Board or those in the management of the Federal land banks as it is for some of us to be fooled by farmers who write to us. The gentleman from Kansas [Mr. STRONG] has not convinced me that the members of his committee possess a greater degree of intelligence than the rest of us.

Mr. STRONG of Kansas. Will the gentleman yield there?

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from North Dakota has expired.

Mr. McFADDEN. Mr. Chairman, I yield to the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. McLAUGHLIN].

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Nebraska is recognized.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Nebraska. Mr. Chairman, introductory to my remarks on the pending bill I wish to read a resolution recently adopted by the Nebraska Legislature on the 15th day of January, 1923. The resolution is as follows:

THE LOAN LIMIT OF THE FEDERAL LAND BANK SHOULD BE INCREASED TO $25,000.

Resolution.

Whereas the agricultural and live-stock industries, being the chief productive industries of Nebraska, are seriously threatened and endangered by reason of the general depression in values; and

Whereas there exists an urgent need among owners of land devoted to agriculture and ranching activities throughout Nebraska for loans in excess of the present limit of $10,000 to any one person, which amount is entirely inadequate for purposes of restocking the ranges, and now in force by the Federal land bank system in the district in which Nebraska is situated.

Resolved, That the House of Representatives of the State of Nebraska calls upon the Representatives in Congress for the State of Nebraska and urge the Representatives in Congress and other neighboring States similarly situated as in Nebraska in regard to this problem to direct their best efforts toward securing authority, through national legislation, empowering the Federal land banks to raise this limit to the sum of $25,000 to any one landowner or borrower; and be it Ordered, That attested copies of this resolution be sent by the clerk of the house to the Senators and Representatives from this State in Congress and to the Federal land banks at Omaha and Lincoln.

LINCOLN, NEBR., February 13, 1923.

I hereby certify that the foregoing resolution passed the Legislature of Nebraska at the forty-second session held in the city of Lincoln on the 15th day of January, 1923.

_____,
Chief Clerk of the House.

It has been my conviction for the past four years, as many Members of the House know, that the Federal farm loan act should be amended so as to permit maximum loans of $25,000. The sentiment in this direction has grown within that time until the demand for the increase on the part of the Federal farm land banks and the farmers is unanimous.

The success of the Federal farm-loan banks has been so pronounced that any doubt concerning the workability and practicability of the system no longer remains. The contention of those who have argued in the past that the banks should be made to serve only the small borrowers is, in my judgment, without foundation at this time. The resources and possibilities of the Federal farm-loan system are such now that with the restrictions removed the entire agricultural borrowing needs can be served. Nothing human is perfect, and it is no discredit to those who drafted and passed the Federal farm loan act that restrictions were placed in the measure which proved a handicap rather than a help, and I hope, since the imperfections have been discovered, that this Congress will have the wisdom to remedy them.

In the State of Iowa the farm units which pay the largest returns average 240 acres to the farm, and the average value of land, including buildings, in the State of Iowa is $227.09 an acre, making the value of a 240-acre farm $54,000. Many hundreds of farms in the State of Iowa have a greater value than $54,000. The average-sized farm in the State of Iowa is 156.8 acres. Inasmuch as the Farm Loan Board has restricted loans on any farms to a maximum of $100 an acre, it follows that a loan of at least $15,000 is necessary to take care of the average Iowa borrower, while thousands of farmers having the larger and more profitable unit of 240 acres can not be accommodated unless they can borrow at least $25,000. The average value of the farms in Iowa is $38,941, so that the present $10,000 limit is wholly inadequate to serve the needs of the Iowa farmers. The average value of a South Dakota farm is $37,837; Nebraska, $33,771; and Nevada, $31,546. This large value of the average Nevada farm is due to the fact that the average farm acreage or unit in Nevada is 745 acres, but the man on the larger number of acres stands in just as great need of a long-time loan at a low rate of interest as the man on the small farm.

Under the present farm-loan system 141,000 farms in Illinois, 24,000 farms in Iowa, 59,000 farms in Minnesota, 23,000 farms in Texas, and 25,000 farms in Missouri can not receive any benefits of the Federal farm loan act. Figures with reference to a score of other States would be in the same proportion. The experience of the Federal farm loan banks since the law has been in operation shows that it is necessary to make loans in the more highly developed agricultural sections of the country in order to properly take care of the smaller farm units in the less productive sections of the country. Loans only to those sections of the country where land values are low and production limited result in a loss rather than a profit.

Bond offerings necessary to take care of the small loans must be floated in the more highly developed agricultural sections and the profits made on loans in the more highly developed sections are sufficient to make up the losses sustained on the lesser loans, so that it is positively necessary to the future growth and success of the Federal farm loan banks that the maximum loan be raised to at least $25,000 in order to serve the needs of even the smaller farm units in an economic manner.

The experience of the Federal Land Bank of Omaha, in the eighth district, is no doubt similar to that of the other district banks. The benefits of the Federal Land Bank at Omaha can best be illustrated by comparing it with the joint-stock land banks operating in the same territory and which receive their funds from the same source—from the sale of tax-free bonds. The following table is based upon the amount of loans now on the books of the Federal land bank. The rate of interest on joint-stock land bank loans is figured at 6 per cent, as that is the rate of all loans in joint-stock land banks up to about three months ago:

Average rate of interest, Federal land bank loans ($6,000,000 at 5 per cent, $20,000,000 at 6 per cent, and $49,000,000 at 5½ per cent)—per cent	5.59
13 per cent dividend reduces net interest to borrowers—per cent	.31
Net rate for year 1922, Federal land bank loan—per cent	5.28
Joint-stock land bank rate—per cent	6.00
Making a difference in rate in favor of Federal land bank borrowers of—per cent	.72
72 per cent of $75,000,000 (amount of Federal land bank loans)—annually	$540,000
After paying 13 per cent dividends in 1922 there remained net profits on hand for the year of	208,000
Total saved Federal land bank borrowers, year 1922	748,000
Total saved Federal land bank borrowers in five years	3,744,000

It will be observed from this statement that borrowers in the Federal land bank at Omaha save seventy-two one-hundredths of 1 per cent per annum, which amounts to an annual saving of $540,000 on the $75,000,000 in loans. When there is added to this the additional profits of the bank for the year 1922 amounting to $208,800 after paying a 13 per cent dividend, we find an actual annual saving to the borrowers of $748,800 per annum. In five years this will amount to $3,744,000. What excuse can be offered for the Government giving joint-stock land banks the privilege of tax-free bonds and then protect them from competition by the Federal land banks on loans above $10,000, thus making it necessary for borrowers who need more than $10,000 to pay seventy-two one-hundredths of 1 per cent per annum more for a loan than they would pay through the Federal land bank? I desire to place in the RECORD here the concrete case of William G. Hall, which is only one among many that could be cited in various parts of the country.

William G. Hall is a farmer living 6 miles south of Massena, Cass County, Iowa. He is 53 years of age and a widower, his wife having died nine years ago. His family consists of eight children, four boys and four girls, as follows: Irene, age 30; Bernard, 24; Stella, 22; Gladys, 20; Lloyd, 17; Frank, 15; Clifford, 13; and Evelyn, 11. Evelyn was only 2 years of age when her mother died, but Mr. Hall, with the help of his older daughters, kept his family together and has made an effort to keep them all at home. Irene is married and lives in Minnesota; the rest of the family are at home.

Mr. Hall started farming for himself shortly after his marriage, when he was 21 years of age. He tells me that he had not a thing but a span of horses and some farm machinery. He rented land for awhile and afterwards had a chance to buy 80 acres on time at $31.50 an acre. Later he traded that 80 acres for 160 acres close by.

Mr. Hall is a hard-working, thrifty man and a first-class farmer, and with the help of his family and by close application and economy he managed to finish paying for his 160 acres about five years ago. His older children had then grown up and he could not keep them all employed on the 160-acre farm. He rented some adjoining land for awhile, but about that time found it impossible to rent anything close by, so he was up against the proposition of letting his boys leave the farm and hire out, and his daughters also, or buy more land. Like all good farmers should, he wished to keep his boys on the farm. He knew that if he did not have work for them they would soon drift to the cities where wages are higher. He knew that the boys would not stay on the farm unless there was some good prospect of their becoming farm owners themselves.

Land had become high, and he knew that the only way they could become farm owners was for them to buy more land while they were all working together as one family, go in debt for it, and work together until it was paid for. So he found an opportunity to trade his 160-acre farm at $225 an acre for a 400-acre farm, on which he now lives, at $200 an acre. His present farm is a good one, has always been well kept, and suits him very well. He farms it all with his own help; he does not hire a dollar's worth of labor. He and his family get up at 5 in the morning, milk the cows, do the chores, get out in the fields early, give good attention to his live stock; and, while they work hard, they are happy and contented with the thought that in the course of time, with good fortune, they can get out of debt, and when the boys and girls get married and start out in life they may become farm owners and people of standing and influence in the community in which they live. There is not a family in Cass County, Iowa, that takes better care of their farm and live stock, or are better neighbors, or stand higher in the community in which they live, than this Hall family.

In making the trade for this 400-acre farm Mr. Hall assumed mortgages amounting to $42,000, bearing 5 per cent per annum, maturing March 1, 1922. Those loans became due March 1, and Mr. Hall has been looking about during the past six months to find as good terms as possible for renewing the loans. A life insurance company offered to renew one $32,000 loan at 6 per cent, with a commission of $1,120. His banker told him, however, that he thought money rates would be better, and that later on he might be able to get a loan of $40,000, which was the amount he now needed, all in one loan at a better rate than 6 per cent; at least, that the commissions would be smaller. Temporary arrangements were made March 1 through his local bank at Massena, Iowa, to allow the present mortgages to stand for a few months.

In endeavoring to secure the best rate of interest and the best terms of renewal on his farm loan, Mr. Hall recently called upon Wray Wilson, secretary-treasurer of the Massena National Farm Loan Association, to see if he could secure a loan through the Federal Land Bank of Omaha, and the following conversation took place between him and Mr. Wilson:

Mr. HALL. Mr. Wilson, loans amounting to $40,000 are due on my farm, and I wish to get a new loan. What rate of interest is charged by the Federal Land Bank of Omaha, which you represent?

Mr. WILSON. The Federal land-bank rate is now 5½ per cent. The Federal land bank is owned by borrowers and is operated on the cooperative plan. All profits belong to borrowers, and the net profits are amply sufficient at the present time to reduce the interest rate to a net rate of 5 per cent to borrowers.

Mr. HALL. How do you figure that out?

Mr. WILSON. The Federal land-bank bonds are now selling at 4½ per cent. The experience of the Federal Land Bank of Omaha for the last five years shows it can operate on a margin of ½ per cent; that is, ½ per cent of the amount of loans in force will pay the operating expenses of the bank and a dividend to the borrowing stockholders equal to the interest charged by the bank. Another ¼ per cent is amply sufficient to cover annual reserves that should be laid aside as a surplus or safety fund. The cost of operation, ½ per cent, added to ¼ per cent for reserves plus the bond rate of 4½ per cent makes a 5 per cent loan rate to borrowers.

Mr. HALL. I understand that a borrower must purchase stock in the Federal land bank amounting to 5 per cent of his loan. Are the affairs of the Federal Land Bank of Omaha in good condition?

Mr. WILSON. Yes; a recent statement of the Federal Land Bank of Omaha shows that with $64,000,000 in loans in force May 1 there was only $1,630 interest past due more than 90 days. It has never had a foreclosure. All of the activities of the bank are under control and supervision of the Federal Farm Loan Board, a bureau of the United States Treasury.

Mr. HALL. I understand you to say that the net interest costs to a borrower of the Federal land bank is now 5 per cent per annum.

Mr. WILSON. Yes; Federal land-bank bonds sell at 4½ per cent, and ½ per cent is amply sufficient to pay expenses, accumulate reserves, and return to borrowers the interest charged on their stock.

Mr. HALL. Well, that is by far the best loan that I can get. I have tried everywhere during the last six months. You may take my application for a loan of $40,000.

Mr. WILSON. I am sorry, Mr. Hall, but the Federal Land Bank of Omaha is not allowed to loan more than $10,000 to one borrower.

Mr. HALL. Is that so? I am greatly disappointed. Your description of this loan looks so good that I hoped I would not have to look further.

Mr. WILSON. Yes; the terms of our loan are good also. It is on the amortization plan. By paying 3½ per cent of the principal semiannually for 34½ years, your loan will be paid in full, principal and interest. You would have the right also to make additional payments on the principal any time after five years. By paying a small bonus, the privilege is usually given of making payments before five years.

Mr. HALL. Well, this is surely disappointing. I thought I could get a loan under the Federal farm loan act.

Mr. WILSON. Well, you can get a loan under the Federal farm loan act through a joint-stock land bank.

Mr. HALL. What is a joint-stock land bank?

Mr. WILSON. Joint-stock land banks are corporations organized with private capital for profit, by authority of the Federal farm loan act, to make loans. Although the cooperative Federal land banks are not allowed to loan to one borrower more than $10,000, joint-stock land banks may loan any amount up to $50,000 to one borrower.

Mr. HALL. Are there any joint-stock land banks making loans in this territory?

Mr. WILSON. Yes; there are several of those banks that make loans in Iowa.

Mr. HALL. What rate of interest do they charge?

Mr. WILSON. Their interest rates to borrowers are the same in all joint-stock land banks, 6 per cent per annum.

Mr. HALL. Does the borrower share in the profits of the joint-stock land banks?

Mr. WILSON. No; all the profits of joint-stock land banks belong to the stockholders of those banks.

Mr. HALL. I would have to pay 6 per cent interest per annum then to a joint-stock land bank without any reduction in any way?

Mr. WILSON. Yes; 6 per cent per annum semiannually during the term of the loan.

Mr. HALL. I would save $400 per year then if I could make my loan with the cooperative Federal land bank?

Mr. WILSON. Yes; and in addition the accumulated profits in the Federal land bank would also be loaned out and help to reduce the net interest cost still more. In the course of time the income on the accumulated profits of the Federal Land Bank of Omaha will be sufficient to pay all the expenses of the bank, and loans can then be made to borrowers at the same rate that is paid by the Federal land bank on its bonds.

Mr. HALL. From what source do the Federal land banks and the joint-stock land banks obtain funds to make farm loans?

Mr. WILSON. They both obtain funds from the same source; namely, from the sale of their bonds to investors.

Mr. HALL. Are the bonds of the Federal land banks and joint-stock land banks exempt from taxation?

Mr. WILSON. Yes; the bonds of both kinds of banks are alike exempt from taxes of all kinds—Federal, State, municipal, and local. Bonds of both Federal land banks and the joint-stock land banks have equal privileges under the law. Both are declared by act of Congress to be instrumentalities of the Government. The bonds of both bear the certificate of authority of the Federal Farm Loan Board.

Mr. HALL. Now, according to what you say, I lose $400 a year, or $4,000 in 10 years, by not being allowed to get my loan from the Federal Land Bank of Omaha. Who gets this $400 a year or $4,000 in 10 years? What benefit does the Government obtain from me having to pay this $400 a year?

Mr. WILSON. This $400 a year, or $4,000 in 10 years, extra cost to you goes to the stockholders of the joint-stock land bank of whom you obtain your loan. The money is obtained from the sale of tax-free bonds in both cases, so there is no advantage to the Government in either case.

Mr. HALL. Why, then, should I pay this tribute of $400 a year, or $4,000 in 10 years, to the joint-stock land bank?

Mr. WILSON. I have asked that same question hundreds of times and have never gotten a satisfactory answer.

Mr. HALL. If Congress would amend the Federal farm loan act to allow Federal land banks to make loans up to $50,000, the same as the joint-stock land banks, I would not then have to pay this tribute of $400, or $4,000 in 10 years, to the joint-stock land bank, would I?

Mr. WILSON. Of course not. Farmers would all get their loans where they could get them the cheapest. There then would be open competition between both classes of banks. Now the farmers' cooperative Federal land banks are not allowed by law to compete with the joint-stock land banks, which are organized by private capital for profit, in loans above $10,000.

Mr. HALL. You say that both Federal land banks and joint-stock land banks obtain funds for loans from sale of tax-free bonds. The Federal land bank makes loans for 5 per cent per annum, while the joint-stock land banks charge 6 per cent per annum. The joint-stock land banks must make large profits.

Mr. WILSON. Yes; I understand they do make large profits. The First Joint-Stock Land Bank recently advertised the sale of $700,000 additional stock, which they sold at $135 per share, with a par value of $100. In their prospectus advertising sale of this stock they stated that the bank has always paid dividends at the rate of 8 per cent per annum. Stock issued at par, $100, three years ago is now worth $135, a profit of $35 per share in three years, or about 12 per cent per year, which, added to the anual dividends of 8 per cent, makes an annual profit on this stock of 20 per cent. I understand that the president. Guy Huston, and Vice President Schee are each paid salaries of $25,000, making $50,000 annual salaries for both of those officers. Other salaries are in like proportion. The entire operating expenses of the Federal Land Bank of Omaha for the year 1921 were only $112,295. This includes all salaries and expenses, including appraisal costs, and expenses of attorneys in examining titles. The annual salaries of two officers of the joint-stock land bank was almost half as much as the total annual expenses of the Federal Land Bank of Omaha.

Mr. HALL. Does the law restrict in any way the profits of the joint-stock land banks?

Mr. WILSON. The only restriction is that the joint-stock land banks shall not charge borrowers more than 1 per cent above the interest rate on their last bond issue.

Mr. HALL. You told me awhile ago that the Federal land bank bonds sell at 4½ per cent. How, then, do joint-stock land banks charge 6 per cent on farm loans?

Mr. WILSON. The First Joint Stock Land Bank of Chicago recently sold a large issue of 5 per cent bonds at 103¼, which would be the same as a bond bearing 4.6 per cent for the 10-year period until the bonds are callable. This, of course, would be a spread of 1.4 per cent per annum between the bond rate and the farm-loan rate. Loans are now being made by that bank at 6 per cent per annum on the 33-year amortization plan. Any time after 10 years the 5 per cent bonds can be called in and new bonds issued in their place, probably at a much lower rate.

Mr. HALL. Is not such a transaction an evasion of the law prohibiting more than 1 per cent per annum between the bond rate and the mortgage rate?

Mr. WILSON. Mr. Huston, president of the First Joint-Stock Land Bank of Chicago, has the reputation of being a prominent financier. Perhaps he would call the transaction referred to a bit of successful financiering.

Mr. HALL. Now, I find that I lose $400 per year, or $4,000 in 10 years, by being forced to make my loan through the joint-stock land bank and not being allowed to make my loan through the Federal Land Bank of Omaha. How can the law be changed to save me this $4,000?

Mr. WILSON. By an act of Congress amending the Federal farm loan act.

Mr. HALL. Congress made this law as it is, did it not?

Mr. WILSON. Yes.

Mr. HALL. Do you think Senators and Members of Congress would be willing to change the law if they learned of the great injustice being done to the farmers like myself?

Mr. WILSON. Repeated attempts have been made by hearings before the Banking and Currency Committees of the House and Senate to have the law amended, with no results.

Mr. HALL. For what purpose was the Federal farm loan act made a law?

Mr. WILSON. The act states that it was intended to furnish better credit facilities to farmers.

Mr. HALL. It seems to me it should be entitled "An act for the benefit of stockholders of joint-stock land banks."

Mr. WILSON. It does seem to work that way.

Mr. HALL. Are there not many men situated like I am, who would be saved large sums of money if they were allowed to make loans through the Federal land banks instead of being obliged to make loans through the joint-stock land banks?

Mr. WILSON. There are thousands of men like you who are prevented from obtaining loans in the Federal Land Bank of Omaha by reason of this $10,000 maximum loan limit.

Mr. HALL. Would not Congressmen and Senators listen to an appeal of those men to remedy this unjust provision of the law?

Mr. WILSON. Congressmen and Senators would listen if those borrowers were organized and had some one to earnestly present their case in Congress.

Mr. HALL. Do the joint-stock land banks have anyone to look after their interests?

Mr. WILSON. Yes; the 35 joint-stock land banks in the United States have a national association and maintain a highly paid and expensive lobby at Washington to look after their interests. Mr. Guy Huston, president of the First Joint Stock Land Bank of Chicago, is president of this national association.

Mr. HALL. You mean that they use the excessive profits that men like me are compelled to pay to influence legislation at Washington against my interest?

Mr. WILSON. Yes.

Mr. HALL. What would you advise me to do?

Mr. WILSON. If I were you, I would write to every Congressman and Senator from Iowa, telling him your case plainly, and ask him if he will do anything to help you; if not, why? I would write to the farm papers asking them to invite their readers who are situated as yourself to write Congressmen and Senators also. I would take the matter up with the Farm Bureau Federation, farmers' union, and other farmers' organizations. I think if public opinion, especially among the farmers, was thoroughly aroused, Congressmen and Senators would give some attention to amending this law and allow farmers like yourself to obtain their loans through their own cooperative land banks and thus save themselves millions of dollars annually that are now going into the pockets of stockholders and officers of joint-stock land banks.

Mr. HALL. In what manner would an increase of the maximum loan limit of the Federal land banks affect small borrowers?

Mr. WILSON. The Federal land banks handle applications and make loans to large and small borrowers alike. They now operate on a very small margin of expense. There is just as much expense in making a $500 loan as making a $50,000 loan; by increasing the size of the average loan the margin of expense would be reduced, thereby greatly benefiting the small borrower.

Mr. HALL. I lose $400 per year by not being allowed to enter the cooperative Federal land bank. Now, my oldest son, Bernard, is of age, and I have agreed to pay him wages while he works with me on the farm. The prevailing rate of farm wages here is $35 per month and board for nine months. He does work out part of the time and turns his wages back to me to help meet our payments. Now, my son Bernard would have to work a whole year at that rate to pay for this extra $400. When the war broke out Bernard was one of the first to enlist. The other boys were small then, and I did not like to spare them, but I did not think it right to prevent his going when the Government needed his services. Now, as I understand it, the Government is, by act of Congress, obliging one of my boys to work a whole year for the benefit of the stockholders of a joint-stock land bank.

Mr. WILSON. Yes; that is true.

Mr. HALL. How can this be remedied?

Mr. WILSON. Congress can remedy it by amending the act.

Mr. HALL. Do you mean to say that our Iowa Congressmen, whom we farmers have elected to represent us, are allowing this thing to continue? How can they allow one of my boys to work every year for 10 years to pay this $400 per year to the stockholders of a joint-stock land bank when I could have saved that amount by getting my loan through the farmers' cooperative Federal land bank? What can we do about it?

Mr. WILSON. Secretary-treasurers of all the national farm-loan associations in the Omaha land-bank district recently held a meeting at Omaha. They discussed the things that you and I have talked about. They decided that there was only one way to secure relief, and that was to form an organization of secretary-treasurers and with their united strength and with the help of the farmers that are members of their national farm-loan associations bring the matter forcefully to the attention of Congress. We formed an association of secretary-treasurers and each agreed to pay out of his own pocket, as they are not allowed to use association money, one-fifth of 1 per cent of the capital stock of the association of which they are secretary-treasurers. This fund will be used to enlighten farmers regarding the true situation. A number of farm papers have agreed to help us. There are thousands of men in this district who are situated just as you are. Their cases will be reported, and every farmer in Iowa, Nebraska, South Dakota, and Wyoming will know the true situation. We think by this way some results will be obtained. We have given up all hope of getting results in any other way. It was decided upon at this meeting of secretary-treasurers that efforts should be centered upon a program for the accomplishment of three things:

First. An increase in the loan limit, giving farmers the right to choose whether they obtain their loan through a cooperative Federal land bank or through a joint-stock land bank. They should not be kept out of the Federal land bank and forced to obtain a loan through a join-stock land bank.

Second. The experience of the Federal Land Bank of Omaha shows that the interest rate to borrowers can be safely reduced to 5 per cent per annum. By reducing the rate to 5 per cent per annum, other loan institutions will be obliged to make the same rate, hence it is much better to reduce the rate directly to 5 per cent than to make a 5½ per cent rate and return the extra earnings in dividends, making a net 5 per cent rate. We will ask that the farm loan rate be reduced to 5 per cent.

Third. The term of one member of the Farm Loan Board expires in September, and an effort will be made to prevent the appointment of any man on the board who is not friendly to the farmers' cooperative Federal land banks.

Mr. HALL. You say that the term of one of the present members will expire September 1, and that his successor will be appointed very shortly.

Mr. WILSON. Yes.

Mr. HALL. Is it important that members of the Farm Loan Board be friendly to the Federal land banks?

Mr. WILSON. Yes; the Federal Farm Loan Board at present appoints the officers and directors of the Federal land banks. They establish the rate of interest to charge borrowers. They have complete control of all the activities of the Federal land banks. It is very important that members of the Federal Farm Loan Board be in earnest and be sincere friends of the cooperative Federal land banks.

Mr. HALL. Who are the candidates for appointment on the Federal Farm Loan Board to fill this vacancy?

Mr. WILSON. Captain Smith, the present member, is from Iowa and a candidate for reappointment.

Mr. HALL. Has Captain Smith been friendly to the Federal land bank system?

Mr. WILSON. I understand that he has been, and is a very good friend of the farmers' cooperative Federal land banks.

Mr. HALL. Are there any other candidates for this appointment?

Mr. WILSON. Yes; the Iowa delegation in Congress has recommended Willis Stern, of Logan, Iowa, for this position.

Mr. HALL. Who is Willis Stern?

Mr. WILSON. He is abstractor at Logan, Iowa, and has been for the past 10 years or more a member of the Republican State central committee for the ninth congressional district.

Mr. HALL. Is Mr. Stern friendly to the Federal land banks?

Mr. WILSON. He has been closely associated with his brother, Almor Stern, for over 30 years. Almor Stern has the most extensive farm loan business in Harrison County, which business he has been engaged in for over 30 years. Almor Stern is a member of the American Farm Mortgage Bankers' Association, which has fought the Federal land bank system ever since it has been established. When the Logan National Farm Loan Association was organized about five years ago, Almor Stern made every possible effort to discredit its organization. He even placed an advertisement in the Logan Observer, which stated in effect that the 5 per cent stock taken by a borrower making a loan in the Federal land bank was so much commission paid on the loan. He has been the most bitter enemy to the Federal land bank system in Harrison County. While we can not prove any personal act of hostility by Willis Stern against the Federal land bank, he has never turned his hand to help introduce or establish the system.

Mr. HALL. Are there not men in Iowa whose record is conclusive evidence that they will be friendly to the Federal land bank system if they are appointed to the position?

Mr. WILSON. Yes; there are hundreds of able, energetic men, who are faithful and true friends of the interests of the farmers of Iowa, who would make excellent members of the Farm Loan Board.

Mr. HALL. Why is not a man of that kind recommended by the Iowa delegation and appointed by the President?

Mr. WILSON. The recommendation and appointment seems to be based more as a reward for political services than from the standpoint of the good of the farmers of Iowa.

Mr. HALL. Don't you think that the farmers of Iowa should be informed of the way their interests are being endangered by members being appointed on the Federal Farm Loan Board that are not friendly to their interests?

Mr. WILSON. That is one of the things that this organization of secretary-treasurers of national farm-loan associations has in mind.

The Federal Land Bank of Omaha has paid dividends from the start of at least 6 per cent per annum, a part of the time 8 per cent, and during the past year 10 per cent, with an entra 3 per cent cumulative dividend, making a total of 13 per cent for the year 1922. In addition to this the bank has $500,000 in reserves, as required by law, and $208,800 in undivided profits, all of the reserves and undivided profits belonging to the borrowers and being loaned out for their benefit. The percentage of cost of operation is annually becoming lower. The latest bonds, which bore 4½ per cent, furnish the cheapest money ever available for farm purposes in the Middle West. The cost of operation is about one-fourth of 1 per cent per annum, which makes it possible to loan to the borrowers at 5 per cent net.

I am at a loss to understand why some of my colleagues argue that the farmer on a farm valued at $50,000 or $60,000 should be compelled to go to a joint-stock land bank or insurance company or some private loan company and pay 6 per cent or more for his loan, while at the same time the man living on a $10,000 or $15,000 farm should be permitted to use the Federal farm land banks and secure an amortized loan at 5 per cent. Proportionately, the man on the more valuable farm is in just as great need and in just as hard circumstances as the man on the smaller farm, and experience out in the Central States convinces me that often the owner of the larger land unit is in even greater need of a loan than the one who has the smaller unit, and since it has been proven that all can be taken care of if the restrictions are removed, in my judgment there is no excuse for further delay on the part of Congress.

While the question of the constitutionality of the act was under consideration there was justification for delay, but since the act has been declared constitutional and since recent experience shows that the Federal land-bank bonds are in great demand, there can be no further excuse for delay in increasing the maximum loan from $10,000 to $25,000.

An offering of $75,000,000 of 4½ per cent Federal land bank bonds was sold at par on the first day they were placed on the market in the spring of 1922. Again, on September 24, 1922, $75,000,000 more of 4½ per cent bonds were sold at a price of 101½, the entire issue being subscribed during the forenoon of the day the sale was conducted. In the face of this record can anyone consistently doubt that sufficient funds can be raised at any time to supply the entire borrowing needs of agriculture?

This movement for the increase of the maximum loan from $10,000 to $25,000 has been approved by the great majority of the farm organizations of the country. As early as 1917 the Federal Farm Loan Board made the following statement in their annual report:

> Moreover, in some sections where land values are high and farms are expensively equipped, many farmers, if they need to borrow at all, need to borrow more than $10,000. Such loans are often exceptionally well secured and desirable, and there seems to be no sound reason why the Federal land banks be prohibited from handling these loans. We, therefore, recommend that the Federal farm loan act be amended by striking out "$10,000" and inserting in lieu thereof "$25,000."

Again, in the second annual report, dated November 30, 1918, we find the following words:

> Experience indicates the very decided advisability of a modification of the minimum and maximum amounts of loans which were fixed in the act at $100 and $10,000; we are strongly of the opinion that these limits should be made $500 and $25,000.

Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Nebraska asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania is recognized.

Mr. McFADDEN. Mr. Chairman, I yield to the gentleman from North Dakota [Mr. SINCLAIR].

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from North Dakota is recognized.

Mr. SINCLAIR. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen, I simply want to ask unanimous consent to extend and revise my remarks in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from North Dakota asks unanimous consent to revise and extend his remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The extension of remarks referred to is here printed in full as follows:

Mr. SINCLAIR. Mr. Speaker and gentlemen of the House, it seems to me to be ill-advised at this time for the Congress to attempt to amend a law that has functioned so well for the brief period since it was enacted. We should remember that this law was created during the most abnormal time in the world's history. Ever since its passage the World War and its effects have upset all economic conditions. Yet we find from the report that the system placed nearly a quarter of a billion dollars' worth of loans to farmers during the past year. This is the largest year's business done in its history and nearly one-third of the total business done by the Federal land banks since their organization.

In the face of this record, however, the proponents of this bill (H. R. 14270) known as the Strong bill give as the principal reason for its adoption that the Federal farm loan act is not functioning properly and that the amendments proposed in the bill are urged in order to make the law more workable. In my judgment, the law has never been given a fair chance to operate and has only now come through the organization stage and is prepared to handle the business in such volume as its supporters claimed for it when the system was adopted.

There has been loaned to 232,543 farmers the aggregate sum of $684,407,289, an average loan of slightly less than $3,000 each. There have been so far no losses and very few foreclosures, notwithstanding the calamitous period through which the farmers of the United States have passed the last two years. Loan mortgage companies that have been in business for 25 years have not such a splendid record as this. Great credit is due the men who have been in charge of the work in the several land banks. They have acted conservatively in the placing of loans. Many of us in the Northwest think they have been too conservative, but the extent of the safety in the operation of this business has not been due all to management but also to the excellent protective provisions of the act itself. The capital stock of the several land banks is provided for by 5 per cent subscription from the amount of the loan extended to each borrower. This gives every one of the borrowers an interest in the bank. At the present time these borrowers or stockholders have paid into the capital and surplus about $36,000,000. There remains but $3,000,000 of the capital advanced by the Government originally to the banks to be repaid by the stockholders. In other words, the farmers own 90 per cent and the Government 10 per cent of the present capital of the 12 Federal land banks. This system is really a big cooperative—the largest in the United States. Consequently, the theory underlying the present law, and I believe the purpose of the incorporators of it, was to have the Government teach the farmers who needed loans to pool their credit cooperatively, and thus obtain farm loans at the lowest possible rate of interest.

Instead of the Government's becoming more and more paternalistic and exercising greater power over the system, the idea was that the Government should gradually withdraw from the system, until finally it might have only advisory and supervisory powers. H. R. 14270 contemplates just the reverse of this, and in my opinion is repugnant to the whole theory on which the Federal farm-loan system is founded.

There are two outstanding reasons why this bill, seeking to amend the farm loan act, should be defeated. First, it will take the control of the system entirely out of the hands of the farmer stockholders, and place it in the hands of the Farm Bureau here in Washington. Through the system of agents, provided for in one section of the bill, this bureau could and would become the most far-reaching political machine ever yet devised. No advocate of this bill has as yet satisfactorily answered the question of the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. KETCHAM] as to where the actual control of the several land banks would be vested under the proposed plan of nominating directors. It is not doubted in the minds of any that if this bill becomes a law the power to control the policy of the banks will be centralized in the Farm Loan Board. The farmers who paid in the $36,000,000 capital will find that they have furnished all of the money, and will have the least to say as to what will be done with it.

Second, the appointment of agents to solicit business and make loans direct to farmers will destroy the local farm-loan associations because of the lessened liability of the borrower. At this time every loan must be made through a local association, and each member of the association is liable for the default of any other member. This provision not only insures a more conservative valuation of the property offered as security for the loan but in addition it requires a higher standard of integrity among the applicants. These features are not overlooked by the bond buyers, and they are one of the strong factors in lowering the rate of interest on the loans. Of course, a borrower would prefer to get his money direct, without further liability for his neighbor; so all the new business would be done through agents, even though the associations were allowed to continue. Eventually the loans so made would be less and less desirable to bond buyers and a higher rate of interest would be exacted. This would be true because it would be the natural desire of the agent to make bigger loans and more of them in order to earn a larger commission for himself. But the worst feature of this arrangement, from the standpoint of the borrower, would be the destruction of all cooperative progress made in the past five years. If the problems of the farmer are to be solved and his condition improved in order to keep pace with modern business advancement, not only must he hold fast to the measure of cooperation already obtained but it is imperative that he organize into cooperative units for the purpose of marketing his entire product and controlling his credit.

The Government can pass emergency legislation to give temporary relief, but the fundamental basis upon which future prosperity for agriculture must depend will come through self-help methods. It is the business of Congress to provide the necessary legislation to enable the farmers' cooperative organizations to control their own business. The proposed measure, if enacted, would be a backward step.

The statement has been made that opposition to the Strong bill arises from mere propaganda. I have in my district 90 Federal farm loan associations. From these I have received over 60 letters, representing as many associations, condemning on behalf of the members this bill in the strongest terms. I would like to inquire of those making the above statement whether such an expression, coming directly from the farmers themselves, who are the ones most vitally concerned in the matter, is "mere propaganda." I for one give them credit for being alive to the dangers confronting them in the passage of such a measure. I am informed also that many other Members of Congress have received protests from their associations. I most earnestly hope that the Congress will protect the interests of the farmers by defeating this bill.

Mr. McFADDEN. Mr. Chairman, how much time have I?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman has 11 minutes remaining.

Mr. McFADDEN. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. LUCE].

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Massachusetts is recognized for 10 minutes.

Mr. LUCE. As a member of the subcommittee which redrafted this bill it probably behooves me to say a word in its behalf. As in the case of all important legislation involving much detail, this bill is a compromise. It contains things which, if taken singly, would in many instances not have been acceptable to those who undertook the work of bringing their minds together. I have failed to hear this afternoon a single criticism or objection which did not receive earnest and lengthy consideration by those who undertook to work out a solution. Many hours were passed in considering these very objections, and when we at last reached an agreement it was with the knowledge on the part of every one of us that, could he have written the bill himself, it would in some detail have been different.

There is, of course, in such a juncture as this a grave danger that gentlemen will allow their objections on the score of individual particulars to overweigh other features that they may grant are advantageous. I dwell on this simply in order to assure you that those who have spent days and weeks in trying to reach agreement have, in my judgment, been assiduous, earnest, conciliatory, and working for the public welfare. In this matter we have been constantly in touch with the Farm Loan Board. This very admirable system was blessed by fortune in that it was put into the hands of a remarkably public-spirited group of men, who have been zealous to the extreme in attempting to perform their duties in a way that would carry out the will of Congress and benefit the people.

They include in their number some exceptionally able administrators, and under their guidance and with their advice we have reached this conclusion that we lay before you. Time does not permit me to answer arguments in detail. In the few minutes at my command I would address myself to one general phase of the situation. I find myself in almost complete accord with what was said by our fellow member of the committee [Mr. MACGREGOR] and others who have regretted to see here what they think is an end to the association idea. I heartily agree with the gentleman from North Dakota [Mr. YOUNG]. They fail to recognize the facts of the case. They are unable to see that this association idea will not be killed by this bill. The trouble is that the association idea is already dead, or at any rate moribund. The figures show that not one of these associations in ten can secure the attendance of a quorum at an annual meeting. They show that as soon as men receive their loans they lose all interest in the association. There are a few that are trying to carry out the original purpose of the law. I would that the critics of this bill had devoted their time and energy to devising a remedy. They should have recognized that the original purpose of the system has been thwarted, that we are all disappointed because the cooperative idea has not herein succeeded. I have my own views as to the remedy. I wish time might permit me to tell you how in my own State we have saved the cooperative idea. I would extol the desirability of injecting into this system the principle of thrift. It seems to me the attempt at cooperation was foredoomed, because the system as put into effect confined the local investment of the money to those who borrow, because it did not have recourse to such supplies of capital as exist in every town, village, and hamlet in the country, because it did not enlist the cooperation of philanthropic citizens, the townsfolk, the merchants, the professional men who joined with us in our cooperative banks in Massachusetts in cultivating cooperative thrift.

I think that is the great weakness of the system. But as it is, with the system not accomplishing what it was meant to accomplish, our duty as practical men is to meet the facts of the case, and the facts of the case, in my judgment, can warrant no other conclusion than that which we have embodied in these changes that we lay before you.

Mr. HUSTED. Is the system functioning well at the present time?

Mr. LUCE. In my judgment the system is not functioning as its founders contemplated, as I say it might function, and as I would be glad to have it function.

Mr. HUSTED. Is it functioning prosperously at the present time? That is, are they making loans and meeting all demands?

Mr. LUCE. The system is functioning prosperously, using the word as a financier uses it. It is not functioning prosperously from the philanthropic point of view. It is not reducing tenantry, it is not helping large numbers of young men to acquire farm holdings.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. MACGREGOR. Mr. Chairman, how much time remains?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MCFADDEN] has one minute remaining and the gentleman from New York [Mr. MACGREGOR] has 25 minutes remaining.

Mr. MACGREGOR. I yield 25 minutes to all who are opposed to the bill excepting myself. As I understood it the time allotted to me was for the use of those who are opposed to the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman was recognized in opposition to the bill for one hour.

Mr. MACGREGOR. Gentlemen on the other side of the aisle desire to use some time, and I want to yield to the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. STEAGALL], who is against some features of the bill, but I do not want him to yield to those who are in favor of the bill.

Mr. WINGO. I understand the gentleman is going to use all the time himself. Possibly that simplifies the situation.

Mr. STEAGALL. I am going to yield five minutes to the gentleman from North Dakota [Mr. BURTNESS].

Mr. MACGREGOR. Is the gentleman going to yield the balance of the time to those on his side who are opposed to the bill?

Mr. STEAGALL. I am going to use the other 20 minutes myself.

Mr. MACGREGOR. I yield to the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. STEAGALL] the balance of my time.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York yields 25 minutes to the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. STEAGALL].

Mr. STEAGALL. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from North Dakota [Mr. BURTNESS].

Mr. BURTNESS. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen, it is impossible for me to give you my views with reference to all the provisions of this bill in five minutes. There are a number of provisions in the bill which I think are very meritorious and which I trust I may have an opportunity to vote for, but there are some provisions, and at least one, in the bill which to my mind are so vicious and which so change the present system that I can not possibly vote for the bill unless it is substantially amended when the bill is read under the five-minute rule.

First, I want to touch briefly on the provisions relative to the appointment of agents. I commend the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. LUCE] for the fact that he is at least, as I view his remarks, frank with the House, for he has conceded, as I gather the import of his remarks, that in his opinion the associations are failing to perform their duties, and for that reason it is desired eventually to do away with the associations altogether and to allow all the work in the future to be done by agents who may be appointed, and that this is the beginning of a movement to that end. Other speakers on behalf of this bill have denied that proposition upon the floor and have contended assiduously that this bill would not tend to destroy the associations either in the immediate future or eventually. I want to say to you that there is no question in my mind that if we are to appoint agents to any appreciable extent such system will operate to destroy the associations eventually, and I can not help believing that such was the intent of the bill in the first instance. I refer, of course, only to section 5 of the bill. I think that contention is amply sustained by the provisions which are found in the first two bills that were introduced upon this proposition, including the bill which was first favorably reported by the Committee on Banking and Currency, H. R. 14041, which was reported to the House, for in that bill you find absolutely no safeguards whatsoever relative to the appointment of agents.

Under the provisions of that bill, by the same author and favorably reported by the committee, an agent could be appointed without any showing whatsoever to the effect that the associations were not functioning in their respective communities.

Mr. STRONG of Kansas. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BURTNESS. I have not the time to yield.

Mr. STRONG of Kansas. The gentleman is mistaken, that is all. I rose to correct the gentleman.

Mr. BURTNESS. An agent under that bill could be appointed any time, as desired by the board. Several safeguards have, however, been inserted in this bill. Suggestions have been made to the effect that loans can not now be made in certain quarters. That is true, but I submit to you that in most of the cases it is not due to the way in which the business of the associations is managed, but rather due to the fact that the demand for loans has been much greater than could possibly be met by the system. Let me read to you a portion of a letter from a very able and active secretary-treasurer of one of these associations in my State. He says this:

> As suggested before, there have been and are still in force rules which hamper the associations from functioning properly and which prevent them from taking care of the demands for loans originating in their territories. The first of such rules is the arbitrary allotment of a limited number of applications per year to each association. Last year each association was allotted 20 loans when we should have had at least 300. The year before we were allowed 8 applications to handle at least 200 requests. This arbitrary rule, of course, prevented the association from meeting the demands made upon it for loans, but no rational person can blame the association for that.

I think if you investigate each case where complaint is made that an individual farmer has been unable to get some attention you will find that as a rule the cause is not the failure of the secretary-treasurer or of the association but, rather, due to the fact that they have so many demands for loans that they could not put them all through. I appreciate the fact that once in a while you will find some secretary-treasurer who will not give a square deal to his community. He sometimes plays favorites, he may be lazy or incompetent, he may not be interested in the clientele of an opposition bank, he may allow petty and personal prejudices to warp his judgment. I have no objection to attempt to remedy the defects found so long as we do not create worse ones. I think it should be made plain to every officer of an association that he must not play favorites; that he must deal fairly with every applicant, no matter who he may be. But is it proper and advisable to-day to do away with the fundamental principle that underlies this legislation—this entire farm-loan system as I understand it to be—and proceed in such a way that in the future the cooperative associations will be at an end and displaced by agents anxious to make loans for the commissions provided? For instance, if there is any community where an association is not giving applicants a square deal or is not doing business, the Federal land bank could send out some tactful representative to investigate and see what the trouble is; and if the people of one church have formed an association and refuse to allow the people of another denomination to get into that association, it ought not to be difficult to proceed and get another association organized to take care of the demands.

It may be that eventually we will find that associations can not function permanently and that all the business should be done through agents. Surely the record of the system defies any such suggestion at this time. If that time comes, we can meet it. I do not believe that we can have agents and associations working side by side without making formations of new associations impossible. Oh, they reply that when new borrowers are taken care of through agents 10 of them can later form an association. Remember that the borrower's incentive to do so is gone the minute he gets his money. Ninety per cent of the borrowers are not interested in their investment in the stock of the bank—they connect themselves up with the system because they want a loan. Unless he becomes a member of an association when he gets his loan not one out of a hundred will become so later.

Let me quote from a letter written me by Mr. Samuel Torgerson, a prominent resident of my district and a member of the executive council of the St. Paul Land Bank. He writes:

> We had a meeting of the executive council of the Federal Land Bank of St. Paul somewhat over a week ago for the purpose of discussing certain amendments and new legislation with reference to the land bank. Of the six amendments proposed, we favored all except the last one. This we unanimously voted to oppose. The reason is this: The amendment provides that loans can be made through agencies as well as through local associations. The result of that would be that all loans would practically be made through agencies hereafter and the local associations with their cooperative feature would be destroyed. We all felt that this was a radical change in the methods adopted, and that the cooperative feature is a very favorable feature to safeguard loans and make the success of the Federal land bank assured.

Lack of time prevents my quoting from other practical business men, bankers, and farmers who have contact with the system as it works in the field.

If a member of the committee does not do so, I shall move to strike out all of section 5 at the proper time. Let us retain the opportunity for these associations to increase and develop in the future if for no other reason than as lessons in cooperation for our farmers. If they learn to cooperate in their associations where they have made at least a fair start it will be easier for them in a larger field. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from North Dakota has expired.

Mr. STEAGALL. Mr. Chairman, I yield two minutes to the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. WINGO].

Mr. WINGO. Mr. Chairman, I was not in the room when the gentleman from Texas [Mr. JONES] made his statement or I should have made this statement that I am now about to make at that time. I regret very much the misunderstanding and display of temper upon my part. I wish to express to the committee my regret and for my violation of the proprieties and the rules of the House. I thought I had made a frank and manly statement of my position with reference to the control of time, and I thought the gentleman from Texas was questioning my good faith, so naturally resented it. I understand that he says that that was not the case. I join with him in expressing regret to the committee for the occurrence. [Applause.]

Mr. STEAGALL. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, I appreciate fully the great benefits of the farm-loan system and I have high regard for those in charge of the system. It is a source of regret that I do not agree with them in all their views. I am opposed to one of the provisions in this bill. I favor the bill in other respects in its entirety. The basis of my objection and my only objection to the measure is the amendment governing the maximum amount of loans which Federal land banks are permitted to make.

The original law fixed the maximum amount of loans at $10,000. The present measure under consideration sets $16,000, generally speaking, as the maximum amount of loans which the banks are permitted to make, and adds a proviso that loans may be authorized by the Federal Farm Loan Board to the maximum amount of $25,000 where, in their judgment, the application discloses that the loan is for proper purposes and that its allowance will be beneficial to the cause of agriculture. Stated briefly, the bill authorizes the raising of the maximum amount of loans from $10,000 to $25,000. I do not think this change is wise or that it will redound to the promotion of the purposes for which the farm-loan system was established.

The farm-loan banks were granted the privilege of issuing tax-free securities. They were granted other governmental favors in the matter of salaries and expenses of some of the officials of the system, aid was extended by the Government in providing capital stock for the initial capital stock of the various land banks, and other Government aid to set up the system and keep it going. We justified the participation of the Government in this system and the favors shown it upon what I believe to be grounds of sound public policy and national welfare, the underlying thought being to take care of the small farmer and to make it possible for the ever-increasing horde of tenant farmers in the country to purchase farms and become home owners and home builders. I think the favors shown by the Government in the establishment of the Federal land-bank system were entirely and fully justified, but I question seriously whether we ought to increase the maximum amount of loans to be made 150 per cent at this time, when the system may be said to have barely been started and set going. I fear we may get away from the purpose to care for the needs of the small farmer or tenant who is trying to become an independent home owner. Until his needs are supplied we can not risk the success of our efforts in his behalf to aid the owner of a farm worth $50,000. That is what a man would have in to order to obtain a loan of $25,000.

Mr. TILSON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STEAGALL. Yes.

Mr. TILSON. Is it a fact that the total amount to be loaned is strictly limited so that an unlimited number of larger loans can not be made?

Mr. STEAGALL. I do not quite catch the gentleman's question.

Mr. TILSON. In other words, will the raising of the limit to larger loans take all the money that is available?

Mr. STEAGALL. I am coming to that. We provide that preference shall be given to applications for loans of $10,000 and under, which upon its face might seem to take care of the small borrower or the small farmer. But gentlemen who have kept informed of the progress and development of the farm-loan system and difficulties in the way in recent years and during the time following the decision of the Supreme Court in which the validity of the statute was involved, will remember that the demands of the system as it now exists far exceeded the ability of the banks to take care of their applications for loans. The validity of the act was sustained, I think, in February, 1921, and in May the first bond issue was sold to the extent of $40,000,000. At that time the banks had applications for loans aggregating a much larger amount. Later on they sold $75,000,000 of bonds, but at that time they had something like $150,000,000 of applications for loans. The representatives of the Farm Loan Board came before our committee, and stated to us when we were making efforts to put the system to going and to provide methods by which the banks might take care of the applications for loans—representatives of the Farm Loan Board insisted that they could not successfully arrange for the sale of bonds in amounts exceeding $75,000,000 quarterly.

That was one of the reasons the system was allowed to drag as it did for a year and a half after the decision of the Supreme Court—unable to take care of the applications for loans filed under the provisions of the existing law. Therefore I do not think the time has come—if, indeed, it ever will come—when it is wise to venture to increase to $25,000 the maximum amount of loans. It was frequently stated by those in position to advise that the bond market would not absorb a greater amount of bonds than was being issued. I know that since that time conditions have improved. I am not sure that these statements were entirely accurate at the time. I am sure that a much greater issue of bonds can be absorbed by the market now than has been. But it has only been a little while since the land banks had large accumulations of applications for loans that could not be supplied. It is a very recent thing that the banks have been able to meet demands on them. I am not prepared to say that if you open up this system to all the mortgage loans in the United States, which amount to some seven or eight billion dollars as I recollect, that we might not easily exhaust the demand for bonds and find ourselves unable to supply funds to take care of anybody's loan, whether large or small, and if we get into that condition, which I think entirely possible, the provision of the present bill that preference shall be given the small borrower will be of no value.

You can not take care of the big fellow nor the little fellow unless you have the funds. Let us not forget, too, that bankers all recognize that it is much more risky to loan a certain sum in a large amount to one borrower than to divide the same sum into a number of small loans to small borrowers. I can not see my way clear to undertake the burden involved and which I think will certainly follow change in the law raising the maximum loan to $25,000. For that reason, as a member of the Committee on Banking and Currency, I have reserved the right to oppose that part of this measure.

I think there is some misunderstanding regarding the other provisions of the bill. I know, or at least I am impressed with what I hear, that the provision which I oppose is probably the most popular provision of the bill, but in my judgment it embodies a dangerous and unwise change in the law. The next most important amendment, perhaps, is the one which authorizes loans to be made directly to borrowers through agents, and, to be frank, I hesitated at the beginning of the consideration of the bill to agree to that provision. I think, however, it has been safeguarded so as to take care of or remove many of the objections that have been urged against that change in the law. It seems to have been overlooked or misunderstood, and I want to call attention to what was done with that particular amendment. Gentlemen urge that borrowers, through associations, become liable in double the value of their stock in the farm-loan associations. That is true, and I recognize the advantage of it as it affects securities to be issued. An association represents only a small number of men, say 10 borrowers, and one man is therefore liable under the association system only to the extent of any loss that might be involved through the default of any one of the other 10 men. But in the plan for direct loans we have incorporated the following provision:

> Shareholders in a Federal land bank under this provision shall be held individually responsible, equally and ratably, and not one for another, for all contracts, debts, and engagements of such bank to the extent of the amount of stock owned by them at the par value thereof, in addition to the amount paid in and represented by their shares.

So that, instead of having an association of 10 men, or having a system by which one borrower is liable in double the amount of his stock for any default upon the part of 10 men, we make each man under the direct system liable for twice the value of his stock for the default of any of the borrowers in the whole land-bank district, so it will be seen that, instead of having destroyed all effort at association, the bill automatically forms an association among all of the direct borrowers and make each one liable to the extent of twice the value of his stock for the loan of every other direct borrower in every State, county, and section of his land-bank district.

Mr. JONES of Texas. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STEAGALL. Yes.

Mr. JONES of Texas. While the liability in each instance is the same, will not you by making that change lose the interest which each man of the local association takes in seeing that the other man's loan is properly safeguarded and well secured? In spreading it out over so great a territory, he will not be so much interested in his neighbor's loan.

Mr. STEAGALL. That is made up for by the fact that, instead of having a handful of men in one community responsible one for the other, you have the direct borrowers of the whole system each liable for the loans of every other in double the amount of his stock, and so far as protecting the bonds is concerned—and I admit that that is not the only consideration that enters into the matter—it is a bigger and stronger and better associaion than any farm-loan association ever organized.

Mr. STEVENSON. And you have in addition to that a reserve created out of the profits.

Mr. STEAGALL. Yes; you have that in addition to the double liability of each direct borrower on his stock.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STEAGALL. Yes.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I would like to have my colleague's opinion of the criticism here that the effect of this amendment would be to destroy a number, if not all, of the local associations organized under existing law.

Mr. STEAGALL. I know that is the argument made against this provision of the bill, and I grant the gentleman that I think the tendency will be in many localities for men to secure their loans through agents by the direct method, and yet this amendment provides that the provision for loans through agents shall not go into effect where farm-loan associations have been formed and are functioning, and before an agent is authorized to make loans notice is given to the community that they may form associations if they see fit to do so. As a matter of fact, so far as I have observed or been able to ascertain, the association feature of the system has not worked so well as a great many people expected it would, and in many localities farmers are suffering for the accommodations provided by the land-bank system and they are not getting them under the present farm-loan association system.

Mr. HARDY of Texas. Is not the gentleman mistaken in saying that they must give notice to the community? That notice is to the land-bank association, where there is one, and if there is no association there they do not get any notice.

Mr. STEAGALL. The gentleman is entirely correct, but it amounts to notice to the community.

Mr. STEVENSON. And if there is no land association, then, under the law as it stands to-day, they can immediately appoint an agent.

Mr. HARDY of Texas. And the next thing will be that under this bill there will be no land association.

Mr. STEAGALL. If there is no association you would not be able to destroy it. That is surely the fact. You can not destroy associations where none exist.

Mr. HARDY of Texas. But if it liquidates you do destroy it, do you not?

Mr. STEAGALL. Yes. I do not say we destroy it, but it will be liquidated.

An important provision of the bill which I very much favor is the one which fixes a plan for selling the bonds of the land banks. This creates a bond committee and provides that all bonds of the various banks shall be sold as one, to be designated as land-bank bonds, instead of having each bank market its own bonds as provided in the original law. The new plan perfects the purpose to have each bank responsible for the bonds of every other bank. It puts farmers in association. It gives farmers in sections where money is scarce and interest high the same advantage in marketing their securities that are enjoyed by farmers in more fortunate sections. This is highly important and desirable.

The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BEGG] was greatly in error about one of the provisions of this bill in reference to its enlarging the purpose for which loans may be made. I want to call attention to it. It is not of such great importance, but the only change this bill makes in the purpose for which loans may be made is to provide that loans may be authorized to take care of debts that accrued prior to January 1, 1922. We have attempted to liberalize the law at that point in order to take care of the men who suffered during the period when there was an unprecedented deflation in prices of farm products that brought so much trouble and destruction among the farmers of the country and in the financial and industrial life of the Nation, and that is the only change made at that point. The section referred to by Mr. BEGG is in the existing law, and there is no change except that to which I have just referred.

Mr. BOWLING. Will the gentleman kindly discuss the effect on the local associations of the provisions of the bill which provide for direct loans to the individual rather than through the association?

Mr. STEAGALL. Well, I have been talking about that, and my time is about out, and I have one other important thing which I desire to discuss. If I have time later, I will undertake to make further answer to the question of my colleague. I want to call attention to this, and it is an important part of the bill. Under the original law the system was to go into the hands of directors selected by the local farm-loan associations after the temporary organization, by which directors were to be selected by the Federal Farm Loan Board.

The Treasury subscribed for some bonds during the war, for reasons not necessary to outline now, and the law was amended so as to provide that during the time the Treasury holds any of those securities the control of the different banks shall continue in the hands of directors selected under the temporary plan by the Federal Farm Loan Board. This is the law to-day, and one purpose of this bill is to get away from that and put control back in the hands of the local associations, where it can stimulate the interest of those who are borrowing in the system and strengthen and promote the association feature of the plan, which all recognize as helpful and desirable. So we have provided in this bill that three of the directors shall be named by the Federal Farm Loan Board, three district local directors shall be selected by the farm-loan associations and direct borrowers, and they shall select three names to be submitted to the Federal board, one of whom must be selected by the Federal Farm Loan Board to constitute the seventh member, which puts four directors in the hands of the associations. The Farm Loan Board is compelled to accept one of the three men whose names are submitted by the farm-loan associations.

This goes far enough in granting control to the borrowers, who are to owe 20 times the amount of their stock in the land banks and whose chief interest is that of borrowers, and which in every way is only temporary. Their sole purpose in coming into the system is to borrow. But whether we look upon them as stockholders or borrowers, I can not accept the view that connection with the Government is destructive or undesirable. The one great purpose upon which success depends is that the system be in safe hands and be enabled to enjoy the confidence of the investing public. Upon this depends the sale of bonds from which must come the necessary funds to supply the demands for loans. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. McFADDEN. Mr. Chairman, I yield the balance of my time to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. MORGAN].

Mr. MORGAN. Mr. Chairman and members of the committee, the American Farm Bureau Federation is in favor of this bill. Mr. Herbert Quick, associated with the American Farm Loan Board, was assigned to the duty of forming cooperative organizations. Mr. Herbert Quick is still associated with the Farm Loan Board, and has made some observations concerning this bill, and is in a position to speak with authority. I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD by publishing the statement of Mr. Quick and a statement made by the American Farm Bureau Federation.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Ohio asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the manner indicated. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The statements referred to are as follows:

AMERICAN FARM BUREAU FEDERATION,
Washington, D. C., January 15, 1923.

QUICK URGES FARM-LOAN AMENDMENTS.

"The man on the high-priced farm land is the man who is really under distress to-day. It is not because he is wealthy that he needs a larger loan limit in the Federal farm-loan associations; it is because of the price of his prime necessity, the land. The present loan limit of $10,000 on 250 acres of land, not counting the improvements, will finance a mortgage of 50 per cent on only 40 acres. That is not enough; and you must bear in mind the fact that if you raise it to $20,000 you can loan on no more land than you could in 1914 when you began agitating this system. In other words, you have increased your loan limit to correspond with the increasing price of land. That increasing price of land is not a healthful condition; I do not like it. And if you are going to serve the farmer you have got to give him greater loans than you are giving him now."

This is Herbert Quick's statement, ex-member of the Federal Farm Loan Board, in charge of the cooperative farm-loan associations, publicist and writer, when testifying before the House Banking and Currency Committee on the Norbeck-Strong bill, which amends the Federal farm loan act in several particulars. The most important feature of this bill, from the American Farm Bureau Federation's standpoint, at least, is the removal of the maximum loan limitation and making it possible for the cooperative farm-loan associations to lend upon the same basis as the joint-stock land banks, the amount of the loans to be regulated by the quality and size of the collateral offered.

NOT OPERATED FOR PROFIT BUT FOR SERVICE.

"The joint-stock land bank, the other banking system created under the same act as the cooperative farm-land banks, does not have to operate where it does not wish to," continued Mr. Quick. "It is operated for profit purely, and it enters a county or it stays out. Yet a great many men want loans over $10,000 who are not within the territory where the joint-stock land banks are operating but where cooperative land banks are.

"You say the joint-stock land banks are operating in every State. They are. So were the farm-mortgage bankers before the farm loan act was passed operating in every State, and yet there were great areas where there was no farm-mortgage credit available to the farmers.

BUILDING FOR SOLIDARITY.

"I perhaps had better give the committee the experience of a man who has been on the board as to why the interest rate has been kept up to where it is. In the first place, these banks started out owing the Government several million dollars. The Government put the money in it. So it was desirable to accumulate money and pay the Government off. Then our business started with the opinion of the investing world against it. It was regarded as a socialistic experiment in the minds of the most conservative and it was likewise regarded in the minds of the liberals as experimental.

"The result was that we felt that it was necessary for these banks to maintain a margin of at least 1 per cent between their bonds and their interest rate, in order that they might strengthen themselves. The banks are all getting very strong; they are among the strongest financial institutions in the country and their bonds are in excellent demand; the legality of the act has been supported by the Supreme Court of the United States and their interest rates are going down, unless interest rates generally go up. The interest rates are higher than they need to be at this time, and I notice that the members of the Farm Loan Board—and I apprehend that Secretary Mellon, who is ex officio a member, knows that—and the Federal land banks are going to do business on a closer margin between the interest rate and the bond rate in the future and the advantage will accrue entirely to the borrowing farmers, and I think the borrowing farmers, especially those who prefer to be in the Federal land banks, should be given the benefit of the higher loan limit.

STRENGTH THROUGH NUMBERS.

"The fact of the matter is that the leaders outside the farm-loan system in Iowa, while they grant a larger proportion of the value of the farm than the Federal land banks do, owing to the fact that the Federal Farm Loan Board refused, refused very wisely, to follow up the expansion of land values in Iowa. We made a rule that we would not loan over $100 an acre on any Iowa or Illinois farm. No matter if they might call it worth $400 an acre it was not worth more than $100 to us. That was the Federal land bank. I do not know what the rule is as to the joint-stock land bank.

"But that is not important where a man has 160 acres of land. The joint-stock land bank can loan $100 an acre on the whole 160 acres, while the Federal land bank would be confined to $10,000, no matter how large the farm is. The loans are not any better in the joint land bank, but they are large and they can more nearly meet the needs of the farmer.

"The advantage that the joint-stock land bank has practically over the Federal land bank is that when you get above a $10,000 loan limit the competition between the Federal land bank and the joint-stock land bank ceases, and the joint-stock land bank has the field to itself, except competition from the farm-mortgage bankers. The competition ceases and he has the field to himself. I do not think that is a good thing.

"I recently saw a statement in an agricultural bulletin which said that the Federal farm loan act had operated in the case of 5 per cent of the cases in putting farm tenants in as owners, and I think that is as much as you can expect. In the case of 1 in 20 it has had the effect of putting the farm tenant in the position of owner. I think that is creditable when you consider the small amount of rental value as compared with the interest cost to buy it."

In commenting upon the question which was raised as to whether the appointment of agents of the Federal farm land banks would take away the cooperative feature of the Federal farm loan act, Mr. Quick told the committee he did not believe 10 per cent of the associations have ever had a meeting at a time when there was a quorum of stockholders present.

Mr. Quick said that the borrower's interest lapsed almost immediately upon getting a loan and there is very little to stimulate the interest of borrowers themselves. They are done when they have borrowed their money, and the loan is amortized in 33 years. Their interest rate is fixed and the borrower's investment in the association is limited to 5 per cent of the face of his loan. He is not interested in the amount of money he has invested in the cooperative organization, for it is put up as the last payment of his loan. He is not much interested in dividends.

If he has $3,000 loan he has $150 invested in stock. He is interested in the dividends on that stock but he is not interested very much, and the way he is interested is purely speculative.

"I am not moving in any aura of reports of European commissions and things that we thought about when the system was adopted. My testimony is based upon experience. The rule in the farm-loan associations is that they organize, they hold their meetings, and that they get the money, and when they do that they are done. They never have another meeting at which there is a quorum.

SYSTEM DIFFERS FROM EUROPE'S.

"Our system differs materially from that of Europe. In some of the systems in Europe the loans are made up to 60, 70, and 80 per cent of the value of the farm. And in some of them they have a personal liability which is unlimited. In other words, everybody's property is bound to pay everybody's debts.

"Under that kind of system you are sure to have such anxiety on the part of everybody in the association for the success of it that you can get real cooperation out of those people, because their whole fortunes are at stake. But in this country, where we loan only up to 50 per cent of the value of the land, plus 20 per cent of the permanent and insured improvements, the farmers are not particular about any personal liability. They take it that this measure was made for a very remote contingency. I have found there is not any such thing as cooperative interest in the organization of the system.

"My feeling after struggling with this cooperation in land mortgages for two years was that the whole cooperative feature fails, that what we have here is only a false appearance of cooperation growing purely out of personal interest of the secretary-treasurer, who is, after all, nothing more nor less than a loan agent and who has become the shell of an organization from which the cooperative meat escaped just as soon as they got their loans.

"The fact is, there are not any benefits in the farm-loan system that do not end when the farmer gets his loan. His interest is fixed, his investment is fixed, and the only uncertainty he has is the gobbling of his dividends, which do not amount to anything.

MUTUALITY BUT NOT COOPERATION.

"I think that the land mortgage credit, when it is made as conservatively as ours, so there is not the element of continuing personal risk to the farmer, is utterly hopeless as a cooperative arrangement. There can be a great element of mutuality in it, but it is a mutuality that dies with each particular loan, and the transactions are not numerous enough, they are not continuous enough, and the interest is not great enough to stimulate a man to leave his home after he has worked hard all day and attend a meeting when there is nothing to do and there is nothing particularly worth while to discuss.

"The great benefit of the farm-loan association was this: It put the Federal farm-loan system into every part of the United States. Prior to that time a great many localities in the United States were almost utterly without farm-loan credits. Nobody went into a district where the loans were not big enough to make the business pay. Of course, they would not go.

"We talk here about the solvency and about the value of the Federal farm-loan bond being increased by taking these big loans. That is entirely illusive. The loans that we made in the districts where they were the smallest are just as good as the loans made in districts where they were the largest.

"Strangely enough the investor has a tendency to pay more for a New England bond, which is fundamentally the poorest bond we have if it were not for the interdependence of the banks, than he does for an Iowa bond or for a Mississippi bond which is the best. Take the New Orleans Land Bank, for instance. The New Orleans Land Bank made a great volume of loans, some of them as low as $100; and after they had been running a year or two the loan average was not over $700 to $800. They were, too, poor farmers, and some of the localities were just poverty-stricken places. And yet that district is almost entirely without delinquents, almost always has been, and there were abstracts of title that I would not have examined for $100 that we made loans of $100 on.

"That business is hard to do with a profit, but it has had a tremendous public benefit. It extended the farm-loan business all over the country, even to New Mexico, where we made loans on a basis of 50 cents an acre. I think that the Omaha Land Bank is making loans in Wyoming district at an absolute loss, because the public interest and the spirit of the law demands that they go out there.

"The farm loan association did that. The farm loan association showed the world that these loans that the old mortgage companies would not make, because they were unsafe or unprofitable, are actually safe when they are made in great numbers, with due attention to insurance of titles.

AGENT STRENGTHENS SYSTEM.

"I can not get the thought that the agent sent out by the 12 land banks would result in any lessening of the security of the Federal farm loan bond. Under the agency system as provided for in the bill there would still be 5 per cent put up. The new borrowers under the agent in each Federal farm loan district would become a new class, practically on the same basis as if they all belonged to a great big farm-loan association. The idea that the Federal land bank has got to fail in order to make that available is to my mind a legal absurdity.

"The Federal land bank can resort to the stock when by reason of conditions it is needed to save itself from failure. But, after all, under a system that is organized as ours is, with only 50 per cent of the selling value of the farm and 20 per cent of its permanent insured improvements, such a resort to the stock is unlikely. On that basis we have gone through a war; we have gone through an era of drought and crop failures; we have gone through the wildest era of farm-land speculation which I have ever seen, and never yet has that demand on the ultimate borrower to sacrifice his 5 per cent been invoked so far as I know.

"Furthermore, through the agency system you would avoid the very thing that takes place in many places where a whole lot of dividends are soaked up in the local expenses of the association. In many associations we avoid that. On the whole, I think the agency system would operate more economically."

Mr. Quick also approved of the organization of a central bond-selling agency in the Federal farm-loan system.

AMERICAN FARM BUREAU FEDERATION,
Washington, D. C., February 1, 1923.

DEAR MR. CONGRESSMAN: The Norbeck-Strong bill, H. R. 14041, just reported out of the Banking and Currency Committee of the House, is in many ways an admirable bill and will be very helpful in a freer functioning of the Federal farm-loan system. However, the limitation of loans to $16,000, with certain provisions by which loans may be made above that to $25,000, is a mistake in both theory and practice.

The Federal farm loan act was passed to remedy the evils existing through the control of farm loans by farm-mortgage companies, which in most sections were imposing high rates and excessive commissions. On loans up to $10,000 the Federal farm loan act has cured these evils. On loans exceeding $10,000 the Federal farm loan act has not remedied the situation.

While it may be contended that the joint-stock land banks take care of this situation, this is not true; for the joint-stock land banks do not and will not operate in many ranching sections of the country, and in the best agricultural sections where they do operate the net cost to the farmer approximates 1 per cent more than if the loan were taken through the Federal farm-loan associations. The farmer is entitled to save this $250 per year on a $25,000 loan, ordinarily equivalent to the annual taxes on the land pledged.

From another standpoint this increase is justified inasmuch as the farmer is entitled to a universal system of agricultural finance through the Federal farm-loan system just as much as is commerce and business through the Federal reserve system. Every farmer operating his own farm is entitled to the benefits of the farm loan act. The system is adapted to long-term agricultural finance for all farmers. There is no reason why any farmer should be denied admission to the cooperative system.

The thought and argument that the little borrower is being protected by writing in a maximum loan is wrong, for the increase of the loan above $10,000 will be beneficial to the small as well as to the large farmer. The overhead cost of writing a loan of $25,000 is not more than the placing of a loan of $500. The profits of these larger loans will be reflected in higher dividends and the consequent lowering of rates for all farmers. While it has been contended by some that increasing the limit to $25,000 will make an increased demand for credit which will react against the small farmer, it is not true, because it must be borne in mind that these larger loans are being made and will continue to be made. They draw on the same pool of financial credit seeking safe long-term investments that the small loans draw on through the Federal farm loan system; and if these large loans are not within the system they are competitive buyers of this credit, and by this competitive bidding force the paying of high prices both within and without the system when both should be secured in a cooperative way.

It is unjust to discriminate against the farmers' cooperative system, the Federal land banks, in favor of the privately owned system, the joint stock land banks, or to force the farmer seeking a large loan to be exposed to the tender mercies of the old farm mortgage system.

If the little farmer and the big farmer are to be well served, this farm loan system must be recognized as the Government instrumentality for securing long-time investment capital for agriculture, and all borrowers, large or small, desiring this kind of money should be encouraged to borrow through the Federal farm loan system.

There is no scarcity of money for these purposes. Secretary Mellon, Governor Harding, Governor Strong, and other outstanding men in the financial world have all testified that it is only a question of proper credit instrumentalities and not a lack of money that makes for the farmers' difficulties. Every national farm organization has by resolution and by witnesses requested that the straight loan be not less than $25,000.

The increase of the loan limit will not add to the volume of tax-exempt securities, for the business otherwise will be written by joint-stock land banks enjoying tax-exempt bonds or by other institutions, such as mutual insurance companies, charitable and eleemosynary institutions, and others, whose securities are not subject to taxation and which should be buyers of the regularly issued bonds of the farm-loan system. The increase of the loan limit of the Federal land banks to the maximum enjoyed by the joint-stock land banks will benefit all farmers, large and small.

I wish to call to your attention, as well as to the attention of every other Member of Congress, that if the farmer is to be adequately financed and on the most economical basis, the $16,000 maximum loan now in the bill must be removed. With that remaining in the bill it will fail to serve as it should serve, and will not only continue to expose those desiring larger loans to the unconscionable commission and brokerage charges of the old-time farm-loan mortgage banker but will also result in weakening the farm-loan system itself and not allow it to develop and function with as low a rate of interest to the farmer as it might otherwise secure.

Yours very truly,

AMERICAN FARM BUREAU FEDERATION.
GRAY SILVER,
Washington Representative.

RAISE LOAN LIMIT TO $25,000.

In a strong appeal to raise the limit for Federal farm loans from $10,000 to $25,000 and not $16,000, Gray Silver, Washington representative of the American Farm Bureau Federation, addresses the following letter to every Senator and Congressman:

"The Norbeck-Strong Bill, H. R. 14041, just reported out of the Banking and Currency Committee of the House, is in many ways an admirable bill and will be very helpful in a freer functioning of the Federal farm-loan system. However, the limitation of loans to $16,000 with certain provisions by which loans may be made above that to $25,000 is a mistake in both theory and practice.

JOINT-STOCK BANKS LIMITED.

"While it may be contended that the joint-stock land banks take care of this situation, this is not true, for the joint-stock land banks do not and will not operate in many ranching sections of the country, and in the best agricultural sections where they do operate the net cost to the farmer approximates 1 per cent more than if the loan were taken through the Federal farm loan associations. FAIR TO ALL.

"The thought and argument that the little borrower is being protected by writing in a maximum loan is wrong, for the increase of the loan above $10,000 will be beneficial to the small as well as to the large farmer. The overhead cost of writing a loan of $25,000 is not more than the placing of a loan of $500. FARM BUREAU ARGUES TO REMOVE $10,000 LIMIT.

Gray Silver, Washington representative of the American Farm Bureau Federation urged the House Banking and Currency Committee to report out the Norbeck-Strong bill, which provides for an increase in the amount of money which may be loaned to individuals by the cooperative farm-loan associations. Mr. Silver stated that the time for renewing mortgage obligations is not far off and that a failure to report the bill will necessitate the renewal of mortgages at high rates and probably the payments of commissions. Answering the claim made by some members of the committee that the Federal farm-loan system was created to help the "small" farmer or to assist the landless man to secure a small farm, Mr. Silver declared there were two schools of thought on this subject, and that the present limitation of $10,000 was a compromise when the bill was originally passed.

One school of thought claims that the farmer is a yokel and has an unhappy lot; that he must live in his misery because he has chosen farming as his business. The other school of thought maintains that the farmer is a business man; that agriculture is a calling and that farmers wish to raise their family on the farm and continue in the farming business. That is what the American Farm Bureau Federation has in mind when it requests that the loan limit of $10,000 be removed and that the limit of the loan should be determined by the size and quality of collateral offered.

Mr. Silver maintained that the economic farm unit used to be 160 acres, but with the changing conditions this unit now varies widely in different parts of the country. "There are hundreds of thousands of farms in the United States which are valued at more than $20,000. Among the States which have large numbers of such farms are California, with 23,000; Idaho, 10,000; Indiana, 27,000; Illinois, 141,000; Iowa, 152,000; Kansas, 53,000; Kentucky, 10,000; Minnesota, 58,000; Missouri, 25,000; Nebraska, 41,000; New York, 10,000; North Carolina, 22,000; North Dakota, 24,000; South Dakota, 44,000; Texas, 23,000; Washington, 12,000; Wisconsin, 30,000. Every State in the Nation has a large number of farmers operating units valued at more than $20,000.

"The removal of the loan limit would put the cooperative farm land banks on the same working basis as the joint-stock land banks, thus giving them the chance to function on an equality. This should be done so that the farmers who wish to obtain their money cheaply through the cooperatives may do so.

"It will require no more money to finance agriculture through this system than through any other, and therefore it is only a question of whether Congress will see fit to make it possible for the Federal farm-loan system to function the way in which the farmers believe it should. It is not financing agricultural production when you limit loans to $10,000.

"Unless agriculture is financed through this system it will continue to have to refloat its mortgage indebtedness every three to five years, pay high interest rates and commission. It does not help anybody to limit the size of loan made by the cooperative farm-loan associations."

NEW PROVISIONS UP.

Mr. Silver also approved of the other provisions of the bill which make it possible for the 12 farm-loan banks to appoint agents who can make loans under the same provisions as the local cooperatives. When 10 of these loans have been made in a locality the individuals may join in forming a cooperative farm-loan association. It also provides for the lending of money to farmers to pay off debts which do not represent money owed on farm land. It also authorizes the appointment of boards of directors of the 12 farm land banks which will consist of three members elected by the local cooperative associations, three by the National Farm Loan Board, and the seventh by the other six members.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Ohio has expired; all time has expired; and the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the eighth paragraph of section 3 of the act of Congress approved July 17, 1916, known as the Federal farm loan act, be amended to read as follows:

"The salaries and expenses of the Federal Farm Loan Board and farm-loan registrars and examiners authorized under this section shall, after June 30, 1923, be paid by the Federal and joint-stock land banks in proportion to their gross assets, as follows:

"The Farm Loan Board shall, prior to June 30, 1923, and each six months thereafter, estimate the expenses and salaries of the Federal Farm Loan Board, its officers and employees, farm-loan registrars, deputy registrars, the examiners and reviewing appraisers, and apportion the same amongst the Federal and joint-stock land banks in proportion to their gross assets at the time of such apportionment and make an assessment upon each of such banks pursuant to such apportionment, payable on the 1st of July or January next ensuing. The funds collected pursuant to such assessments shall be deposited with the Treasurer of the United States to be disbursed in payment of such salaries and expenses on appropriations duly made by Congress for such purpose.

"If any deficiency shall occur in such fund during the half-year period for which it was estimated, the Farm Loan Board shall have authority to make immediate assessment covering such deficiency against the Federal and joint-stock land banks upon the same basis as the original assessment. If at the end of the six months' period there shall remain a surplus in such fund, it shall be deducted from the estimated expenses of the next ensuing six months' period when assessment is made for such period. Land bank appraisers shall receive such compensation as the Federal Farm Loan Board shall fix and shall be paid by the Federal land banks and the joint-stock land banks which they serve in such proportion and in such manner as the Federal Farm Loan Board shall order."

Mr. TOWNER. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 10 minutes and extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Iowa asks unanimous consent to proceed for 10 minutes and extend his remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection?

Mr. McFADDEN. Mr. Chairman, I do not want to object to this, but the time is quite late and we are anxious to finish this bill this afternoon, and I hope gentlemen will bear in mind that I will be forced to take some action to close debate on different sections in order to get through to-night.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. STEAGALL. Just a moment. I hope the gentleman will not insist on finishing to-night. It is now 25 minutes after 4 o'clock.

Mr. McFADDEN. I will say to the gentleman this is legislation, I believe, men are interested in, and it is now getting toward the close of the session——

Mr. BEGG. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order there is no quorum present. This is a big proposition, and I think we ought to have the fellows here. It is Saturday night and——

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Ohio makes the point of order there is no quorum present. The Chair will count. [After counting.] One hundred and fourteen gentlemen are present, a quorum.

Mr. TOWNER. Mr. Chairman, about a year ago I introduced a bill to increase the limit of farm loans from $10,000 to $25,000. I would have been glad indeed if that could have been considered alone on its merits. However, there has grown up, as was inevitable, conditions in the administration of the Federal farm loan act that in the judgment of the board should be remedied. This bill is the result of the consideration of these separate propositions. I want to ask the gentlemen of the committee to remember that the recommendations of the Federal Farm Loan Board are entitled to respectful consideration.

The Farm Loan Board has administered the act with most admirable discretion and care. It has been successful; it has acomplished great work. I think we should hesitate about condemning unreservedly, as some gentlemen do, the recommendations of the board. I wish further to say I think that gentlemen who have not given this subject particular attention and study and perhaps are not particularly interested in the matter ought not to object to the action of the Committee on Banking and Currency, which has given this legislation a most careful consideration. They have heard people both for and against the legislation who were entirely qualified to enlighten the committee. They have considered very carefully the objections that have been made against this bill. I presume there is no objection that has been urged here but was considered by the committee. It seems to me that gentlemen who are now condemning so unqualifiedly the provisions of this bill should remember that those who have given this legislation careful consideration have given it their unqualified approval.

I want briefly to call attention to some of these provisions that have been so seriously contested. Of course, no gentleman here has been heard to complain of the first provision of the bill. If these land banks can carry the entire expense without calling upon the Government for a single dollar, certainly no one should object to that. But gentlemen declare they are against certain other provisions of the bill. In a sense and to a considerable degree these various provisions are separable and stand upon their own merits. Gentlemen, I think, should hestitate to condemn the whole bill because they do not approve some particuar section of it.

I want to call attention to section 2, which provides for the selection of the directors of the farm-loan banks, which has been very seriously criticized. No good reason for such criticism has been stated. The change recommended by the Farm Loan Board has been caused by no effort on their part to obtain greater power for the land banks than they now have, but it has been because of the fact that under the composition and arrangement as it now exists there has been a sad lack of efficiency and interest taken by the various associations of borrowers, which they hope may be cured by this new recommendation. It seems to me the recommendation is justifiable. The change suggested appears materially better, and, as long as the proposed arrangement leaves with the association members the right of control of the board of directors, there ought not to be any serious objection with regard to that provision.

I want now to call attention to the storm center of objection to this legislation, and that is the provision that has been made by which agents can be appointed and individual borrowers can present their applications for consideration to the Federal land banks. It occurs to me, gentlemen, that there must have been, in the minds of most of those who have spoken, serious misapprehension regarding the terms of this provision. Let me call your attention to them on page 10, at the beginning of Section 15.

When are these agents to be appointed? Not under all circumstances; not under any circumstances, except those that are provided here:

SEC. 15. That whenever it shall appear to the Federal Farm Loan Board that national farm-loan associations have not been formed.

Now ought we, I ask it in all seriousness, to prevent a man who desires to take advantage of the terms, the rate of interest, and the provisions for amortization that are carried in these Federal farm loans to be prevented from securing them unless he can associate with himself 10 men for that purpose? When thus presented he ought to have a chance to submit his individual application and have it acted upon. It seems to me that is a reasonable proposition. And besides this the provision reads, "or the local farm-loan association fails, neglects, or refuses to serve properly the needs of its territory in any locality."

Perhaps there will not be many cases of that character. But we know that there are such cases, and in such cases where the local association forms itself into a close corporation and refuses to accept applications from anyone outside, certainly there ought to be some method provided by which these applications can be made and considered by the Federal land banks.

Mr. BOWLING. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for a short question?

Mr. TOWNER. I beg the gentleman's pardon. I can not yield to him because then I shall have to yield to somebody else.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman declines to yield.

Mr. TOWNER. There can be no objection, it seems to me, that when these associations do not serve the borrowing public, those subject to these conditions and circumstances should have the advantage of the Federal farm loan proposition. I see no reason why that should not be granted. I have heard all, I think, of the very strenuous objections that have been urged to this proposed change, and I really can not see that there is any real ground for those objections.

It does not mean the destruction of these associations already formed. It does not prevent the organization of new associations that may be formed. Gentlemen seem to think that this means the destruction of those already in existence, and seem to think that there will be no more associations formed. I see no reason to believe that; I see no reason to believe that the fulfillment of their prediction will necessarily follow. We ought to consider this as a practical proposition. It is so. The Farm Loan Board does not desire to destroy this system. They have no interest to do so. They want it to hold its place in the affections of the people of the country. They want it to continue to serve the admirable purpose that called it into existence, and which has so fully justified its being called into existence. They do not believe that any of these destructive consequences will follow, and I believe we are abundantly justified in joining with them in the belief that they will not follow.

Now, I want to pay attention in the remainder of my time to the consideration of the extension of the limit of these farm loans. Gentlemen say that this was a proposition originally created for the benefit of the small farmer, for the poor farmer. It is still so. This does not change the situation. In fact, the language of the act itself says that preference shall be given to the smaller loans, to the poorer farmers. But is that any reason why those having farms of larger size and value should be deprived of the lower rate of interest, of the better terms, and especially of the amortization feature which is vital to these loans?

In Iowa the average farm is 160 acres. The average value of farm lands in Iowa is over $200 per acre. This makes the average value of farms $32,000. A loan of $10,000, the present limit, is less than one-third the value of our average farm. The census gives the average value of farms in Iowa as $38,941. A loan of $10,000 is little more than one-fourth this valuation. The census valuation of farms in South Dakota is $37,000, in Nebraska it is $33,000. A loan of $10,000 on these farms and, indeed, on any average farm in the Middle West is inadequate.

Gentlemen seem to think that the proposition is to make initial loans on these farms, and large loans should not be encouraged. That is not the case. The loans in most cases are there already. They are in many cases 40 or 50 per cent of the value. They are in many cases carrying 7 per cent interest, and in many cases a commission of 1 per cent is charged for each renewal. To give these farmers the present system will mean a reduction of the interest rate to 5 per cent. A still greater benefit is the amortization feature, by which, with a small addition to the interest charges, the loan and mortgage will be extinguished at the expiration of the loan period. This system also relieves the borrower from making frequent renewals, with additional charges each time. The privilege is also given to pay larger payments, or to pay off the loan entirely at any interest pay day.

Gentlemen also seem to think that if the average farm value is $32,000, an increase to $16,000, or 50 per cent of that amount, will be sufficient increase. It should be remembered that if $32,000 is the average, that there is as much above $32,000 as there is below that amount, and that it certainly is from a productive standpoint as important to help the large producer as it is the small producer.

The full development of the Federal farm-loan system requires an extension of the limit to $25,000. That will help large and small alike. The chief benefit of the system will be found ultimately in the method used and the help and hope held out to all the farmers that they can under its provisions work out of burden of mortgage indebtedness and be able to carry a surplus to more comfort, more independence, and a full share of the full joy in life, which should be America's boon to her children.

Mr. WINGO. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 10 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Arkansas asks unanimous consent to proceed for 10 minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. WINGO. Mr. Chairman, the Federal farm-loan system has been of incalculable benefit to the American farmer, in spite of the handicaps under which it was established and through which it has struggled since its establishment. It had not only the unstable conditions produced by the war to contend with, but it had the long fight through the courts on the constitutionality of the act, which held up for over 12 months its functioning as a system.

At the time that we enacted the Federal farm loan act there were a great many communities in the United States, especially in the South and West, where farmers who wished loans of less than $10,000, notwithstanding the fact that their credit which they wished to market was a sound and safe credit, had absolutely no market for that credit upon terms that were reasonable and under which they could exist and thrive as farmers. The interest charge ranged all the way from 8 to 17 per cent upon those small loans in the territory to which I have referred. But since we established this system and it has commenced to work, in spite of the handicaps to which I have referred, it has gone forward and has served a large number of the American farmers. But the benefits that have flowed from that act have not been confined alone to those who got loans under the system. I talked to-day to one Member of Congress who before the Federal farm loan act commenced operating in his State got a loan on his farm, and by reason of the choice character of his farm and of his financial standing he was able to get it at what was regarded as a low rate of interest, namely, 8 per cent. He got it from a well-known insurance company that was making farm loans in the Southwest.

His neighbors were paying 10 per cent on small loans, and in addition to that were paying unconscionable commissions to agents. A few days ago that man was able to get a loan from the same company on the same farm at 5 per cent, paying the local agent a flat 1 per cent commission in the beginning for getting the loan. So that gentleman, notwithstanding the fact that he had not gotten into the system and is not eligible for a loan under it, yet has gotten the benefit of the farm loan law.

Gentlemen, I could cite case after case and farmer after farmer who have been benefited in that regard.

But, gentlemen, in spite of what may have been the ideas that we had when we established the system, we find that in some localities, by reason of certain defects in the administrative machinery, there are some men who are not getting the benefit of the farm loan law, and they are the ones for whom the act was originally enacted. I think members of the committee will bear me out in the statement that during the long consideration of this bill and of other bills of a similar character there has been one controlling thing that has stood outstanding in every fight and contention I made, and that was that the Federal land bank, as distinguished from the joint-stock land bank, was a cooperative loan system which we sought to give to the American farmer, and that every effort should be made and every opportunity be given to the American farmer to make a success of that cooperative movement. Now, we find that in some communities they were unable to organize a local loan association. Of course, under the system the banks can use a direct agent and make direct loans now. We found in other communities in some instances after the requisite number of farmers had gotten together and procured their loans and organized the local association, they deliberately refused to let any of their neighbors come in and join the association, for different reasons. Some were that the little original group had gotten together, they had gotten their loans, they were satisfied, they had no further interest, and they did not care to bring in their neighbors because of the double stock liability which they have to the local association by reason of the law.

We found in other cases that members of a church got together and organized a local association, and they would not permit anybody who belonged to any other church or had any other religion to come in. Of course, that condition called for relief.

What was the next thing that was directed to my attention that called for relief? During the long struggle that we had had to preserve the system, because of the exigencies of the war and the suits pending in the Supreme Court, Congress was compelled to make provision for the Treasury of the United States to purchase a certain amount of these bonds, and in order to get the Treasury officials and Members of Congress themselves in sufficient numbers to agree to that proposal, which was denounced by many upon this floor, those of us who were fighting for that relief had to agree to a provision that so long as the Treasury held any of these bonds the temporary organization should continue. I am one of those who have been extremely anxious to bring around the day when the stockholders of the system should, under a permanent organization, have charge of their own banks. So when we came to the consideration of the bill that was originally proposed we were faced with a reorganization scheme that met with the approval of but very few members of the committee. Candidly I stated then, as I have repeated since, that the original bill was so obnoxious to me in practically every material feature that I could not support it at all. But I did not care to be in the attitude of being a mere obstructionist, sitting down and objecting to what the other man proposed, but as a friend of the system, as one who was anxious to bring about a permanent organization, as one who was anxious to see that every farmer whose loan was eligible should receive the benefit of the act, I felt that it was my duty to take a constructive course and to say to the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. STRONG] and those who favored the original bill: "While I can not approve of your bill, I am willing to join with you in rewriting it to meet the objectionable features, if we can get together on it." What was the proposition?

If we had killed that bill, if we kill this bill to-day, gentlemen, there can be no permanent organization, and the stockholders will not be permitted even to elect three directors, much less four, as provided by this bill; but the present Secretary of the Treasury says, and he is right about it under the law, that unless Congress changes the law and tells him to the contrary he will hold some of those bonds so that the Federal Farm Loan Board can control these banks under the temporary organization. So if you get any relief to enable the local associations to set up a permanent organization and elect directors and handle their own banks you have got to pass some kind of a law. So I have stated that with the innumerable changes that might be made, with the great many objections that I have, if there is another change on which I have assurance of enough gentlemen to absolutely do what I had in mind, I then shall feel impelled to vote for the bill, in spite of the objectionable features, on the theory that the good will outweigh the bad.

Now, let us see. The original bill was sent out to the local associations of the United States. Naturally a great many voiced the same indignation and the same objections that other members of the committee offered to the original bill. I think some gentlemen on both sides of the aisle who have received these protests will recall this, that there is a strong probability that the associations and farmers who have sent the protests here are opposing it on the original bill, which is not now before the House, but which the committee discarded and rewrote in the subcommittee and then rewrote it in the full committee.

Now, take up the question of permanent organization. The original Strong bill provided for the control by the Farm Loan Board of the majority of the directors.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Arkansas has expired.

Mr. WINGO. I would like five minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Arkansas?

There was no objection.

Mr. WINGO. The board would control two-thirds of the directors. I did not think that was fair; it was contrary to the original spirit; it failed to protect the law under which men had subscribed to the stock and got their loans. So we worked out a compromise proposition.

I confess, gentlemen, that I would write a different one, but that is the best we could get and get anything. What is that compromise proposition? It is that the local associations shall elect three directors, the Farm Loan Board shall elect three, and then the seventh director shall be selected by whom? It is true he shall be selected by the board, but the board is compelled to take a man that has been nominated by the local farm-loan associations. How? By compelling them to take one of the three who have received the highest vote on nomination by the associations. Can you conceive any other method by which you could break that deadlock? We proposed different schemes, we talked about different ones, and I myself would have preferred a different proposition, but this is the best proposition that we could get.

It means if this bill should become a law that the local associations throughout the United States can get out from under the present temporary organization where the directors are elected entirely by the Farm Loan Board and will have the right to elect three directors and nominate a man selected for the fourth and thereby give them the balance of power. I think we had better take that provision in the bill as the best we can get.

Here is the next proposition. I objected to the original bill because I felt that the inevitable operations would result in compulsory liquidation of the associations and have the loans made directly by direct agents without responsibility. So the committee set about trying to adopt an amendment that would protect the independence of the local associations. So we adopted a provision, now in the bill, which provides for direct loans when under the existing law they can make direct loans. Where there is a local association we provide that they shall not make direct loans, or where the farmers could get together and organize a cooperative association, unless the board found that the local association had failed, neglected, or refused to function and take care of their neighbors. Gentlemen, does not that protect the local association? I know of farmers who have been refused admission to local associations because their neighbors shut them out. Do you think the farmers ought to be denied the benefits of this act? I do not think they should, and where an association refuses to function do you not think that we ought to take care of the fellow that is shut out?

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Arkansas has again expired.

Mr. WINGO. I ask for three minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. McFADDEN. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that all debate on this paragraph and all amendments thereto close at the close of the remarks of the gentleman from Arkansas.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania asks unanimous consent that at the close of the three minutes granted to the gentleman from Arkansas all debate shall close on this section and amendments thereto. Is there objection?

Mr. RAKER. Reserving the right to object, there are only a few who have made remarks during the 30 minutes, and they have been members of the committee. I would like five minutes myself.

Mr. MONDELL. The gentleman can talk on the next section.

Mr. RAKER. But when we come to the next one the Chairman will recognize some member of the committee.

Mr. WINGO. Oh, the gentleman is not fair. We recognize men outside of the committee.

Mr. McFADDEN. We are trying to get through with this bill to-night.

Mr. BEGG. Mr. Chairman, I object.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Ohio objects. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Arkansas that he be permitted to proceed for three minutes?

There was no objection.

Mr. WINGO. In addition to that, Mr. Chairman, what do we do? Those of us who are trying to protect the independence of the local associations not only forced that amendment, but over on page 11, if gentlemen will turn to it, they will find another provision in the last paragraph on that page which simply says that as the Farm Loan Board has put a direct agent in the territory of a local association because it has failed, neglected, or refused to serve, if, afterwards that association, after it has gotten notice of that fact, will get together and adopt a resolution expressing their willingness to function and take care of their neighbors, then the Federal farm-loan bank shall be prohibited from making any more loans in that territory through the direct agent. Do not those two provisions protect as nearly as you can the independence of the local association? Not only that, but we forced another provision at the bottom of page 10, wherein we put a further burden upon the man who borrows through a direct loan. We withhold his dividends to set up a reserve to meet delinquent payments, and we provide a double stock liability upon the man who borrows independently through a direct agent that is comparable and equal to the double liability of a man who borrows through the local association. If you are not satisfied with that, when we reach those provisions, as one who is anxious to protect the local association, as one who is fighting for the cooperative association, then if you have another suggestion in the form of an amendment that will make it better, I am willing to join and help to improve the bill, but as one trying to preserve these local associations when they are tied up as they are now under the present statute, I am not willing to sit down and object to everything that is offered and not try to do something that will relieve the situation.

Mr. McFADDEN. Mr. Chairman, I move that all debate upon this section and all amendments thereto do now close.

Mr. ANDERSON. Mr. Chairman, I move as an amendment to that that all debate upon the section and all amendments thereto close in 10 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment of the gentleman from Minnesota to the motion of the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

The amendment was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The question now is on the motion of the gentleman from Pennsylvania, as amended.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. ANDERSON. Mr. Chairman, on the 15th of October, 1921, the Joint Commission of Agricultural Inquiry made a report upon the general subject of credits, with special reference to agricultural credits. As a part of that report it recommended the passage of a bill dealing with intermediate farm credits for production and marketing purposes. Subsequently the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LENROOT] and myself, in January, 1921, introduced a bill carrying out the commission's recommendations. Immediately thereafter the agricultural conference, called by the President and the Secretary of Agriculture, recommended the passage of a bill for intermediate farm credits substantially in the form proposed by Senator LENROOT and myself.

Last summer the chairman of the Committee on Banking and Currency, to which committee the bill was referred, granted me a hearing on the bill, which lasted for two days. Nothing, however, resulted from that hearing. Later on, at the beginning of the extra session, the President of the United States recommended to Congress the adoption of legislation providing for intermediate farm credits.

Hearings were had by the Senate committee. The bill was approved by the Secretary of Agriculture and the Secretary of Commerce. It passed the Senate by a unanimous vote. It came to the House Committee on Banking and Currency about the 1st of February. No action has been had upon it. I rise at this time simply to challenge the attention of this House, and especially the Members on the Republican side of the House, to the fact that intermediate credit legislation, which has the administration behind it, which has been unanimously passed by the Senate, is likely to fail because apparently the Committee on Banking and Currency is unwilling to consider it. It seems to have disappeared in a fog, out of which it is impossible to extricate it. We are now within two weeks of the end of this session. The administration and those who speak for it have promised the farmers of this country that before the end of this session there would be legislation on intermediate farm credits.

Mr. LONDON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ANDERSON. Not yet. I think that the country ought to know and that this House ought to know where the responsibility for failure to pass farm legislation lies, if farm legislation is not passed. I do not criticize the members of the Committee on Banking and Currency on the Democratic side of the House; they do not have responsibility. I am informed that they are quite willing to cooperate. I challenge the members of that committee on the Republican side of the House, who are responsible for carrying out the program of the administration which is in power, to the fact that unless immediate action is taken, unless this bill can be brought out on the floor and considered, there will be no fulfillment of the promise which we have made to the farmers of America and to the American people with reference to intermediate farm credits at this session of Congress. That is all I have to say.

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ANDERSON. Yes.

Mr. CRAMTON. I simply want to say to the gentleman that there are many Members of the House who join with the gentleman from Minnesota in this feeling that he has expressed, and that the matter of farm credits is of sufficient importance to justify its consideration by this House. I think it will be a distinct disappointment to many on this side if the Committee on Banking and Currency fails to send out those important measures and give opportunity for the House to consider them.

Mr. ANDERSON. Of course, it might be said that the committee was waiting for the Senate to act, but it was not necessary for it to do that. This bill has been before the committee for more than a year and there has been ample opportunity during that period for the committee to give any consideration to the bill which it thought necessary, but it did not seem to be disposed to take action on it for some reason or other. I do not know what the reason is, but it seems to me that we who have the responsibility for the carrying out of the Republican program in this Congress should find some way by which some legislation fulfilling the promise which the President of the United States has made to the American people and the American farmer can be carried out.

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ANDERSON. I will yield to the gentleman.

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. I am in full sympathy with the gentleman, and I desire to ask him when was the Senate bill referred to this committee and what action it has taken since?

Mr. ANDERSON. It was referred on the 1st of February, perhaps on the 3d, and no action has been taken as far as I am aware.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. ANDERSON] expressed great interest in the farm credit bills before the Banking and Currency Committee. I am as much interested in those measures as he can possibly be, and I am as anxious that the House shall have an opportunity to pass on the question of farm credits at this session as he can be. It is a most unfortunate thing that in another body that undertook the task of working out the question of farm credits gentlemen were not able to agree among themselves and present to us in one measure a bill that would care and provide for those important interests. I am not disposed to be captious in criticism, and I suppose under the rules it is not proper for me to criticize at all, but I do believe that had this House assumed the initial responsibility for that work the question of farm credits would have been disposed of in one measure. [Applause.] And that would have been sent to the Senate——

Mr. CRAMTON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MONDELL. I have only five minutes. If I had a little more time I would be glad to yield to the gentleman.

Mr. CRAMTON. For a brief question?

Mr. MONDELL. We would not, in my opinion, have passed two bills covering largely the same ground treating to a very considerable extent the same subject through different methods. But let me suggest to gentlemen the Committee on Banking and Currency is at work and is working diligently on those measures, and I have every confidence that in due time they will report. I think that committee is entitled to time to give fair consideration to those measures, and I am sure they will work diligently on the bills and that report will be made to the House. In the meantime our duty is to pass on the bill now before us. That is a measure which the Committee on Banking and Currency has had before it for a long time, long before either of the Senate bills came to the committee. The committee has presented it as their perfected work, touching the land banks and the land-bank system. When we established the land-bank system we did an unusual thing. We gave those organizing what are known as joint-stock banks the privilege of issuing securities the income from which is free from income taxes.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired; all time has expired.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that I may proceed for two minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Wyoming asks unanimous consent to proceed for two minutes. Is there objection?

Mr. ANDERSON. Mr. Chairman, in view of the gentleman's opposition a few moments ago I think I shall have to object.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Minnesota objects; all time has expired, and the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 2. That the seventh subdivision of section 4 of said act be amended to read as follows:

"Seventh. To exercise, by its board of directors or duly authorized officers or agents, subject to law, all such incidental powers as shall be necessary to carry on the business herein described.

"After the subscriptions to stock in any Federal land bank by national farm-loan associations, hereinafter authorized, shall have reached the sum of $100,000 the officers and directors of said land bank shall be chosen as herein provided and shall, upon becoming duly qualified, take over the management of said land bank from the temporary officers selected under this section.

"The board of directors of every Federal land bank shall be selected as hereinafter specified and shall consist of seven members. Three of said directors shall be known as local directors and shall be chosen by and be representative of national farm-loan associations and borrowers through agencies; three shall be known as district directors and shall be appointed by the Federal Farm Loan Board and represent the public interest. The term of office of local and district directors shall be three years.

"Within 30 days from the approval of this act and thereafter, at least two months before each election, the Federal Farm Loan Board shall divide each land-bank district into three divisions, as nearly equal as possible according to number of borrowers and the voting strength of national farm-loan associations and borrowers through agencies, and the farm-loan commissioner shall thereupon notify each association and agency in writing that an election is to be held for one local director from each of said divisions and requesting each association and agency to nominate one candidate for each division. Within 10 days of receipt of such notice each national farm-loan association and borrower through agencies shall forward nominations of residents of their respective divisions for one director for such division to said farm-loan commissioner. The farm-loan commissioner shall then prepare a list of candidates for local directors, consisting of the 10 persons receiving the highest number of votes from national farm-loan associations and borrowers through agencies for each division.

"At least one month before said election the farm-loan commissioner shall mail to each national farm-loan association and to each borrower through agencies the list of candidates for their respective divisions. The directors of each national farm-loan association shall cast the vote of said association for one of the candidates on said list and shall forward said vote to the said farm-loan commissioner within 10 days after said list of candidates is received. In voting under this section each association shall be entitled to cast a number of votes equal to the total voting strength of the stockholders in association meetings, and each borrower through agencies shall be entitled to cast one vote for each share of stock held by him in the Federal land bank not exceeding 20 shares, and shall forward said vote to the said farm-loan commission within 10 days after said list of candidates is received. The candidate receiving the highest number of votes in his division shall be declared elected as local director of the Federal land bank district from his division. In case of a tie, the farm-loan commissioner shall determine the choice. The nominations from which the list of candidates is prepared, and the votes of the respective associations and borrowers through agencies for such candidates, as counted, shall be tabulated and preserved, subject to examination by any candidate, for at least one year after the result of the election is announced.

"The Federal Farm Loan Board shall designate one of the district directors to serve until December 31, 1924, one to serve till December 31, 1925, and one to serve till December 31, 1926. After their first appointment each district director shall be appointed for a term of three years. At the first regular meeting of the board of directors of each Federal land bank the local directors shall designate one of their members to serve till December 31, 1924, one to serve till December 31, 1925, and one to serve till December 31, 1926. Thereafter each local director shall be chosen as hereinbefore provided and shall hold office for a term of three years. Any vacancies that may occur in the board of directors shall be filled for the unexpired term in the manner provided herein for the original selection of such directors. At the same time that the associations and borrowers through agencies nominate the candidates for the local directors, each association and each borrower through agencies shall also nominate one candidate for director at large for the entire district, and from the three persons having the greatest number of votes for nominee for director at large, the Farm Loan Board shall select a director at large, whose term of office shall terminate on the 31st day of December, 1925, and every three years thereafter, and such director at large shall be ex officio chairman of the board during his term of office. Such seventh director may be removed by the Farm Loan Board for neglect of duty, incapacity for the work, or malfeasance in office, after charges duly preferred and a hearing had thereon, and in such cases the associations of the district shall in like manner nominate candidates for another director at large, to fill the vacancy, for whom the Farm Loan Board shall in same manner select a successor, but any person who is removed can not be nominated to succeed himself. The board of directors thus selected shall, upon qualification, immediately take over the management of each bank.

"Directors of Federal land banks shall have been for at least two years residents of the district for which they are appointed or elected, and a local director shall be a resident of his division when elected. No district director of a Federal land bank shall, during his continuance in office, act as an officer, director, or employee of any other institution, association, or partnership engaged in banking or in the business of making or selling land-mortgage loans.

"Directors of the Federal land bank shall receive, in addition to any compensation otherwise provided, a reasonable allowance for necessary expenses in attending meetings of their boards, to be paid by the respective Federal land banks. Any compensation that may be provided by boards of directors of the Federal land banks for directors, officers, or employees shall be subject to the approval of the Federal Farm Loan Board."

Mr. STRONG of Kansas. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. STRONG of Kansas: Page 7, line 7, after the word "elected" insert: "And at least one district director shall be experienced in practical farming and actually engaged at the time of his appointment in farming operations within the district."

Mr. RAKER rose.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. STRONG].

Mr. RAKER. The Chair has recognized me already. I beg the gentleman not to take me off the floor.

Mr. BLANTON. I will do that later.

Mr. McFADDEN. Mr. Chairman, at the conclusion of the remarks of the gentleman from California, I ask unanimous consent that the debate on this section and all amendments thereto be closed.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania asks unanimous consent that at the conclusion of the remarks of the gentleman from California [Mr. RAKER] the debate on this section and all amendments thereto be closed. Is there objection?

Mr. BLANTON. I object. The gentleman gave me five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas objects.

Mr. McFADDEN. Then, Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the debate on this section and all amendments thereto close in 10 minutes.

Mr. SNYDER. I object.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York objects.

Mr. McFADDEN. Then I ask that at the conclusion of the remarks of the gentleman from California all debate on this section and all amendments thereto be closed.

Mr. BEGG. I reserve the right to object.

Mr. BLANTON. I make the point of order that the gentleman can not take the gentleman from California off his feet, no matter what the expediency is.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from California will proceed.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, when the bill creating the Federal farm-loan system was originally passed I had the pleasure of voting for it, and I have found out its beneficial effects, so far as it went, to the farmers of the West; in fact, generally over the United States. But they want it amended so as to give them further relief. The Federal farm-loan banks have been of great benefit. The joint-stock land banks have also been of great benefit. I shall personally vote for this bill as amended.

I want to call the attention of the committee to one thing, and I think I ought to do it. Mr. John Guill, jr., a present member of the board, says that these amendments will assist the present administration of this law. I have had the privilege of knowing him for over 30 years. He is a man who knows southern Oregon, Nevada, and California from one end to the other. He is what you call a real, genuine, business, successful farmer. He is interested in the farmers of California and in that country. It is the same way with the Federal farm-loan bank at Berkeley. They are earnestly in favor of it, because they believe it to be of benefit to the farmers of that country.

But what I primarily rose for, and what I want to call to your attention in addition, is that, like my friend from Texas [Mr. HUDSPETH], I am a real dirt farmer. [Laughter.] I want to read to you what has been the history of our farm business in northern California and southern Oregon. Here is a statement by the stockmen of southern Oregon with whom I am acquainted that each steer that they have sold for the last five years has cost them $8.85 more to produce than they have been able to sell it for.

What those people want is some relief. They want to see fulfilled some of the promises that have been made. The man that did not have a reserve has gone to the wall. Only those who had a surplus and have been able to use that surplus in maintaining their property have been able to exist. Think of it. It costs them $8.85 more to raise a steer than they get for it!

Mr. Chairman, I now ask unanimous consent that I may insert these illuminating tables in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from California asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD in the manner indicated. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The article and statement above referred to are as follows:

[From the Lake County Examiner, Lakeview, Lake County, Oreg., January 25, 1923.]

CATTLE BUSINESS IS A LOSING GAME, SAY STOCK ASSOCIATIONS—REPORT SHOWS STOCKMEN OF SOUTHERN LAKE COUNTY LOSE $8.85 ON EVERY 2-YEAR-OLD STEER MARKETED AT PRESENT PRICES—DATA SUBMITTED RESULT OF COST RECORDS FROM A NUMBER OF STOCK RANCHES AND REPRESENTS COSTS UNDER AVERAGE CONDITIONS IN THIS SECTION—COST OF STEER PLACED AT $66.85 AND SELLING PRICE IS $57.

The cattle business is a losing game under present conditions and is able to continue only because stockmen have foregone any interest on their large investments and no return has been received by them for their labor or managerial activity, according to a report submitted to the National Forest by the officers of the Warner Stock Growers' Association and the Dog Lake Cattle and Horse Raisers' Association. The cost data submitted with the report show that the stockman loses $8.85 for every 2-year-old steer he sends to market, or in other words receives $8.85 less than the cost of production.

The report was submitted in the form of proof to show why grazing fees on the national forest should not be raised and will be submitted to the district forester's office by Supervisor Gilbert D. Brown. The cost data was worked out by the officers of both live-stock associations in cooperation with County Agent Teutsch and represents average costs taken from a number of stock ranches in southern Lake County. For the Warner Stock Growers' Association the report was signed by J. P. Duke, president, and E. A. Friday, secretary, and for the Dog Lake Cattle and Horse Raisers' Association by A. M. Smith, president, and J. D. Heryford, secretary.

It is to be hoped that stockmen throughout the country compare the costs listed with their own costs and if they disagree with the figures send their remarks to the Examiner. The report follows:

"The cost data attached hereto is the result of cost records from a number of stock ranches in southern Lake County and represents average costs under range conditions in this section at prevailing prices. The owners of these ranches from which the cost data was taken are members of the undersigned live-stock associations and represented by the undersigned officers of these associations.

"Any questions as to the method of arriving at these figures or the items contained in them will be answered by the officers of either of these associations. The figures represent costs on all classes of live stock in the average herd of stock cattle in this section.

"In looking over this cost data the question may arise as to why the cost of four months' grazing on the national forest is only 72 cents per head, while the cost of grazing on fenced pasture is $3 per head for only three months.

"In the first place if it were not for the adjoining fenced meadows it would not be possible to utilize the national forest lands, as fenced meadows are necessary to supplement the national forest grazing in early spring and fall. These meadow lands are valued at $40 per acre. Secondly, good feed is not available on the national forest for more than two to three months each season, and most stockmen begin gathering their cattle after they have been on the reserve from two to three months. It is an established fact also that the best grazing lands have been patented and only the poorer grass lands remain in the national forest. A map showing the Fremont Forest will readily establish this fact, as it will show how the deeded lands interlock with the national forest lands.

"The question also arises why the privately owned grazing lands lease for a much greater price than do the national forest lands. Reasons for this are as follows:

"1. It is not necessary for leasers of privately owned grazing lands to own hay ranches, while the forest permittees must own land upon which they pay taxes and many other operating costs. Thus the operating cost of those using privately owned grazing lands, who are usually transient sheep men, is much less than the forest permittees, and they can afford to pay higher grazing rates. They do not, however, tend to stabilize the live-stock industry nor do they build up the community, as they have no property holdings which makes their permanent residence in the community necessary.

"2. Stockmen are often forced to lease this privately owned grazing land at prices set by transient sheep men in order to protect their interests on deeded grazing lands which they own and which lies adjacent.

"3. Private grazing lands can be reserved for any season of the year, while forest-reserve lands can only be utilized for grazing during the grazing period; thus private lands can be utilized later and for a longer period, and also the lessor of such lands is entitled to all the rights and privileges which he would have on his own deeded land. This fact reduces, therefore, the wintering cost of live stock, as such a system requires less high-priced hay and less fenced grazing land.

"4. Mutual permits are granted on the national forest for the grazing of both cattle and sheep on the same range, which results in less grass, shorter grazing periods, and continued feuds between the cattlemen and sheepmen occupying the area. Such permits also cause cattle to scatter and increases the cost of gathering.

"5. In certain instances it is possible for stockmen to lease deeded grazing lands adjoining their ranches, which cuts down the cost of riding and gathering and produces beef of greater weight than is possible on the national forest.

"In conclusion, the live-stock cost data herewith submitted, which is an average for this district, establishes the fact that the live-stock industry is being operated at a loss. This loss is shown in the figures which we submit in spite of the fact that many of the items are extremely conservative. For instance most of the cattle upon which this cost data was taken have been produced on hay costing from $15 to $20, while the cost of hay figures used is but $6 per ton. Many stockmen are buying hay at the present time for from $10 to $12 per ton. It is apparent, therefore, that the only reason that the industry has been able to exist is because no interest has been made on the large investment in the live-stock business and no return has been received by the operator for his labor or managerial activity.

"Therefore, according to the facts submitted herewith, the undersigned associations know that the live-stock industry can not continue to exist if production costs are increased, especially the grazing costs on the national forest, as we believe that we are paying at the present time all that such grazing is worth and all that the industry can possibly afford."

Following is the estimated cost of production data on cattle compiled by the Warner Stock Growers' Association and the Dog Lake Cattle and Horse Raisers' Association in southern Lake County, and representing average costs for this district.

Cost of running a cow one year—from October to October.

Replacement cost on old cows, depreciation	$1.50

Average price received for steers in district, 950 pounds at 6 cents	57.00
Loss	8.85

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment.

Mr. McFADDEN. Mr. Chairman, I move that all debate on this section and all amendments thereto be now closed.

Mr. BEGG. A point of order, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania moves that all debate on this section and all amendments thereto be now closed.

Mr. JONES of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment that debate close in 20 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas moves to amend by making debate close in 20 minutes.

Mr. BLANTON. I offer a substitute, that debate close in 10 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLANTON] offers a substitute that debate close in 10 minutes. The question is on the substitute offered by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLANTON].

The question being taken, the substitute was rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. JONES].

The question being taken, on a division (demanded by Mr. JONES of Texas and Mr. BLANTON) there were—ayes 60, noes 77.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I ask for tellers on that vote.

SEVERAL MEMBERS. Oh, no.

Mr. BLANTON. We are not going to be gagged or hog tied.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas asks for tellers.

Tellers were ordered, and the Chairman appointed Mr. MCFADDEN and Mr. JONES of Texas.

The committee again divided, and the tellers reported—ayes 41, noes 85.

Accordingly the amendment of Mr. JONES of Texas was rejected.

Mr. FIELDS. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Kentucky moves that the committee do now rise.

The question being taken, on a division (demanded by Mr. FIELDS) there were—ayes 51, noes 74.

Mr. FIELDS. Tellers, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Kentucky demands tellers.

Tellers were ordered, and the Chairman appointed Mr. MCFADDEN and Mr. FIELDS.

The committee again divided, and the tellers reported—ayes 55, noes 80.

Accordingly the motion that the committee rise was rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. The question recurs on the motion of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MCFADDEN] that debate on this section be now closed.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. BLANTON) there were—ayes 99, noes 28.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, may we have tellers on that vote?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas demands tellers. Those in favor of ordering tellers will rise and stand until they are counted. [After counting.] Seven Members rising, not a sufficient number, and tellers are refused. The question now recurs on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. STRONG].

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, a point of order. Where seven Members vote for tellers and no one rises against tellers, I make the point of order that the negative vote should be taken.

Mr. MONDELL. I demand the regular order, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. There is no merit in the point raised by the gentleman from Texas. The regular order is to vote on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. STRONG].

The question being taken, the amendment of Mr. STRONG of Kansas was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 3. That section 9 of said act be amended by adding thereto the following:

"Upon liquidation of any national farm-loan association the stock in the Federal land bank held by such association shall be canceled and the Federal land bank shall thereupon issue to the borrowers through such association an amount of stock in the Federal land bank equal to the amount of stock held by such borrowers in the liquidated association, such stock to be held by the bank as collateral to the loans of such borrowers and to be paid off and retired at par in the same manner as stock held by borrowers in farm-loan associations, and the Federal land bank shall pay to the borrowers holding such stock the same dividends as are paid to national farm-loan associations by such bank. The personal liability of the stockholders in such liquidated association to the association shall survive such liquidation and shall be vested in the bank in that district, which may enforce the same as fully as the association could if in existence."

Mr. MCFADDEN. Mr. Chairman, I move that all debate on this section do now close.

Mr. BLANTON. I make the point of order that that motion is not in order, because there has been no debate.

Mr. MCFADDEN. I withdraw that motion. I do not want to be too strict about this, but I want to say to the Members here that this is an important bill, and we are very anxious to get it passed to-night. If we are to do this, to grant this relief to the farmers of the country through these amendments, it is necessary that we give attention to this bill and stop our fooling.

Mr. BLANTON. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. MCFADDEN. I yield to the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. BLANTON. Is it so important to get it through to-night that the gentleman is only willing for his leader on the other side to speak on it and that nobody else shall have any time?

Mr. MCFADDEN. I believe that is hardly a fair statement. I call attention to the fact that there have been three hours of general debate and that several speeches have been made under the five-minute rule.

Mr. WINGO. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLANTON. I yield to the gentleman from Arkansas.

Mr. WINGO. I wish the gentleman would permit me to say to this side of the House that the gentleman from Pennsylvania has assured us that we will have liberal debate on bona fide contested questions when reached, and the gentleman's desire in closing down now is to save time for debate on disputed questions.

Mr. MCFADDEN. The gentleman is perfectly correct on that.

Mr. WINGO. And if the gentleman will stay and help us, we will have liberal debate on disputed points.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I ask for the regular order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MCFADDEN] has the floor.

Mr. MCFADDEN. I yield to the gentleman from North Dakota [Mr. BURTNESS] to offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from North Dakota [Mr. BURTNESS] is recognized for the purpose of offering an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment by Mr. BURTNESS: Page 7, line 22, strike out the figure "9" and insert in lieu thereof the figure "29."

Mr. BURTNESS. Mr. Chairman, the purpose of the amendment is plain. Section 9 does not relate in any way to the liquidation of these associations. It simply contains some provisions with reference to obtaining loans, and so forth. Section 29 of the original act covers specifically the question of dissolution and the appointment of receivers and I do not think there is any doubt that it was section 29 that was intended.

I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from North Dakota asks unanimous consent to revise and extend his remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. MCFADDEN. Mr. Chairman, I accept that amendment.

Mr. JONES of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I ask for recognition.

Mr. BLANTON. I rise in opposition to the amendment.

Mr. MCFADDEN. Mr. Chairman——

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from North Dakota [Mr. BURTNESS].

Mr. BLANTON. I rise in opposition to the amendment.

Mr. MONDELL. The chairman of the committee is asking for recognition and is entitled to it.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. MCFADDEN. The amendment which the gentleman from North Dakota has offered is entirely agreeable to the committee.

I move that all debate on this section and amendments thereto do now close.

Mr. CONNALLY of Texas. Mr. Chairman, a point of order. Are there not five minutes allowed for the amendment and five minutes against it?

The CHAIRMAN. After five minutes' debate it is in order to move to close debate.

Mr. LONDON. I desire to offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state the question. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Pennsylvania. The gentleman from Pennsylvania moves that debate on this section and all amendments thereto do now close.

Mr. LONDON. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment that the debate close in 20 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York moves to amend that the debate close in 20 minutes. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York.

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. The question recurs on the motion of the gentleman from Pennsylvania, [Mr. MCFADDEN] that the debate be now closed.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. BLANTON) there were 92 ayes and 20 noes.

So the motion was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from North Dakota [Mr. BURTNESS].

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 3. That section 9 of said act be amended by adding thereto the following:

"Upon liquidation of any national farm-loan association, the stock in the Federal land bank held by such association shall be canceled and the Federal land bank shall thereupon issue to the borrowers through such association an amount of stock in the Federal land bank equal to the amount of stock held by such borrowers in the liquidated association, such stock to be held by the bank as collateral to the loans of such borrowers and to be paid off and retired at par in the same manner as stock held by borrowers in farm-loan associations, and the Federal land bank shall pay to the borrowers holding such stock the same dividends as are paid to national farm-loan associations by such bank. The personal liability of the stockholders in such liquidated association to the association shall survive such liquidation and shall be vested in the bank in that district, which may enforce the same as fully as the association could if in existence."

Mr. DAVILA. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

Mr. STEAGALL. Mr. Chairman, I am a member of the committee, and I desire to be recognized to offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Alabama, a member of the committee, is recognized to offer an amendment.

Mr. STEAGALL. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment by Mr. STEAGALL: Page 9, line 13, after the colon, strike out all down to the colon in line 20.

Mr. STEAGALL. Mr. Chairman, I do not desire to argue this proposition at length. I merely wish to state the effect of the amendment I have offered. It is to raise the maximum loan limit to $16,000 with the proviso that all applications for loans not exceeding $10,000 shall be given preference. In my judgment it is unwise to raise the maximum amount of loans which the land banks may make to the amount of $25,000. I am willing to raise the limit to cover any increase in land values since the passage of the farm loan act. But I do not want to take off all limitations. I am willing to go part of the way, and for that reason I have offered the amendment making $16,000 the maximum amount to be allowed. That will take care of the average farm even in States where lands are high. The average farm unit is 160 acres. Under the rules put in effect by the Farm Loan Board no loan shall be made anywhere in excess of $100 an acre. There are many things that might be said bearing on this question that have not been said in the debate so far, but on account of the temper of the committee and the impatience which seems to prevail, I do not care to use extended time in debate.

Mr. DICKINSON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STEAGALL. Yes.

Mr. DICKINSON. In the gentleman's former remarks he stated that to increase the loan limit would absorb the bond market. As a matter of fact, is not the same large-sized loan the land bank loan, absorbed in exactly the same market as the bonds are absorbed?

Mr. STEAGALL. Yes; but the joint-stock land banks are operated in a different way. The interest on the bonds is different. They are privately owned corporations. The two systems are entirely different and separate, and should be kept so.

Mr. DICKINSON. Are not their bonds marketed in the same market as the farm-loan bonds?

Mr. STEAGALL. I grant you that. If we adopt the policy of pulling down the bars, we may assist in the effort being made to take away the tax-exempt bonds of the farm-loan system.

There is persistent clamor in many quarters for legislation to prevent the issuance of tax-free securities. Even many of those who are going to vote to increase 150 per cent the amount of loans which the Federal land banks may make, all of which are based on tax-exempt securities, were only recently loud advocates in this House of the resolution providing for the submission of a constitutional amendment to prevent further issuance of tax-exempt bonds. If we are going to extend the benefits of the system to take care of the farmer with a $50,000 farm, and who does not need the benefits of Government aid, we shall put into the hands of the enemies of the farm-loan system the most dangerous and effective weapon that can be used against it. [Applause.]

Mr. A. P. NELSON. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the House, it seems to me this matter has been thoroughly discussed in general debate. We ought to take into consideration the fact that this matter has been thoroughly gone over by the Federal Farm Loan Board, which is interested in the welfare and extension of the Federal farm-loan system. We had it thoroughly discussed by the subcommittee and by the full committee, and the committee, with the exception of the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. STEAGALL] and possibly Mr. BLACK, of Texas, are in favor of the amendment as it is in the bill. I believe we are making it possible for the Federal land-bank system to function in the highest degree for the interest and benefit of those sections of the country where the raising of the present limit from $10,000 to $16,000 is absolutely essential in order to take care of the farmers' needs.

Mr. BLACK. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. A. P. NELSON. Yes.

Mr. BLACK. The gentleman will recall that in committee I reserved the same right as did the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. STEAGALL] to fix $16,000 as the loan limit.

Mr. MONDELL. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. A. P. NELSON. Yes.

Mr. MONDELL. Is it not true that practically all over the country, even those who have heretofore contended for $10,000 limitation, there is now a very general demand for this increase?

Mr. A. P. NELSON. There is, and, furthermore, I want to make this clear to the committee that we make provision that preference is to be given to all applications for loans under $10,000, so that the interest of the small farmer is fully protected and safeguarded.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. A. P. NELSON. Yes.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Have we not had sufficient debate upon this question?

Mr. A. P. NELSON. I think so, Mr. Chairman; I move that debate upon this amendment do now close.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. A. P. NELSON] moves that all debate upon this amendment do now close.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I move to amend that by providing that it close in 10 minutes.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, this is an important question, and if gentlemen really want to debate it for 10 minutes longer I think they ought to have that privilege.

Mr. A. P. NELSON. Mr. Chairman, I modify my motion to make it 10 minutes.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, I think we might get an agreement to close debate upon the section in 20 minutes.

Mr. McFADDEN. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that all debate upon this section and all amendments thereto close in 25 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

Mr. FREE. Mr. Chairman, I object.

Mr. McFADDEN. Then, Mr. Chairman, I move that all debate upon this section and all amendments thereto close in 25 minutes.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. When this bill was first introduced it provided for a maximum loan of $25,000. The committee has rewritten the bill. It has not merely rewritten this one paragraph, but if gentlemen will turn to the bill and see what it was when the committee got through with it they will see that its own grandmother would not know it now. Yet the bill that the committee has brought in had patent defects in it. The gentleman from North Dakota [Mr. BURTNESS] a few moments ago called attention to the fact that in section 3 the bill sought to amend section 9 of the law, but that it was not meant to amend section 9; it was another section entirely that was meant. He had that corrected. That shows that there are defects in it, and I submit to my colleague now whether there is any chance to pass wise legislation with the Committee of the Whole House in such frame of mind as it is in now.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, this debate was extended because gentlemen said they wanted to discuss this paragraph and this amendment. I make the point of order that the gentleman from Texas is not discussing the matter before the committee.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will proceed in order.

Mr. BLANTON. It would seem, Mr. Chairman, that nobody can express himself except the gentleman from Wyoming.

The CHAIRMAN. All gentlemen will confine themselves to the matter before the committee.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I have a right in the latitude of debate to call attention to the fact that we are now considering an amendment when the committee is not in such a mood or frame of mind that will permit of wise legislation. Therefore I look with care, not only upon the action of the committee in offering this paragraph but I look with care on any amendment offered and on the remarks made upon any amendment. I submit to the Committee of the Whole that when it gets into this frame of mind we ought to take a recess, we ought to go and get some dinner, we ought to get into a clearer frame of mind in order to pass important legislation.

Mr. CLARKE of New York. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that the gentleman is not discussing the matter before the committee.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, it may not be patent to the gentleman from New York that I am discussing the subject, but it is very patent to other gentlemen. The gentleman from Wyoming has ceased to make objection. I have convinced him that I am in order, and surely when the gentleman from Wyoming sits down, the gentleman from New York ought to remain silent.

Mr. BURTNESS. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the pro forma amendment, and in doing so I want to advise the committee of an amendment which I have sent to the desk, which will come up in due course, relating to lines 5 and 6 on page 9. My amendment is to strike out everything after the word "mortgage," in line 5, namely, the words "incurred for agricultural purposes, or incurred prior to January 1, 1922." I feel that any man who is a bona fide farmer, residing on the land or farming his own land, ought to be entitled to obtain a loan when he needs it, regardless of what he may have incurred such indebtedness for and without some investigator trying to find out what the indebtedness was for. He should be entitled to make the loan even though he incurred debts in some business enterprise outside of his farm; he may have lost his money in some cooperative industry which he was trying to conduct for the benefit of his community or in some other business, or even in buying some mining stock in the State of my friend, the State of Arkansas, or elsewhere.

Mr. WINGO. There are a lot of them like that, and the gentleman realizes that his amendment would destroy all that goes before it.

Mr. BURTNESS. Oh, not at all, because the other provisions are still there and would remain. The applicant would still have to be a farmer or be farming his land, and if he is in debt and about to lose his farm, or for any legitimate reason needs the loan, if he has security that is ample, coming within the provisions of the law, he ought to be entitled to the help of the law. In other words, by adopting my amendment this Federal agency would deal with the applicant in a business way, would determine whether he is worthy, whether he is a farmer under the terms of the act, and whether the security offered is ample—just as any private loan agency would do—and would accept or reject the loan upon its merits alone.

Mr. JONES of Texas. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, like my colleague from Texas [Mr. HUDSPETH], I am in favor of increasing this limit. It is one of the few things in the bill that I am in favor of, because I think you will reduce the overhead expense by increasing the loan limit. It costs no more to make a large loan than to make a small one. I believe the market will absorb the bonds. This is an important matter in this connection. If this paragraph were standing alone it would be all right, but when you link it up with the succeeding paragraph, which authorizes loans to be made through agents who get a commission, then the agent is going to try to make a big loan in order to get a big commission in preference to trying to make a little loan. Consequently, section 5 should go out of the bill.

Mr. STEVENSON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JONES of Texas. No.

Mr. STEVENSON. I call attention to the fact that the secretary-treasurer gets exactly the same commission.

Mr. JONES of Texas. No; if you will turn over to the next paragraph, it says not exceeding 1 per cent of the amount of the loan made may be paid to the agent.

I do not want to get into a controversy with the gentleman. I want to ask you gentlemen, as reasonable men, if you execute a big loan; if you, as an agent, get a commission for execution in accordance with the size of the loan, are you not going to prefer a big loan? That is the reason why the next section should be stricken out.

Mr. EVANS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JONES of Texas. I can not. The next section should be stricken out, because it authorizes loans to be made through agents. Now, listen: Several members of the committee have called attention to the fact that the present law permits loans through agents; but if you will turn to section 15 of the present law you will find it permits loans through agents, but it says that no agent except a bank or trust company may act, and that bank or trust company must indorse the loan. There is a great deal of difference in having a loan made through individual agents who need not indorse and where a bank or trust company must act as collector and also indorse the same.

Mr. A. P. NELSON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JONES of Texas. I am sorry that I can not. That is the point I am making. You know as man to man that if a man can get a loan without forming an association he is going to get it that way. If you had the privilege of getting a loan through agents, you would not form your association. And I want to say this, gentlemen, and I want you to listen; the heart of the farm-loan association is the local association, where every neighbor knows every other neighbor, and he is not going to agree to a loan unless that loan is good, and you are destroying the heart of this system if you adopt this measure with section 5 included. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. DAVILA. Mr. Chairman, I offer my amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 9, line 22, after the word "under," add a new paragraph as follows:

"Provided further, That section 4 as amended by the act of February 27, 1921, authorizing the establishment of a branch bank in Porto Rico and providing that 'loans made by such branch bank when so established shall not exceed the sum of $5,000 to any one borrower,' is hereby amended by striking out '$5,000' and substituting therefor '$10,000.'"

Mr. STEVENSON. Mr. Chairman, I reserve the point of order; I do not care to make it at the moment.

Mr. DAVILA. Mr. Chairman, if there is no objection, I desire the Clerk to read the following letter from the farm-loan commissioner.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the Clerk will read the letter in the time of the gentleman.

There was no objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

TREASURY DEPARTMENT,
FEDERAL FARM LOAN BUREAU,
Washington, February 14, 1923.

HON. FELIX CORDOVA DAVILA,
Commissioner for Porto Rico, House of Representatives.

DEAR MR. COMMISSIONER: In response to your inquiry as to the attitude of the Farm Loan Board toward increasing the maximum loan limit under the farm loan act, as applied to the island of Porto Rico, from $5,000 to $10,000, permit me to state that preliminary investigation of the situation of agriculture on the island led us strongly to feel that the limitation of $5,000 would not enable the Porto Rico branch of the Baltimore bank to extend the farmers on the island all the service to which they were reasonably entitled.

This branch bank is now in operation, having proceeded very carefully and conservatively, and the views suggested above are fully confirmed by the study of the situation by the resident manager, Mr. Ernest B. Thomas, in whose judgment and integrity of purpose we have absolute confidence. The board would, therefore, unanimously approve an amendment to the enabling act changing the maximum from $5,000 to $10,000, believing that to make such loans would be of real service to the island and would lighten the burden on the Federal Land Bank of Baltimore which its establishment temporarily imposes.

Yours very truly,

CHAS. E. LOBDELL,
Farm Loan Commissioner.

Mr. DAVILA. Mr. Chairman, the purpose of my amendment is to extend to Porto Rico some of the privileges that will accrue to the farmers of the United States under the terms of this bill. We are not asking for the full measure of the opportunities and benefits carried in this bill, but we do ask you in all fairness that its spirit be extended to our island, especially as there exist as many reasons to allow our island farmers the same means of credit as are made available to men engaged in the same occupation here in the United States.

Under the terms of section 4 of the Strong bill the Federal Farm Loan Board, if satisfied with the security tendered, can authorize loans in the interest of agricultural development up to $25,000.

We are only asking for two-fifths of that sum, if the board, after subjecting our applications to the same scrutiny, find that loans not to exceed $10,000 are in the interest of agricultural development on the island of Porto Rico.

The Committee on Banking and Currency stated in its report favoring the increase of loans to $25,000 for continental American farmers that this proposition "has been generally indorsed by the farmers' organizations of the country," adding that the hearings before the committee had clearly shown that the present limitation was inadequate in many States. These statements apply with equal force to Porto Rico. On that island the needs of a certain percentage of the farmers can be adequately taken care of under the provisions of the present law. On the other hand, there are plantations on the island whose fiscal operations are on such a scale that they would not be even remotely provided for under the maximum benefits extended by this act to the agricultural interests of continental America.

But the purpose of my amendment is not to reach either of these extreme conditions.

There is a large and growing class of farmers in Porto Rico who stand on middle ground between the humble man who cultivates from 1 to 20 acres and the corporations who represent the absentee owners who have investments in our best sugar and tobacco lands.

These independent farmers, who correspond with the better class of continental American farmers, have been growing in numbers and importance in proportion as Porto Rico has been undergoing industrial development since American occupation. It is for this class of Porto Rican farmers that I appeal to you in behalf of this amendment. The branch of agriculture in which these men are engaged is one that especially calls for an available supply of funds, for they are either engaged in the cultivation of sugar cane, which must be sold to the corporations operating the large centrals, or else they are producers of coffee, which must look abroad for a market. The American taste has become accustomed to Brazilian coffee, and until this is changed our coffee farmers must sell to foreigners. For this reason they are in more pressing need of easy terms of credit than any other class of American farmers.

So much for coffee; now as to sugar. Unlike the grain crops of continental America, the sugar is not "machine-made." From the time it is planted until it is harvested it requires an immense amount of hand labor, and in this respect it more nearly approximates conditions in the Cotton States. Those of you who are familiar with agriculture know that this makes necessary a certain amount of ready cash for hired help if the farmer is to work his growing crop, fertilize it, and give it the proper attention. Too often the Porto Rican colono is compelled to sacrifice his years of labor to the sugar corporations at a ruinous figure because he does not have banking facilities. On the other hand, if instead of dealing with the larger sugar companies he attempts to secure an adequate loan from merchants or bankers, he is subjected to usurious and ruinous rates of interest.

I have information from the Farm Loan Board to the effect that the system is working satisfactorily in the island. There are 562 pending loans, amounting to $1,162,800. There are 251 approved loans and in process of closing, amounting to $517,600. The Porto Rico office has been behind in its work of appraisement and has asked that two additional appraisers be appointed. This is the reason why the volume of work has not been greater.

There are 2,222,404 acres of land in the island, and the average acreage per farm is 49.2.

The population of Porto Rico is 1,299,809. There is disseminated through vale and mountain a rural population of more than 800,000, the remaining being congregated in urban precincts.

The rate of interest in the absence of an agreement is 6 per cent, but it can be extended by contract to 12 per cent. Within this limit it is lawful to discount bills and notes and other similar obligations.

The distribution of credits among the farmers is generally effected by the merchants, the sugar centrals, and the Tobacco Trust. The banks in Porto Rico lend at 10 per cent interest, for a term varying from three to four months, sums of money not in excess of $1,000, and 9 per cent on sums over that amount.

It is very difficult for a small farmer to borrow money from the commercial banks. In the first place, money circulation in the island is less than $5 per capita and the banks, with this small amount of money in circulation, are unable to allow long-time loans. In the second place, they usually lend money to the big interests and ask of the small farmer guaranties that he can not afford to give. So the farmer is bound to borrow the money he needs from the merchant, who is practically his banker, at a rate of interest of 12 per cent and sometimes much more than that.

The increase of the loans from $5,000 to $10,000 will not cost a cent to the United States and will be very valuable to the farmers in Porto Rico. Now if the reasons to extend the credit in the States are good they are also sound and good in Porto Rico, but realizing the difficulties of obtaining the same increase for Porto Rico we limit our petition to $10,000, with the hope that there will be no opposition to our reasonable request.

Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Porto Rico asks unanimous consent to revise and extend his remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. QUIN. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Mississippi offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report:

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. QUIN: Page 9, line 7, strike out the words beginning with line 7 down to the end of line 22.

Mr. QUIN. Mr. Chairman, that includes the two last paragraphs of section 4.

Mr. McFADDEN. The debate on that paragraph is exhausted.

Mr. KNUTSON. I hope that will not be taken out of the gentleman's time.

Mr. QUIN. This is the part of the bill that raises the maximum loan limit. It raises it to $16,000, and when you come down to line 20 you make it $25,000. By striking these two paragraphs out of the bill, if you pass my amendment, you have a maximum of only $10,000, after you have cut away the farm-loan association in every county in the United States.

Now, the proposition before this House is whether or not you propose to come, taking the vitals out of the farm loan act, and kill its usefulness to the small farmers, and put the Government in the business of operating large loans for great, large plantations that do not need this aid from the Government; or will you let the law stand as it is, serving the small farmers? Gentlemen, this act was originally passed from dire necessity, so that the small farmers of the United States could make these loans, so as to save their farms and prevent themselves from going into bankruptcy. The apparent purpose of this Strong amendment that is offered to the farm loan act would take away that right from the little farmers of the United States, because there is an effort made now on every hand to make these securities taxable both by the Federal and State Governments.

If we are going to go into the business of putting up $25,000 loans and cutting out these little local farm-loan associations that practically guarantee every dollar that the United States Government underwrites in this way, and allow an agent to go in and get a fee and a bonus and make loans helter-skelter, with no neighborhood security, no neighborhood supervision to see that an honest deal is given, you can look for only trouble and confusion.

Practically all of the farmers' organizations are begging us to kill the Strong bill or amendment. To-day these securities are selling at a premium. Farm-loan bonds now are selling at such a premium that the farmer has to pay only 4½ per cent. Who would interfere with that? Do you not know that if you put the limit at $16,000 and $25,000 the little sand-hill farmer, the little man down in the valley, the little man with a beehive near his house, is going to suffer? The original farm loan act was passed for the benefit of the poor man, the poor farmer; and here you are endeavoring to create a great big system of farm banking in which the Government will be engaged, to destroy the farm loan act so far as the small farmer is concerned, to help whom? You surely can not represent the small farmers in your districts. You surely can not represent the man that needs paternal help from the Federal Government. Whom do you contemplate helping? It occurs to me that the big farm-loan mortgage companies in the United States and the great insurance companies and the savings banks are able to take care of these $16,000 and $25,000 loans, and the Government farm loan law ought to continue to take care of the small farmer. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Mississippi has expired.

Mr. McFADDEN. Mr. Chairman, how much time remains?

The CHAIRMAN. Three minutes.

Mr. KETCHAM. Mr. Chairman, I have an amendment which I wish to offer.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Michigan offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. KETCHAM: Page 9, line 5, after the word "purposes," strike out the comma and the words "or incurred prior to January 1, 1922."

Mr. KETCHAM. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, the purpose of my amendment will be to restrict the provisions of this section of the bill, which, it occurs to me, are altogether too broad.

I call you attention to the fact that this is a measure designed to be of benefit to the farmer, and I believe that this section should be restricted so that any mortgage indebtedness which has been incurred previous to January 1, 1922, or thereafter, should be limited to agricultural purposes.

I sincerely trust that the amendment will be approved by the whole committee, and thus perfect the bill. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Michigan has expired. All time has expired.

Mr. STRONG of Kansas. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. All time has expired. There are now several amendments to this section on the Clerk's desk. The committee will vote on the amendments in the order in which they were sent to the Clerk's desk. Without objection, the Clerk will report the first one.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. STEAGALL: Page 9, line 13, after the colon, strike out all down to the colon in line 20.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Alabama.

The question was taken, and the Chairman announced that the "noes" seemed to have it.

Mr. STEAGALL. A division, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. A division is demanded.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 46, noes 59.

So the amendment was rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the next amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment by Mr. DAVILA: On page 9, line 22, after the word "under" add a new paragraph as follows: "Provided further, That section 4 as amended by the act of February 27, 1921, authorizing the establishment of a branch bank in Porto Rico and providing that loans made by such branch bank when so established shall not exceed the sum of $5,000 to any one borrower, is hereby amended by striking out "$5,000" and substituting therefor "$10,000."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Porto Rico.

The question being taken, on a division (demanded by Mr. STEVENSON) there were—ayes 93, noes 8.

Accordingly the amendment was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the next amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. QUIN: Page 9, line 7, strike out the words beginning with line 7 to the end of line 22.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is upon the amendment offered by the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. QUIN].

The question being taken, the amendment was rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the next amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. KETCHAM: Page 9, line 5, after the word "purposes" strike out the comma and the words "or incurred prior to January 1, 1922."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. KETCHAM].

The question being taken, on a division the Chairman announced that the noes appeared to have it.

Mr. BLANTON. I ask for a division, Mr. Chairman. That is a good amendment.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 23, noes 79.

Accordingly the amendment was rejected.

Mr. REGG. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Ohio moves that the committee do now rise.

The question being taken, on a division (demanded by Mr. BEGG) there were—ayes 46, noes 67.

Accordingly the motion was rejected.

Mr. BEGG. Mr. Chairman, I offer a preferential motion.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from North Dakota has an amendment on the Clerk's desk.

Mr. BEGG. I have a preferential motion. I move to strike out the enacting clause.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Ohio moves to strike out the enacting clause.

Mr. McFADDEN. Mr. Chairman, I hope that motion will not prevail.

Mr. BEGG. Mr. Chairman, I demand the floor.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman has the floor.

Mr. BEGG. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee——

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, all debate is closed.

The CHAIRMAN. Debate is closed on this section, but the Chair is of the opinion that as this motion does not relate to the section, the gentleman has a right to discuss it for five minutes.

Mr. DOWELL. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman has the right to make the motion, but I submit that he has no right to discuss it.

Mr. McFADDEN. Debate is closed on this section.

The CHAIRMAN. It is true that debate is closed on this section, but not on the motion to strike out the enacting clause.

Mr. BEGG. Mr. Chairman, everybody knows that this motion is debatable.

The CHAIRMAN. The motion to strike out the enacting clause is debatable. The Chair has recognized the gentleman from Ohio to discuss it for five minutes.

Mr. BEGG. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, I shall not consume five minutes. [Applause.] I have offered this motion because this proposition is a vital one to a good many hundreds of millions of dollars that have been bona fidely invested under the laws of the United States; and if the time has come when it is a crime to be interested in private industry that is serving the public on the same cost basis as the Government is serving it, then I want to disavow my obligation along that line.

There is enough in this bill to merit a reasonable and fair discussion—more than we are getting this afternoon by moving to close debate.

Mr. BLANTON. You are right.

Mr. BEGG. I am perfectly willing to have a show-down, and if I am outvoted by the men who represent business as well as the farmers—and farming is a business—I want to protest against the passage of a stampede motion because the leader says we want to do it to-night. If you want to ruin millions and hundreds of millions of dollars honestly invested and come out and stand for the Government going into private business, then go ahead.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, I do not know just what the gentleman from Ohio has in mind in suggesting that this bill will destroy private enterprise or interfere unfairly with private business or jeopardize large sums now invested. All of the money that is invested in competition with the farm loan banks through joint-stock banks is enjoying a governmental privilege that no other private interest or enterprise enjoys.

Mr. BEGG. Will the gentleman permit just one question?

Mr. MONDELL. Just let me finish my statement, please.

Mr. BEGG. Certainly.

Mr. MONDELL. We provided for the joint-stock land banks and we gave them a certain privilege of very great value to them. We will all of us regret having done that if every time it is proposed to broaden or extend the business of the Federal land banks we are to be met with the opposition of gentlemen who are enjoying this special privilege of having their obligations free from Federal taxes.

Mr. BEGG. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MONDELL. I yield to the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. BEGG. In the first place, the gentleman misstates when he says our obligations are free from Federal taxes. It is only the buyer of the bonds who escapes that. But that is not the question I want to ask the gentleman.

Does the gentleman believe it is fair competition to have the Government appoint an agent in every county in the United States to get business? If they can not get business on fair competition they ought to go out of business.

Mr. DOWELL. The gentleman from Ohio is seeking to protect the mortgage companies as against the interests of the farmers.

Mr. MONDELL. The gentleman is getting on very questionable ground when he says that the Government shall not have the same opportunity to secure business that a private individual has who is enjoying a special privilege.

Mr. STEVENSON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MONDELL. I yield to the gentleman from South Carolina.

Mr. STEVENSON. I call the gentleman's attention to the fact that the Government has been paying all the overhead expenses of these institutions, which amount to 50 per cent of the expenses of the Farm Loan Board, and we propose by this bill to make them pay their half.

Mr. MONDELL. I suppose that is one reason why there is all this opposition to the legislation.

Mr. YOUNG. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MONDELL. Yes.

Mr. YOUNG. Does the gentleman believe that it is fair to the owners of the present bonds issued by the banks to take hasty action to-night which may substantially reduce the value of those bonds?

Mr. MONDELL. No one believes that the action we are proposing to take to-night will have any injurious effect on the bonds.

Mr. YOUNG. I do.

Mr. MONDELL. The owners of those bonds think it least of all, but that is an appeal which they make to people who do not understand the situation. The trouble with these gentlemen is that having been given a special privilege they yield to the temptation that seems to surround all who have special privileges that they shall have full enjoyment of those privileges and that the Government shall not proceed with its business.

Mr. McFADDEN. Mr. Chairman, I move that all debate on the motion of the gentleman from Ohio do now close.

The motion was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BEGG], to strike out the enacting clause.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. BEGG) there were 46 ayes and 73 noes.

So the motion to strike out the enacting clause was rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment of the gentleman from North Dakota [Mr. BURTNESS].

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 9, line 5, after the word "mortgaged," strike out the balance of lines 5 and 6.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from North Dakota.

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will proceed with the reading of the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 5. That section 15 of said act be amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 15. That whenever it shall appear to the Federal Farm Loan Board that national farm-loan associations have not been formed, or the local national farm-loan association fails, neglects, or refuses to serve properly the needs of its territory in any locality, said board may, after 30 days' notice to said associations, in its discretion, authorize Federal land banks to make loans in such territory on farm lands through agents approved by said board.

"Such loans shall be subject to the same conditions and restrictions as if the same were made through national farm-loan associations, and each borrower shall contribute 5 per cent of the amount of his loan to the capital of the Federal land bank, and shall become the owner of as much capital stock of the land bank as such contribution shall warant.

"The Federal Farm Loan Board shall, by proper regulations, require each Federal land bank to maintain, out of earnings apportionable to stock required on loans made through agents, sufficient reserves to cover and pay delinquent payments on such class of loans.

"Shareholders in a Federal land bank under this provision shall be held individually responsible, equally and ratably, and not one for another, for all contracts, debts, and engagements of such bank to the extent of the amount of stock owned by them at the par value thereof, in addition to the amount paid in and represented by their shares.

"Such local agents shall serve at the pleasure of the bank and shall give surety bond for the faithful performance of their duties in such sums as the Federal Farm Loan Board shall prescribe and may collect from each borrower at the time the loan is closed such compensation as the Federal Farm Loan Board may approve, not exceeding 1 per cent of the amount of the loan made, with a minimum of $5 per loan: Provided, That no such agent shall engage in making land-mortgage loans through or for any other land-mortgage company or association.

"Whenever any national farm-loan association, located in territory served by an agent appointed under the provisions of this section, shall by resolution declare its willingness to serve the prospective borrowers in such territory and transmits a copy of such resolution to the Federal Farm Loan Board, the Federal Farm Loan Board shall at once instruct the Federal land bank of that district to discontinue taking applications through agents in such territory and after completing the loans applied for through such agents up to that time, shall thereafter only make loans through the National Farm Loan Association in said territory so long as it continues to serve its territory properly.

"This amendment shall not operate to prejudice the rights nor impair the liabilities of any agent heretofore designated under the provision of the original section 15.

"Any borrower who acquires stock in the Federal land bank under the provisions of this section shall have one vote in all meetings of shareholders of the bank for each share of stock owned by such borrower not exceeding 20 votes and a like number of votes in the election of directors of such bank, such votes to be cast and canvassed in such manner as the Federal Farm Loan Board shall provide.

"Any 10 borrowers under this section whose loans aggregate not less than $20,000 may at any time organize themselves into a national farm loan association by filing with the proper Federal land bank their articles of association as originally provided in section 7, and thereupon the stock held by such borrower in the Federal land bank shall be transferred to the association thus organized, and each borrower shall receive a corresponding amount of stock in such association. The stock of the bank and the stock of the association shall each be held subject to the same terms and conditions and the members thereof shall be entitled to the same rights and benefits as if the association had been originally organized under section 7 of this act."

With the following committee amendment:

Page 11, after the word "agent," in line 10, insert "or secretary-treasurer of a national farm-loan association."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the committee amendment.

Mr. A. P. NELSON. Mr. Chairman, I offer a substitute for the committee amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. Is it a substitute for the committee amendment in the bill?

Mr. A. P. NELSON. Yes.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the substitute amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 11, line 12, after the word "loan," insert a comma and the words "eligible at a Federal land bank," so that the proviso will read that "no agent or secretary-treasurer of a national farm loan eligible at a Federal land bank shall engage in making land-mortgage loans through or for any other land mortgage company or association."

Mr. WINGO. That should be offered as an amendment to the committee amendment.

Mr. A. P. NELSON. Mr. Chairman, I think, on reflection, it is obvious why this amendment should be made. The language is too restrictive and we want to have the very best secretary-treasurers, as well as the very best agents. There are several secretary-treasurers now acting for the associations who are also acting for other farm-mortgage associations. There are loans not eligible in the Federal land bank. In order that we shall be able to have the very best secretary-treasurer, as well as the very best agent, we provide that he may make loans for other associations or mortgage corporations, provided he does not make loans that are eligible for the Federal land bank without first offering such eligible loans to the Federal land bank.

Mr. BURTNESS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. A. P. NELSON. Yes.

Mr. BURTNESS. Would this committee amendment disqualify the cashiers of ordinary State banks to act as secretary-treasurers where such banks make ordinary real-estate loans?

Mr. A. P. NELSON. Not if he will first offer loans eligible for the land bank to the Federal land bank for which he acts as agent.

Mr. BURTNESS. If he is offered and makes for his bank any first-class mortgage loans for agricultural purposes and eligible for Federal farm bank loans then such cashier of the bank would be disqualified from acting as secretary-treasurer of the association?

Mr. A. P. NELSON. Yes; if he makes such eligible loans without first offering them to the Federal land bank.

Mr. BURTNESS. Did the committee recognize that some of the very best secretary-treasurers—and, I admit, some of the worst—are in fact executive officers of the banks in the small towns scattered all over the country and that by the committee amendment they could not continue to act as such? I concede the amendment of the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. NELSON] would help out the situation created by the committee amendment immensely, but I still doubt the wisdom of the qualification at all.

Mr. WINGO. The objection the gentleman offers was one that was offered to the committee amendment pending in the bill, but the further amendment which the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. A. P. NELSON] has offered will take care of the objection.

Mr. BEEDY. He says no.

Mr. WINGO. Oh, it will. We had gentlemen before the committee, one of them the president of a Federal land bank and one a local secretary-treasurer who would have been cut out by my original amendment, and they admitted that it would take care of the situation, because the proposal which was read at the Clerk's desk, in addition to that which is printed in italics in the bill, would make it provide that no agent making direct loans nor any local secretary-treasurer of a national farm-loan association could make loans that are eligible at the Federal land bank through a private mortgage company. But if such agent or secretary will give to the Federal land bank the applications for loans that are eligible under the Federal land-bank system, then I have no objection to his taking care of the other needs of the farmers by taking loans that are not eligible at a land bank to a private land loan company.

Mr. A. P. NELSON. This last amendment covers that question.

Mr. WINGO. Yes.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Wisconsin has expired.

Mr. A. P. NELSON. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for two additional minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There were no objection.

Mr. BURTNESS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. A. P. NELSON. Yes.

Mr. BURTNESS. In this connection let me state that the suggestion made by the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. WINGO] would be correct if he were absolutely certain that the Federal land-bank system could take care of all of the demands from that community, but if it is unable to take care of all of them, and that has been the history during the past two or three years, then there may be very serious question as to the advisability of disqualifying these men.

Mr. A. P. NELSON. Would it not naturally follow that if the loans are presented and are eligible and can not be taken care of, they would be taken care of in the other way?

Mr. BURTNESS. If the provision was that such loans would be first offered the Federal land banks and if not accepted within a reasonable time then they might be placed elsewhere, I would see no objection to it.

Mr. McFADDEN. That is exactly what is proposed.

Mr. WINGO. Yes; and it will protect the association from being controlled by private land companies.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the committee amendment.

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The question now is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Wisconsin, which, without objection, the Clerk will again report.

There was no objection and the Clerk again reported the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Wisconsin.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HUSTED. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. ANDERSON. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the section.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Wisconsin moves to strike out the section.

Mr. McFADDEN. Mr. Chairman, pending that, I ask unanimous consent that debate upon this section and all amendments thereto close in 10 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania asks unanimous consent that all debate upon the section and all amendments thereto close in 10 minutes. Is there objection?

Mr. JONES of Texas. Mr. Chairman, reserving the right to object, I would like to have five minutes, and that is the last that I shall ask.

Mr. McFADDEN. Mr. Chairman, I do not want to be discourteous to the gentleman, but I shall have to insist upon my request. I move that all debate upon the section and all amendments thereto close in 10 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania moves that all debate upon the section and all amendments thereto close in 10 minutes.

Mr. JONES of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I move to amend that by making it 15 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Texas to the motion of the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. JONES of Texas) there were—ayes 46, noes 57.

So the amendment was rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is now on the motion of the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. ANDERSON. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the House, this is the section about which there seems to have been most of the controversy this afternoon. I have not the time to go into it at length, but the question here apparently is whether we shall abandon the policy which we have heretofore established in connection with the farm-loan system and adopt an entirely new policy. We now have two kinds of land banks, and we propose here to establish two kinds of liability—one kind of liability on the part of those members of the farm-loan system, or the stockholders who are members of the farm-loan associations, and a different class of liability upon the part of those who obtain loans which are solicited by agents provided for in the section. A credit is not a thing that ought to be sold by agents. It is not a thing that ought to be easy. It is something that ought, for the most part, to be made difficult.

No man ought to have credit who is not prepared to demonstrate the necessity for it and the security of the risk, but when you start sending agents all over this country to solicit business for the farm-loan system, you are entering upon a policy which seems to me to be of very doubtful character. [Applause.] I believe that if the farmers of the country are ever to get any permanent relief from the situation that now confronts them, if they are to improve their relative welfare in comparison with the industrial worker of the country, if there is to be any restoration of the normal relationship between agriculture and the industrial purchasing power in this country, that restoration must in the last analysis come through farm organizations, through organization of production by cooperative effort. This bill in its original conception was based upon the idea of promoting among the agricultural people of the country the idea of cooperation.

I am willing to admit that the farm-loan system in the West has not been wholly successful, but I think that we take a backward step when we abandon the system of cooperative enterprise in the agricultural sections of the country and undertake to develop in its place a system of direct national solicitation and direct national action. I am so much in earnest about this question, I am so thoroughly satisfied that the development of the United States agriculturally must depend upon the development of farm organization, of organization of production, of organization of farm marketing, upon cooperative organization, if you please, that I am unwilling to see this backward step taken in the administration of the farm-loan system. [Applause.] If I were at liberty to do so, I would like to yield to my friend from Texas, but I suppose I have not that right under the rule.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman can not yield time.

Mr. ANDERSON. I ask unanimous consent—how much time have I remaining?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman has one and a half minutes remaining.

Mr. STEVENSON. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. ANDERSON. Yes.

Mr. STEVENSON. This is the kind of a situation that occurs, and I want to know if the gentleman is opposed to our relieving that. Here is a farm-loan association in a county, 22 members; they have got their loans, everything is settled down. Here is a fellow who just lives in the same county, with a piece of land on which he has got a mortgage, and it has come due, and he wants to get the farm-loan association to take it up. He comes to that association—it is the only way he can get it—and they say: "Let him go on the block; Tom wants that land." Are we, because of some fancied idea of cooperative associations, to deny the loan to this man because——

Mr. ANDERSON. I think the gentleman has the reverse of the situation. Are we, because some man somewhere in the United States will not be able to get the benefit of this system, to try to take a step backward from the direction in which the clear development of agriculture of the Nation ought to proceed? [Applause.]

Mr. WINGO. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Mr. Chairman——

The CHAIRMAN. The time was fixed by a motion, and 10 minutes was provided for, 5 minutes of which has been used in favor of the motion. The gentleman from Arkansas is opposed to the motion, a member of the committee, and he is entitled to recognition.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, I understood in the division of time I was to have five minutes, and what I desire to say has particular application to this section.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair understands that the gentleman from Indiana indicated his desire for recognition, but since the time was not fixed by unanimous consent but fixed by motion the ordinary rule must control, which is that a member of the committee desiring recognition in opposition to the motion is entitled to recogn tion.

Mr. WINGO. Mr. Chairman, in behalf of the committee I want to call attention to some things which the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. ANDERSON] evidently overlooked. I think that it is not necessary that I should state my loyalty to the cooperative movement. Without intending to reflect upon the loyalty of the gentleman from Minnesota I suspect I have demonstrated my efforts in behalf of the cooperative movement among the farmers in a more practical way than he has since I have been a Member of this House.

Here is a situation that threatens your cooperative movement. Since the amendments that I have insisted upon have gone into this section, I will tell you what I believe it will do, and I will tell you why the joint-stock land banks fight us on that proposition. We found, to our amazement—not just in isolated instances; we found in a great many instances, and especially of late—that the private mortgage companies and the agents, in some instances, of joint-stock land banks were worming themselves into local cooperative associations as secretary-treasurers.

For what purpose were they doing it? For the purpose of throttling the local association, for the purpose of controlling its business, to delay action on the applications, and to make the farmers in the local cooperative associations get disheartened and tired of waiting, and then have them turn the loans over to the private mortgage company which they represent. This section, as we have now amended it, will enable the system to kick out of the offices of secretary-treasurer these disloyal secretary-treasurers who have done more than anything else to prevent the cooperative associations from functioning.

That is the reason why I am against the motion of the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. ANDERSON] to strike it out, because I want to protect the cooperative spirit against the insidious control of the private agents of the private mortgage companies who have wormed themselves into these positions. Under this section they will be cut out, and no agent can be appointed to make a direct loan unless that association fails, neglects, or refuses to let its neighbors in to get the benefits of the act.

Is there a man on this floor who will stand up and say that he is willing to shut the door in the face of an honest farmer simply because his neighbors say, "We have got all our loans, and we will not even meet to pass upon your application"? I would give that man relief, and I think you can do it without destroying the cooperative spirit. This amendment will give some incentive to the local association to function, and it will take off the local cooperative association the dead hand of the private mortgage companies' agents who have prostituted those associations for their own private and selfish purposes. [Applause.]

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. WOOD] may be allowed to proceed for five minutes, notwithstanding the limitation that has been imposed.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Wyoming?

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, reserving the right to object, I would not object at all if it were not for the rules of the House which have been put into force and effect here to-day, which prevent the gentleman from Wyoming from doing this. The gentleman knows he can not do that under the regular rules of the House.

A MEMBER. Regular order!

The CHAIRMAN. The regular order is, Is there objection?

Mr. BLANTON. I object.

Mr. FIELDS. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Chairman, these gentlemen have all spoken several times already in the RECORD.

Mr. McFADDEN. Mr. Chairman, how many minutes remain?

The CHAIRMAN. Two minutes.

Mr. McFADDEN. I yield that to the gentleman from Indiana.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Indiana has two minutes.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, there is one thing I want to call attention to. It is not peculiar to this bill alone, but it is characteristic of the vast majority of legislation that passes this House. Every Member of Congress at some time or other has inveighed against the tendency toward a bureaucratic form of Government. Now there is in this bill between lines 16 and 20 on page 10 a delegation to a board the power that this Congress ought to reserve to itself with reference to fixing a reserve. It is the duty of Congress to legislate. It is not the duty of Congress to delegate its power to legislate to a bureau.

Mr. STEVENSON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. No; I can not yield. I have only two minutes.

I want to say to you that in every important piece of legislation that we pass here requiring administration in any of the departments we are delegating the power to legislate—the most important part of the law—to that division or department. It is bad on its face. It is destructive of our kind of Government. It is causing more criticism than has ever been had from any other source. We are constantly hearing on every side the statement that we are tending to a bureaucratic form of Government, and when we look at a statute to ascertain what are the rights under the law we find that we have given permission to administrative officers to fix legislation that is vital to that law. In all this legislation and all of other legislation of similar character it is the duty of Congress to legislate and refrain from abdicating its power in favor of the heads of these bureaus. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. ANDERSON].

The question was taken; and the Chairman announced that the noes seemed to have it.

Mr. ANDERSON. Mr. Chairman, I ask for a division.

The CHAIRMAN. A division is demanded.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 59, noes 46.

Mr. STRONG of Kansas. Mr. Chairman, I ask for tellers.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Kansas asks for tellers.

Tellers were ordered, and the Chairman appointed Mr. McFADDEN and Mr. ANDERSON to act as tellers.

The committee again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 75, noes 48.

So the amendment was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk resumed and concluded the reading of the bill.

Mr. McFADDEN. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise and report the bill and the amendments to the House with the recommendation that the amendments be agreed to and that the bill as amended do pass.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly, the committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. MCARTHUR, chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee having had under consideration the bill (H. R. 14270) to amend sections 3, 4, 9, 12, 15, 21, 22, and 25 of the act of Congress approved July 17, 1916, known as the Federal farm loan act, had directed him to report the same back to the House with sundry amendments, with the recommendation that the amendments be agreed to and that the bill as amended do pass.

Mr. McFADDEN. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the bill and all amendments thereto to the final passage or rejection.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania moves the previous question on the bill and amendments to the final passage or rejection.

The previous question was ordered.

SENATE BILLS REFERRED.

Under clause 2, Rule XXIV, Senate bills of the following titles were taken from the Speaker's table and referred to their appropriate committees, as indicated below:

S. 4308. An act to authorize the general accounting officers of the United States to allow credit to certain disbursing officers for payments of salary made on properly certified and approved vouchers; to the Committee on Claims.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

SUNDAY, February 18, 1923.

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

Rev. William B. Waller, of Washington, D. C., offered the following prayer:

Almighty God, our Heavenly Father, we thank Thee that we may approach Thee confidently this morning; that we need not appease or propitiate Thee, but may trust Thee; that we need not comprehend Thee, but may accept Thee; that Thou art waiting to be gracious. Command Thy blessing upon us as Thou seest we may need at this time. Comfort those that mourn, give unto them that beseech Thee the realization that the everlasting arms of the Heavenly Father are round about them. We pray for all who are in distress everywhere. Let them realize the sympathy of the Lord Jesus Christ, who wept by the side of the grave of Lazarus and is willing to mingle his tears with ours and to speak words of resurrection, hope, and comfort. Guard and bless all of us, we pray Thee. Fit us for all the privileges and responsibilities for which Thou dost summon us. Let the blessing of the Sabbath rest upon our President, upon the Congress, upon all in authority in our land, that we may be a people whose God is the Lord. Bless us as we meet to pay tribute to the memory of our distinguished dead who have served well in their day and generation. And at last, when we are done serving Thee here below, receive us into glory with all the loved ones who have gone before, and with all the redeemed of God, and we will praise Thee, Father, Son, and Spirit, in a world without end. Amen.

THE JOURNAL.

Mr. CRAGO. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the reading of the Journal may be postponed until to-morrow.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania asks unanimous consent that the reading of the Journal be postponed until to-morow. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

SPEAKER PRO TEMPORE.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will ask the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. FOCHT] to preside.

Mr. FOCHT took the chair as Speaker pro tempore.

MEMORIAL EXERCISES.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the special order.

The Clerk read as follows:

On motion of Mr. BUTLER, by unanimous consent—

Ordered, That Sunday, February 18, 1923, at 12 o'clock noon, be set apart for addresses on the life, character, and public services of Hon. BOIES PENROSE, Hon. PHILANDER C. KNOX, Hon. WILLIAM E. CROW, late Senators from the State of Pennsylvania; and Hon. CHARLES R. CONNELL, late a Representative from the State of Pennsylvania.

Mr. CRAGO. Mr. Speaker, I offer the following resolution.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Pennsylvania offers a resolution which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

House Resolution 540.

Resolved, That the business of the House be now suspended, that opportunity may be given for tributes to the memory of Hon. BOIES PENROSE, Hon. PHILANDER C. KNOX, Hon. WILLIAM E. CROW, late Senators from the State of Pennsylvania, and Hon. CHARLES R. CONNELL, late a Member of this House from the State of Pennsylvania.

Resolved, That as a particular mark of respect to the memory of the deceased, and in recognition of their distinguished public careers, the House at the conclusion of these exercises shall stand adjourned.

Resolved, That the Clerk communicate these resolutions to the Senate.

Resolved, That the Clerk send copies of these resolutions to the families of the deceased.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

The resolution was agreed to.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MADDEN].

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Speaker, I first met BOIES PENROSE in 1893. He was tall, erect, athletic, intellectual—a perfect specimen of physical and mental manhood. I knew Philadelphia and Philadelphians very well in those days. I happened to be in Philadelphia that year, when the leader of the Republican Party in Pennsylvania, Senator Matthew Stanley Quay, had proposed BOIES PENROSE as a candidate for mayor of the city. Those favoring the mayoralty candidacy of Mr. PENROSE wore in the lapels of their coats a pen with an artificial rose attached. That was the insignia of their friendship and support of his candidacy. One of Mr. PENROSE's friends attached one of these insignia to the lapel of my coat. I was in the city for a few days, and I called on one of those opposition leaders who was a friend of mine. He said: "You are associating with the losing crowd. PENROSE is not to be the mayor of Philadelphia. I would advise you to get into the band wagon." The gentleman to whom I refer was Dave Lane, a power in those days and every other day while he lived. It turned out that the prophecy of Mr. Lane was true. Mr. PENROSE did not become the mayor of Philadelphia, but shortly after that he became the Senator from Pennsylvania in the Senate of the United States.

The leadership of Mr. Quay was recognized all over the Union. It was thought that when he passed away it would be hard to fill his place, but Mr. PENROSE filled it to the full, better than it had ever been filled before in Pennsylvania, which always had great leaders. Mr. PENROSE graduated at the head of his college class. No two men who ever served in the Senate of the United States had a better classical education than PENROSE and Quay. Neither one of them was an orator. That does not mean that they could not speak, but they were wonderful workers. They were great Senators. They attracted nation-wide attention. They had more power within the boundaries of their State and throughout the Nation than any other two men that I have known in the Senate during the history of my experience.

Senator PENROSE was a student, mainly a student of the finances of the Nation. He afterwards became chairman of the Finance Committee of the Senate. He was recognized as an authority on all tariff matters and matters of finance. He was a potential factor in shaping the financial policy of the country. He rarely spoke, but when he did everybody recognized that what he said was authoritative. I remember his first campaign for reelection after the amendment to the Constitution which required Senators to be elected by popular vote. It was thought on every hand that PENROSE would not become a candidate before the people; that his best qualification was to manipulate the members of the legislature, who had theretofore elected the Senators; but he disappointed a great many of those who would have liked to see him retire from the Senatorship by announcing his candidacy for Senator and deciding to make a campaign throughout the State before the people. He made the most wonderful campaign that has ever been made by any man for this great office. I talked with him one day and asked him how he liked campaigning from town to town among the people. He said he really enjoyed it; that there was only one danger connected with the work. He was required to speak a great many times every day, and the danger that he saw was that he might come to like the music of his own voice and get into the habit of speaking oftener than he thought occasion might require. But after the campaign was over he had the good sense not to continue campaign speeches on the floor of the Senate. He spoke when occasion required, when the business of the Nation called for speech.

He was one of the greatest organizers the Nation has ever known. He had the confidence of those who were associated with him to a more marked degree than any other man I ever knew. The organization of the Republican Party in Pennsylvania under his leadership was impregnable. It spoke the voice of the people. It advocated clean government. It advocated things that were of interest to the people of the State. The best manifestation of the fact that it did so was the continued confidence in which that organization was held. PENROSE was a lovable character, not always easy of approach, but to those who knew him best he was a man of kindly spirit who had charitable views. He was modest, unassuming, retiring in his disposition, contrary to the general conception of what great leadership means. He devoted his life almost exclusively to the upbuilding of the Republican Party within his State and throughout the Nation. He could afford to do this, because he was a man of wealth. He had no ulterior purpose. There was no reason why he should have. He devoted his time, his genius, his knowledge, his experience, his wealth to the well-being of the Nation. He was a towering figure in every national Republican convention. It was not necessary for Mr. PENROSE to be present to wield the influence, for his organization was so true to what he wanted that his word was law. Whether that word was passed from a distance or on the ground, it made no difference.

He was a marvelous legislator. He was constantly on guard, constant in his attendance on the sessions of the Senate, except during his late illness. You always found him at work; his devotion was unselfish to a great cause. He was a friend upon whom one might always rely. His passing away from the activities of this life was a great shock to his friends and to the Nation. It was a great loss to the Republican Party and a great loss to the people of Pennsylvania. He had a mind as clear as the daylight sun. He was clear in his expressions; he was vitriolic sometimes in what he had to say, but never radical on any subject. He always had a ready reply for anything that might be said by an opponent. He stood as a bulwark of national honor. He believed in the Nation in its present and its future, and he always advocated legislation calculated to make for a greater America. He believed that it was a wonderful thing to be an American, and he always acted on that belief. He thought that the most wonderful privilege that could come to a man was to be a citizen of the United States. He thought that was the great privilege. He always realized that it carried with it the greatest responsibility, and in the exercise of the responsibility placed upon him under his privileges of citizenship he was true to every national ideal. He thought it was more worth while to be a citizen in the humblest walks of American life than to be the greatest ruler of any other nation. He believed that it was a wonderful thing for everybody here, and he acted upon that belief, to live in a land where every citizen is a sovereign and where every man, woman, and child is free to worship God according to the dictates of his own conscience—a land whose inventions lead the world, where the printing press and the church follow close upon the march of empires, where labor is exalted to comfortable homes, where caste is ignored, where the humblest child of poverty may aspire unrebuked to the highest place in the gift of the Nation.

He realized, as I have heard him say, more than any other man could that the men from the worn-out monarchies as the result of the great World War came to realize that the noblest trend of human progress lies in the direction of a republic. He realized that in this supreme land the best of the human race might find expression, while it was bound to win the acknowledgment that America, under a free government, outstripped the world.

He also realized, as I have heard him express it, that with a proper degree of devotion and unselfishness and patriotism in the minds and hearts of those who from time to time occupy high official places in the Nation's council and supported by a united, patriotic, unselfish, devoted people that America was bound to live forever to emphasize the life and strength of this the greatest of all republics.

Mr. PENROSE was a great American; he believed in the things that I have just described to an extent greater than that of any other man that I ever knew. He believed that the safety of the Nation lies in the patriotic devotion of the people, in their continued unselfish practice of true Americanism, and in their willingness to fight while they are here to protect and preserve and perpetuate American institutions so that they may be handed down to be preserved and applauded by the generations who are to people this continent in the ages to come.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, those who knew BOIES PENROSE best and recall his many virtues will, I think, agree with me that among those virtues perhaps the most conspicuous were the qualities of fair and square dealing, steadfastness of purpose, and unwavering courage.

I became acquainted with our departed friend during my service in the Fifty-sixth Congress, but I did not come to know him well until somewhat later, and in connection with questions of tariff and tariff revision. He was a stanch and stalwart and unwavering believer in the doctrine of a protective tariff, not in a protective tariff for Pennsylvania or for the East alone, but for the country—North, South, East, and West—and he was not less insistent upon having a schedule which applied to the South or West square in its provisions with the protected policy than he was in the case of a schedule relating to products produced or utilized in the section in which he lived.

I witnessed a striking illustration of this steadfast adherence to principle and policy during hearings in connection with the consideration of the Payne-Aldrich tariff bill. An item of very great importance to the West and the Southwest was under consideration before the Senate committee. Some members of the committee were inclined to the view that the treatment of that particular schedule in the manner urged by the West would be criticized and might, indirectly at least, be harmful to certain interests in the East, some of them in Pennsylvania. It was Senator PENROSE who, in a few words, quietly but quite decisively spoken, settled the question. To him it was merely a question as to whether what was proposed squared with the principle and the policy to which he adhered. If it did, then that principle and that policy could only be sustained, could only be justified by doing the thing that squared with its fair and national application.

It was the first opportunity I had had to witness the Senator from Pennsylvania in action at a crucial time in defense of a principle or policy that might be temporarily or locally unpopular, but it revealed the man as I knew him from that time on—a follower of the principles he espoused without trimming or hesitation, a champion of the fair deal, a man of sound judgment and of unfailing courage.

Senator PENROSE, like all men who rise to positions of prominence and who have great responsibilities laid upon them, was the subject of severe and, I regret to say, unfair and unreasonable criticism. Such is the price of prominence. He who drifts with the tide, shifts with the wind, and has an ear accutely attuned to temporary or local clamor may, for a time, enjoy much superficial public approval, but his accomplishments in the public interests will be small and his memory fleeting. Those who stand firm and steadfast in defense of principle, in adherence to policies to which they have given their faith, in conscientious discharge of public duty and responsibility, are certain to be unfairly and unjustly criticized and are likely to be vilified and abused. This is the unfailing rule, the one that has no exceptions, and all who are placed in positions of responsibility must accept it as an inevitable accompaniment of power and of responsible station.

BOIES PENROSE was a splendid product of his people, his State, and his country. He was among the comparatively few who in any time or generation are worthy to be classed and to be remembered as statesmen. He looked the part, he acted the part, he towered above the average man in will and strength of purpose as he towered above them in his magnificent physical frame. He was a giant among men in every way—in stature, in intellect, in will power, in strength of purpose, and in courage. He performed a great service to his State and to the Nation. He had strong opposition; he was the victim of severe criticism; but, above it all, he stood a splendid and stalwart figure who will be long remembered as one of the master minds of his day.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, some one has referred to those friendships which spring up between members of different political affiliations in this House as the flowers that overhang the walls of party politics. Some of those flowers wither and die of neglect, some of them are blighted by the frosts of time, some are seared and even consumed in the fires of heated partisan debate, while others live to shed their fragrance even beyond the tomb.

The latter has been the case with those flowers of friendship which sprang up between the Hon. CHARLES R. CONNELL and myself during the short period of our services together in the House as coworkers on the Committee on Pensions.

We sat side by side, and I have never known a man who impressed me more for the short time we were together than did this distinguished son of Pennsylvania. He was ever mindful in his duty to the American taxpayers; he was ever mindful of the condition of the Public Treasury, while at the same time he never turned a deaf ear to those whose services to their country in times of war rendered them deserving of the Nation's gratitude and the Nation's care in times of peace.

Entertaining widely divergent views on economic and political questions as we did, he being a northern Republican and I a southern Democrat, yet during the discussion of those matters about which we differed I have often observed that his careful consideration for the feelings of those who did not agree with him, his painstaking regard for those amenities which govern the intercourse between gentlemen, rendered his association and his companionship indeed pleasant, even when we were discussing those matters upon which we never agreed.

He was a man with the courage of his convictions, and I can safely say that during my acquaintance with him he always manifested a high sense of responsibility as a representative of the American people. He was courteous to a degree that rendered him extremely attractive, not only in the committee room but in the lobby, on the street, on the floor of the House, and everywhere else it was my pleasure to come in contact with him. Possibly I was thrown with him more than almost any other Member on the Democratic side, because we often discussed a great many questions foreign to legislative matters, and I found him to possess a wonderful store of general information.

I know nothing of his religious affiliations, I know nothing of his fraternal connections, but my experience with him in a practical way led me to believe that he was more or less a disciple of that philosophy enunciated by Ella Wheeler Wilcox, when she said:

So many gods, so many creeds,
So many paths that wind and wind;
When just the art of being kind
Is all this sad world needs.

I can not speak of his home life, I know nothing of his services to the people of Pennsylvania before he came to Congress; I know nothing of his great achievements in a business way. Other men who are familiar with his former career will pay their tributes to him in more appropriate terms than I could, even were I familiar with the facts; but I, who enjoyed his friendship only during the short time of our services here in the House, merely wish to come in all humility to pluck one of the flowers which his generous nature caused to grow over the walls of party politics and to reverently place it upon his grave, religiously trusting in all sincerity that we may share the effects of its beneficent influence when we "greet the coming of another age of youth and usefulness in another radiant Easter, beyond the gates of night."

Mr. BIXLER. Mr. Speaker, we have met to-day to pay tribute and manifest our respect and esteem to one who held a high place in this Nation and in his native State—Pennsylvania. One who performed the duties of these high offices of State and Nation fearlessly, judiciously, and to the everlasting credit to himself and Nation. It was my great pleasure to have known Senator PENROSE for the past 20 years, and in these years I sought his advice on many occasions ever to find him ready, willing, and eager to assist with all the good, sound judgment and experience that he possessed. He was a firm believer in party government, and while many may have thought he was exceedingly partisan yet he was so only on partisan matters and principles of his party. I often recall a statement he made at a Republican National Convention when that great party he so nobly championed all his life was in the throes of disruption and division. When an attempt was being made to discredit it, when asked and advised to compromise, his answer, characteristic of the man, was, "The great party will stand on the principle of its founders, to compromise at this time is eternally and everlastingly wrong. The people of this country are tired of this great Republican Party. They are tired of bossism in Indiana. They are tired of organization in Ohio. They are tired of PENROSE in Pennsylvania. Let us drive this grand old party to the brink. Let us drive it to the very edge, let us push it over the precipice, and then go to the other side and gather up the fragments and out of them build a new Republican Party with new principles to meet advanced conditions," and you will well remember that his words came true.

It was a pleasure to consult Senator PENROSE; there was no evasion of the subject, no idle promises, but at all times an answer that carried weight and could be relied upon. While in many of his campaigns he was grossly assailed and misjudged, yet I recall once when an opportunity presented itself that would have permitted him to retaliate against an opponent, and when he was being implored to do so, his answer was, "Boys, don't do it. I can stand all the criticism and falsehoods and malicious comments forced upon me, but I will not permit it to be done to another if in my power to prevent," a most noble spirit.

He was a natural born leader, energetic, courageous, and defiant; his whole life was devoted to his State and the Nation. As chairman of the Finance Committee of the Senate, under physical circumstances that I doubt if any other could have stood the strain, he performed his duties to the last and to the credit of his country. He was a true servant of the people in that his whole life was devoted to their cause. He believed that the life blood of this country was its industries and its natural resources, and he was ever ready to lend every effort in their advancement and protection, knowing full well that in the Nation's industrial activities the prosperity of the country's agricultural interests and that of every laborer would necessarily follow and their interests best served. Senator PENROSE was sometimes misunderstood, but to one who knew him knew full well that every move or action was done with careful deliberation and consideration for the interests of the whole people. He died in the service; his last days devoted to working out a financial program to relieve the burdens of a Nation that was distressed with a heavy debt, the result of a great war for humanity. He was a most considerate man; no public duty was too small for him to perform, and no service that he could render an individual but that he would gladly perform. His word was as good as gold, and he denied no one an interview on public questions, and after the interview you came away always with the information you desired, whether it was pleasing to you or not. While we are here today to honor his memory and recount his worth and express our sorrow at his ultimely departure at a time when men of his ability are so much needed we say farewell, our remembrance of him always will be cherished for his great work done for his native State—Pennsylvania—and the Nation.

SENATOR KNOX.

Mr. CRAGO. Mr. Speaker, never before, so far as I can ascertain, in the history of the United States Senate has it happened that a State has lost by death three United States Senators in less than one year. For a period of more than 25 years four men—Quay, PENROSE, KNOX, and Oliver—had represented Pennsylvania in the United States Senate, yet in the period of a few months we have added to that illustrious list the names of Senators CROW, PEPPER, and REED, and now to Senators PEPPER and REED have fallen the duties and responsibilities so suddenly and tragically laid down by their predecessors in office.

I wish to speak briefly of the life and services of the late Senator PHILANDER CHASE KNOX. Others will take up different phases of his public career; but I want to record here a brief summary of the principal events in his life, even though I do not feel capable of adding anything to what has been so well said of Senator KNOX by the persons who delivered the addresses in the Senate and on the floor of the House.

PHILANDER CHASE KNOX, Republican, of Pittsburgh, was born in Brownsville, Pa., May 6, 1853; was graduated from Mount Union College, Ohio, in 1872, receiving the degree of A. M., and later the degree of LL. D., and also from Yale, Pennsylvania, and Pittsburgh Universities, and from Washington and Jefferson and Villa Nova Colleges and the University of Guatemala; practiced law in Pittsburgh from 1875 to 1901; appointed Attorney General in President McKinley's Cabinet, April 5, 1901; in President Roosevelt's Cabinet as Attorney General from the death of President McKinley until July 1, 1904; appointed to fill vacancy caused by death of Hon. M. S. Quay in Senate, July 1, 1904; subsequently elected to fill Senator Quay's unexpired term, then to the full term of six years; resigned from the Senate to accept the position of Secretary of State in President Taft's Cabinet March 4, 1909; was Secretary of State to March 5, 1913; elected to the Senate November 6, 1916, to succeed Hon. George T. Oliver. His term of service in the Senate would have expired March 3, 1923. Senator KNOX died in the city of Washington October 12, 1921.

The name of Senator KNOX had been associated with many great legal conflicts, and he had gained a well-deserved national reputation in law and in statesmanship before entering the Senate the second time; but to my mind his greatest achievement—and I believe history will confirm me in this—was his masterly work in showing the American people the weakness and the fallacy of the so-called League of Nations. His words of explanation of this question were so far-reaching, so convincing, and his position so unanswerable from the American point of view that gradually our people came to see what he had visioned in the very beginning, namely, that the whole scheme was founded on a false basis and was fraught with dangers to us as a nation and as a people far greater than any dangers that could come to us from war. All his long training in the legal profession, his real knowledge of conditions, his work as a legislator and as a statesman prepared him for this conflict—a conflict where the man of experience who knew proved so superior to the one who, while he had more power perhaps than any other man just at that time, yet lacked experience and practical knowledge of the question. The final result of such a conflict was inevitable.

When Senator KNOX first began this fight in the Senate the American people had not yet awakened fron. a dream which they wished to dream and hoped might come true—a dream of a time when war could be no more. The people failed at first to realize that so long as life has action and human minds control there will come times when the arbitrament of the sword is the only final award of justice; and that a nation to be really strong must be not only morally right but physically prepared and ready to maintain its ideals; and that higher ideals tied up with lower ones must inevitably invite rather than prevent armed conflict.

Time and again, when Senator KNOX first gave utterance to his position on this question, I would be asked by some of our friends, "What in the world is Senator KNOX driving at, and what does he mean by taking the position he does?" I invariably answered, "He is taking now the position you will take when you have had time to realize the situation and get your bearings."

Any of us can usually, after a public question has been fully discussed, arrive at a conclusion and take a position which we are prepared to maintain, but to look into the future and analyze a great question of public policy which involves taking a position in opposition to the powers that are in control is the true province of a statesman; and too frequently legislators choose the easier way, which means drifting with the tide. Not so with Senator KNOX; he had courage, and courage coupled with knowledge and experience means ultimate power and leadership.

During the late summer of 1921, after returning from a visit to Europe, Senator KNOX, while not in his usual health, remained in Washington most of the time attending to his senatorial duties, and when news of his sudden death was given out it came as a great shock to his colleagues and to the Nation.

It was no surprise to those of us who had been with him at his country home at Valley Forge that he was to find his last resting place there. He loved that home, and every time he could arrange to do so spent his spare moments amid its quiet and peaceful surroundings. The day of his burial was a bright, beautiful October day, and the wonderful coloring of forest and foliage lent an added solemnity to the scene. On one side of the grave stood relatives and close personal friends, on the other men of prominence in every walk of life and his colleagues of the Senate and House. Standing among these was the tall figure of the late Senator PENROSE, who was to answer the last summons before the year was ended. Beside Senator PENROSE stood the chief executive of Pennsylvania, Governor Sproul.

Tenderly the body of Senator KNOX was laid away in this sacred spot. He had fought his country's battles in the days of peace and in days of war, and in death he sleeps in the soil hallowed and consecrated by the suffering and the blood of men who made this Nation possible.

SENATOR CROW.

Mr. Speaker, a few miles west of the Allegheny Mountains, in Pennsylvania, on the banks of the Monongahela River, at a point in this region where the sturdy Scotch-Irish settlers of a century and a half ago ended their perilous journey from the east and began turning the wilderness into the fertile and productive hills and valleys of that region, now known as Fayette, Washington, and Greene Counties, one can describe a circle with a radius of less than 10 miles, and encompass within that small area the places where were born four sons of Pennsylsania, descendents of these Scotch-Irish ancestors who have left their indelible impress on the legislative history of our country. In this area, which has given to the world many men famous in professional and business life, these four names stand out above all the others in our political history. Here from all the sturdy strength the unconquerable will, the joyous vigor, the civic virtues, the patriotic passion, and the sanctities of parents who loved home and country were born in humble stations in life these men who have contributed so largely to the public weal. Just across the Monongahela River from Brownsville, on the hills of Washington County, was born James G. Blaine; in the town of Brownsville proper, in Fayette County, was born PHILANDER CHASE KNOX; only a few miles away, near McClellandtown, Fayette County, was born WILLIAM EVANS CROW; and a few miles west of there in Greene County, near Carmichaels, was born ALBERT BAIRD CUMMINS. These men passing through the public schools and small colleges, entered public life and brought to the service of their country a determination to achieve success; and we may truly say that these sons of the sturdy Scotch-Irish have given a wealth of service to our country.

From this same region have gone forth many men who in the professions, in finance and in trade, in war and in peace have contributed largely to our Nation; yet these four men have so impressed themselves on our Nation's history that I have coupled their names together as we come to this solemn service to-day in honor of Senators KNOX, PENROSE, and CROW, and our own beloved colleague, Congressman CHARLES R. CONNELL.

WILLIAM E. CROW, Republican, of Uniontown, Fayette County, was born in German Township, Fayette County, Pa., March 10, 1870; was reared on a farm and educated in the public schools, the Southwestern State Normal School, from which he was graduated in 1890, and Waynesburg College; was engaged in newspaper work for three years; studied law and was admitted to the bar of Fayette County in 1895; appointed assistant district attorney in 1896, and in November, 1898, was elected district attorney for a term of three years; was chairman of the Republican county committee in 1899, 1900, and 1901; served as a delegate to various Republican State conventions and to the Republican National Convention in 1916; was elected chairman of the Republican State committee in 1913, and reelected in 1914, 1916, and 1918; elected to the State senate in 1906; reelected in 1910, 1914, and in November, 1918; elected president pro tempore of the State senate at the close of the session in 1909, and was reelected in 1911; was appointed to the United States Senate by Governor Sproul, of Pennsylvania, to fill the unexpired term of the late Senator KNOX, and took the oath of office on October 24, 1921.

March 24, 1897, Senator CROW was married to Miss Adelaide Curry, of Fayette County, and to this union were born three sons, Evans Curry Crow, William Evans Crow, jr., and Warren Crow. Senator CROW passed away Wednesday morning August 2, 1922, leaving to survive him the widow and these three sons. Thus in this short recital of dates and events is encompassed a life so filled with work and action, and which when ended left a vacancy in the life of a home and in the affairs of the Nation.

My close personal acquaintance with Senator CROW began more than 30 years ago, when he first entered Waynesburg College. We were in some of the same classes and belonged to the same literary society. CROW soon gained recognition in college as a public speaker, and was elected by the Philo Literary Society to represent that society as orator in the annual contest. Before the date of this contest, however, he felt that he was compelled to leave school, as he had an opportunity to take up newspaper work in Pittsburgh.

He continued in this newspaper work for some time and then returned to Uniontown, Fayette County, where he registered as a law student and did newspaper work while reading law. Soon after his admission to the bar he began to take an active interest in local politics. At this time the men who for years had controlled politics in Fayette County were growing old in the service and new alignments were being made. The county had but recently turned from a Democratic to a Republican county, and there soon developed two factions in the Republican Party. As a result of this many bitter struggles within the party gave the young men who had entered the arena a chance to show their mettle and their worth. Gradually, by hard work, the ability to make friends, and with a rare genius for the game, CROW became the acknowledged leader of one faction, and soon this faction controlled the county. Just at this point in his career he showed that real leadership which afterwards characterized his work, for he soon made friends of his former political enemies, and would go out of his way any time to help them in any worthy cause. Many of the men with whom he had contended became his most trusted friends and admirers, and for many of these he time and again expressed in a most practical way his very high regard and esteem.

For many years Senator CROW and myself served together as members of the board of trustees of the Southwestern Pennsylvania State Normal School, of California, Pa., and of Waynesburg College, Waynesburg, Pa. When I first became a candidate for Congress in 1910 from the twenty-third district, comprising Greene, Fayette, and Somerset Counties, Senator CROW was a candidate for reelection to the State senate from Fayette County. This was a gubernatorial campaign and only those who are familiar with the details will ever know what a bitter fight was made on the Republican organization that year—a fight which forecasted the contest of 1912. Senator CROW and his friends had charge of the campaign in his county, and our friends in the district exerted themselves to the utmost to hold things in line. So successful was their work that this congressional district was the one district in the entire State which really stood up in its vote for the State ticket. By this time Senator CROW had become a leader in the State senate and was elected the presiding officer of that body.

As chairman of the Republican State committee and as a leader in the State senate his work was very arduous, and his efforts to keep harmony in the ranks of the party, to head off vicious legislation and put through constructive programs, demanded by the different executives of the State, as they came and went, was a task of no mean proportions. To this work he gave every ounce of energy at his command. It was never too late or too early for any friend to see "BILL" CROW, as he was affectionately called by his host of political and personal admirers, and his willingness to sacrifice himself for his party and his State endeared him to men in every walk of life and made men proud to call him a friend.

Senator CROW did not step into this place of high command in Fayette County, and in the State of Pennsylvania, without a struggle and without many a hard-fought battle. I was at his side in many of these battles, especially during the time when I represented this congressional district in Congress. I have known times during the stress of campaigns when he would not get a chance to see his family even for a few minutes each day, and you could hardly realize how a man so filled with responsibilities could find any time to be at home with the family he loved; and I sometimes wonder whether, in estimating a man and his great achievements in public life, we give credit enough to the woman, the wife, the mother at home, taking the responsibility of rearing children and keeping the home life going while the man unfettered by these domestic duties gives his entire thought and time to public affairs. Senator CROW was peculiarly fortunate in this respect, and anyone who knows of their splendid home life and their family will appreciate that during all these busy years Mrs. Crow, the wife and mother, did her full part, and helped make possible for her husband a public career so filled with usefulness. The husband and companion is gone, the father is gone, yet through all the years of their lives Mrs. Crow and these sons will have in their hearts a solemn pride in the fact that the one they loved had gained the heights.

Personally, I think I rejoiced almost as much as did Senator CROW when he achieved his life ambition and became a Member of the United States Senate. This is true not only because of my long association with him but because of the keen interest which he had always shown in my political success. In 1920, when we had a misunderstanding in our State-wide primary and I failed of renomination, I think Senator CROW felt the result more keenly than I did, and when a few months later a vacancy occurred in our delegation by reason of the death of Congressman Garland, Senator CROW, even though a sick man at that time, never let up until he was assured that my nomination would be accomplished.

Senator CROW was a man who would compromise whenever it appeared best for the party and the public good, but he would not go back on his real friends, even when seeming political expediency would dictate a change in his attitude on a public question when that change would have indicated a desertion of his friends, even though they fought a losing battle.

Words can not adequately portray our feelings on an occasion of this kind. To lose such a friend makes one feel that a part of his very life is gone, but to have had such friends as we pass through life should be to each of us an inspiration and should create in us a willingness to lend ourselves to one another and to the public good.

Through the long months in the hospital, hoping against hope that medical science might in some way ward off the inevitable end, Senator CROW cheerfully submitted to whatever treatment was prescribed, but when at last hope was almost gone his mind naturally turned to that home in the mountains. Tenderly and reverently they carried him to that loved place, and here just a few weeks before his death President Harding paused in his passage over the old national pike to greet him and drop a word of hope and encouragement. On the day of his funeral Uniontown was hushed and silent, by proclamation of the mayor all places of business were closed, and both sides of the street and all along the national pike for many miles the people stood in reverent awe as the funeral procession passed to the cemetery. Never before in Uniontown has there been such a funeral as that of Senator CROW, and the great outpouring of the people and their reverent attitude expressed to all the visitors the fact that these people knew and loved him. Senator CROW's body was interred in the Uniontown Cemetery with the fullest masonic funeral ritual, he being a thirty-third degree mason. Men from all walks of life from every section of the State were present on this occasion and attested the high esteem in which he was held by those with whom he had come in contact.

This day with us is a day of sorrow, but to-morrow comes—to-morrow with all its cares, its pleasures, and its possibilities. May we enter that to-morrow with a new realization of its possibilities, with a new sense of the fact that we are all agents of a great power in a mighty purpose. The manner of accomplishing that purpose we may not know, but if our work is good, if our lives are filled with good deeds, if we have added to human happiness, we will have fulfilled the highest purpose of the infinite.

Mr. GILLETT. Mr. Speaker, I have been in Congress with both Senator KNOX and Senator PENROSE ever since they began their national service. It happened that during the Roosevelt administration circumstances threw me into quite close association with the members of his Cabinet, and so I came to know very well Attorney General KNOX, as he then was. Quiet and unassuming in manner, assured and self-reliant, as you came to know him better he was exceedingly genial and full of good fellowship, an entertaining and delightful social companion. He had a mind of extraordinary keeness, one of those intellects which penetrates clearly and luminously and instantly where most of us grope hesitatingly, able at once to look to the very marrow of an intricate subject. That seemed to me his most distinguished characteristic. His strong, vigorous intellect grasped any problem which came before him, mastered it and straightened out complexities so that he could make it plain to minds of less original power, who had to study carefully what to him was clear at first sight. He sometimes seemed to show a little consciousness of intellectual superiority, which certainly was justified, but was of a hospitable and companionable disposition which securely held his friends.

The two Senators offered an extraordinary contrast physically, for while Senator KNOX was much below the average size, Senator PENROSE loomed above nearly all his fellows with a gigantic stature. When he succeeded Senator Quay I think few believed that he had the capacity to successfully assume the minute and absolute leadership of his party at home to which the State had become accustomed.

Everyone recognized that he had a strong, cultivated intellect, but I think few anticipated that indefatigable application to the interests of his party and State, that tireless tact, and that sound, dominating judgment which soon won for him the support and even the obedience of his party followers and made him the undisputed leader in Pennsylvania. He had inflexible resolution and scorned sham, humbug, and hypocrisy, even at the expense of popularity.

When I first came here political power in certain sections was largely concentrated in the Senate. I remember well how on one important bill pending in the House a small clique of Senators, by issuing their mandates to their delegations in the House, changed over night a minority into a majority and defeat into success. That great concentration of power in a few men has largely died away, and Senator PENROSE seemed to be its last representative in the East.

I did not know him intimately. I imagine he was not a man who cared much for social intimacy, though he was always loyal to his friends. He seemed to me rather aloof and self-centered, finding his pleasure, as well as his work, in the absorbing pursuit of power and in organizing and establishing his leadership. He was always definite and intelligent in his purposes, had great courage, determination, and resources; and in those two Senators Pennsylvania gave to the Nation men of striking ability, who left a marked impress on national legislation.

Mr. WATSON. Mr. Speaker, social and political association during a period of 40 years with the one to whose memory we are paying tribute to-day welded our friendship with mutual consideration of affection and esteem. One afternoon late in February, 1884, BOIES PENROSE, on his way home, stopped at my law office, located on Walnut Street, Philadelphia, and in the course of conversation expressed a desire to enter politics, and related with much pleasure his appointment to meet for the first time Mathew S. Quay. PENROSE three years previous was graduated from Harvard College, second in the class, his brother, now an eminent physician, held the first honor. In 1883 PENROSE was admitted to the Philadelphia bar. Tall and slender, a well-balanced mind, ambition to rule, bold and fearless, depending upon his own judgment rather than that of others, were characteristics that made him a leader of men. He loved outdoor and manly sports, was fond of big-game hunting, rowing, riding, and yachting. These athletics very early developed his physical strength, and he was accepted to be one of the handsome young men of Philadelphia. The ancestors of Senator PENROSE for generations held positions of honor and trust and were prominent in the current affairs of England and America. Charles B. Penrose, his grandfather, was the ablest political counselor of his time. He was a member of the Pennsylvania State Senate from Cumberland County and elected speaker. He resigned his seat in the senate to accept the position of Solicitor of the Treasury, to which office he was appointed by President William Henry Harrison. He retired from the department after a few months of service, moved to Philadelphia, and was again elected to the State senate in 1856. BOIES PENROSE inherited honestly from his distinguished ancestors the career that was to be his.

The strong personality of BOIES PENROSE appealed to Senator Quay, who early recognized his ability and worth. Quay indorsed him for the Legislature of Pennsylvania, to which office he was elected in November, 1884. Two years later he became a candidate for the State senate, and after a bitter contest with Robert Adams, jr., he was nominated and elected in 1886, was president pro tempore of the State senate in 1889, and reelected in 1890 and 1894.

PENROSE was ambitious to be mayor of Philadelphia and had the indorsement of Senator Quay in the mayoralty contest of 1894. Saturday previous to the primaries many of the supporters of PENROSE assented to the nomination of his opponent, Charles F. Warwick, for mayor. This defeated PENROSE. Senator Quay naturally resented the action of his friends; he said to them, "You have defeated PENROSE for mayor, but I will make him United States Senator." Senator Quay at that time controlled the State senate and the house of representatives. The two legislative bodies met in joint assembly, and through the influence of Senator Quay BOIES PENROSE was elected United States Senator to succeed J. Donald Cameron for the term beginning March 4, 1897, and was the choice of the people up to and including his last election, November, 1920.

PENROSE was opposed to the election of United States Senators by popular vote, and adverse to prohibition and woman suffrage. With this record he made a triangular fight for United States Senator and won by a majority exceeding the combined votes of his opponents. This was evidence that the people of Pennsylvania had confidence in his ability and trusted his judgment in the legislative affairs of his State. When PENROSE made a political promise it was fulfilled; his power to carry it through was seldom questioned.

It was during his office as State senator that he laid the foundation upon which he builded his political power and became the adviser of the Republican Party, not only in the State but in the Union. PENROSE was not recognized as an orator, but had the ability to forcibly express himself on the forum with well-constructed sentences of rhythm, either in pathos, tribute, satire, or rebuke. He was a student, an ardent reader of the Bible, history, biography, and the classics. No man was superior to PENROSE in the knowledge of the political and historical events of Pennsylvania. I frequently motored with him from Washington to Philadelphia, he was familiar with every foot of the way, the names of the early settlers, the scenes of the Indian hostilities, and those of the war of the Revolution. PENROSE was truly an American, who devoted his whole life in the interest of his country, especially his native State, Pennsylvania, and seldom left its boundaries, except when performing official duties. It was his pleasure to motor through the various counties of the State, become familiar with the political temper of the people, meet his lieutenants, and study the welfare of the Commonwealth. PENROSE claimed he had not the time to travel in foreign lands, thus it can be easily understood why he had more detailed knowledge of the political conditions of the country than any other one man in public life. He believed as long as he could control his lieutenants he could win, as the masses would follow them on election day.

All men in the political world must encounter the hostility of organized enemies formed to destroy recognized power for their own aggrandizement. PENROSE did not escape the calumny of his political opponents, but his personal character was never stigmatized by a dishonest act.

PENROSE always worked for the best legislation as he understood it, but was not an extremist. He was untiring during his last illness, and though suffering he continued to give his energy to the people. He had confidence in himself; without this characteristic no man can succeed. He frequently said:

If I had followed a business career with the same application I have given to politics, I would now be a very rich man.

PENROSE followed a life of simplicity; though born an aristocrat, he lived within himself as such. His voice was notably mellow and gentle; he had a kind and tender heart; always charitable; carried no resentment on account of political differences; his enemies during one campaign were his friends in another. The affection PENROSE held for his brothers, and the loyalty among them were evidences of love seldom found in families. He had the power to focus his will to a definite point, the concentration of which enabled him to bring about the final conclusion. He received the applause of the masses and all who intimately knew him. No administrator guiding the policies and affairs of a party in the political history of our Republic continuously retained the power for the same length of time as Senator PENROSE. The national convention held in Chicago June, 1920, was a marked illustration of the influence of PENROSE. Ill at his home in Philadelphia, suffering great bodily pain, 1,000 miles from the scene of the actions of the delegates concerted for their rival candidates, PENROSE held the convention in abeyance until his choice for President was well within his grasp. He then telephoned to his lieutenants in Chicago to nominate Warren G. Harding. There is not a parallel instance in American politics where one man dictated the proceedings of a national convention under such disadvantages as PENROSE suffered and endured.

December 31, 1921, at the midnight hour, PENROSE died. His body resurrected, if Christian dogma be true, resurrected as the bells were ringing out the old year and in the new. A few days later, wrapped in death's shroud, in the early dawn of the morning, ere the shadows pictured the earth, BOIES PENROSE was buried unattended except by his immediate family. He was carried, as it was his wish, to his sepulcher at an hour "when no one knoweth."

Mr. DARROW. Mr. Speaker, we are assembled to-day to do honor and pay tender tribute to the memory of four distinguished sons of Pennsylvania.

Within the past few months our genial and lovable colleague, Hon. CHARLES R. CONNELL, was suddenly stricken from our roll, and within the brief period of less than one year three United States Senators, KNOX, PENROSE, and CROW, passed to the great beyond. No State ever suffered such a loss in so brief a period of time. Each of them had qualified for their positions of influence and usefulness after long years of training in the school of experience. Pennsylvania deeply mourns the loss of these notable figures in the activities of its public affairs. Mr. Speaker, it is my privilege to speak of the distinguishing characteristics of my friend and fellow townsman, Senator PENROSE.

Pennsylvania has furnished men renowned in the affairs of the Nation, but few of more prominence than BOIES PENROSE. He was an outstanding national figure, but he was best known in Philadelphia and Pennsylvania, where his was a common name in every household.

I had known Senator PENROSE for many years, but it was not until after my election to Congress that I came to know him very well. I have marveled at his capacity for work, at his strong will power, and at the many personal sacrifices he was making in the conscientious performance of his public duties and of the earnestness that he displayed in everything that was for the interest and welfare of our State, as well as for the country as a whole. In my association and contact with him I learned to honor and highly esteem him and to have deep regard for his judgment and opinions. He was never hasty in making a decision on any problem when presented to him, but when he reached a conclusion you could feel satisfied that it was only after mature thought and consideration and that full reliance could be placed in its soundness.

Senator PENROSE's qualities of earnestness and honesty were recognized early in his career, and they remained his prominent characteristics to the end, gaining for him in his public service that high respect and confidence which are given so willingly to all honest, earnest, and courageous men.

By reason of his quarter of a century of service in the United States Senate, the Senator occupied a position of leadership in that body, and his marked ability and statesmanship was generally recognized. His service as chairman of the powerful Committee on Finance was especially notable, for he was an expert on tariff and revenue legislation without a peer. The Senator made no pretense of being an orator and never spoke on the floor of the Senate unless he had something worth saying and knew his subject. He was a forceful speaker, being brief and quick to reach his point. He had an excellent command of the English language and the facility of choosing the right word or phrase to meet any occasion. He spoke with a frankness that could not be misunderstood and was the master in any verbal battle.

Aside from his service in the Senate, PENROSE was best known as a political leader. He won his spurs under the tutelage of Quay, and by sheer merit and ability won his long-continued position of leadership. From first to last he was always for party organization and party responsibility. He was frank and truthful, and free from that cowardice which breeds deception. He was sincere in his beliefs, he was faithful to his word, and he was loyal to every cause he espoused. He believed from his heart that his country's welfare depended upon the continued supremacy of the Republican Party, and he saw no path to progress but by the way of its success; and with zeal unflagging and spirit undaunted he labored for that success. His convictions were strongly maintained; he never sulked or evaded, but with resolution and courage fought out every issue openly to victory or defeat.

Mr. Speaker, a great character has passed into history; Pennsylvania's foremost public servant has gone into the great beyond. The name of BOIES PENROSE will forever be engraved upon our memory and that of generations yet to come. In his death the city of Philadelphia, the State of Pennsylvania, as well as our great country, suffered an irreparable loss, and those of us who were more closely associated with him mourn the loss of a wise counselor and friend.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, I really find more difficulty here than probably most of the other Members. I think it safe for me to say that I was more closely identified with Senator PENROSE than any other man who has come to Congress in many years. I had the pleasure of knowing PENROSE most intimately for over 28 years. He was a born leader of men; so much so, indeed, that party politics did not stop him on his path of leadership. At one time it was thought he would file for the nomination on both tickets. It is still a question in my mind if PENROSE could not have been nominated in Pennsylvania on the Democratic ticket as well as on the Republican ticket. He was admired, respected, and honored by all citizens, men and women. I have traveled through Pennsylvania on many occasions with PENROSE. I have traveled, too, from Philadelphia to Washington and return with him many times. It would take me hours to explain what I thought of one of the greatest intellectual giants of all time in this Nation. That is my impression of PENROSE. I could go on for a long time; but I have something prepared, and it might take me too long on this occasion to deliver it, and I ask that I be accorded the privilege of having printed in the RECORD a short sketch on Senator PENROSE.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. There will be no objection.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Pennsylvania. In passing, I might say I was also very friendly with Senator KNOX for over 20 years. I have heard a reference to the sturdy Scotch-Irish descent of Senator CROW. Why, it is not surprising to me. We call them Scotch-Irish even after they have been living in Ireland for 700 years. The Crows have been at least that long in that section of Ireland where I was born, and on a clear day you could look out from the top of the hills and there behold where the forebears of seven Presidents of this great Nation were born. KNOX was certainly Irish, and the family belonged there for several generations. Senator Oliver belonged in the same section, 6 or 8 miles apart. So I could go on and eulogize KNOX, but he requires no eulogy at my hands or the hands of any other good American citizen. CROW was a close loyal personal friend of mine. I know of few men who were so strong in an avowed purpose as Senator CROW. It was really unfortunate—while we must bow to the will of God—that CROW was not spared a few years to his native State and to this Nation, because he would have become a marvelous man. And so far as our own colleague, CHARLES CONNELL—I always called him Connell, because we in Pennsylvania knew his esteemed father as Connell—he was a true, honest, God-fearing, upright, loyal citizen, good to those under him, and respected and loved by all the people in his home city as well as in the surrounding counties of his native State.

Every employee respected CHARLES CONNELL, and I as a friend revere his memory.

SENATOR PENROSE.

A visitor to the galleries of the Senate Chamber, in studying the men under his eye, was attracted to a Senator who occupied a seat in the front row, to the left of the Vice President. He seemed unusually tall—in fact he was 6 feet 4 inches in height when standing erect—broad shouldered, with neatly trimmed dark hair, features that were regular, and with a manner that showed close attention to the proceedings. When not engaged in debate, he was in frequent consultation with other Senators. Yet somehow he seemed a naturally reticent man, at times becoming abstracted. He was a ready and convincing debator and when put to the test showed the qualities of leadership. This man was BOIES PENROSE, senior Senator from Pennsylvania.

BOIES PENROSE was one of the forceful men of his time. When death claimed him a powerful and prevailing party manager departed from the political stage and a trained and valuable legislator from the national councils at Washington. His record in the service of Pennsylvania and the Nation is a record of sanity and patriotism, of broadminded and effective statesmanship.

Senator PENROSE occupied a position distinct from that of any other man in the annals of Pennsylvania's public affairs. He was in official life continuously for 37 years—a record of uninterrupted service unequaled by that of any man now living. He was five times elected a Senator and was in the Senate longer than any other man that Pennsylvania has sent to the body. He was the only Pennsylvania Senator to be chosen as chairman of the great Committee on Finance, and the first Senator from Pennsylvania to be elected by the votes of the people. Pennsylvania believed in him, trusted him, and honored him.

Upon graduation, in 1881, from Harvard, BOIES PENROSE went earnestly to work at the practice of law. Admitted to the bar in 1883 he naturally turned toward the public career offered him by politics. The next year he went to the State legislature, and two years later to the State senate, where, in 1889, he was elected president pro tempore, being reelected to that position in 1891.

At Harrisburg he showed quickly that he was no common man. He took the leadership of his party in the legislative halls of his State as if by natural right. His was not showy oratory when he frequently addressed the assembly, but there was rugged force behind all he said, a rugged force swayed and controlled by the keenest skill and most subtle wit; there was, too, a power of invective which is uncommon and which made him feared as well as respected, and there was all the magnetism, impressiveness, and dignity of a coming man.

There was no good legislation of that period which PENROSE did not support and none unmeritorious which he did not combat. Particularly he was chiefly instrumental in the passage of a bill to abolish the notorious public-building commission, and also in securing the enactment of the city charter, called the Bullitt bill. He was the sincere friend of honest labor, of the farmers, and of all who needed a champion.

Withal he was ever as loyal as he was an earnest Republican, battling for the principles of that party and working without cessation for its triumph and the defeat of its enemies. Even in the bitterness of his defeat by treachery for the Republican nomination for mayor of Philadelphia in 1895 the utmost efforts of the Democrats could not tempt him from his party allegiance, so that the man who got the nomination in his place was elected, when otherwise he might have been defeated.

Pennsylvania formerly made frequent changes in the office of United States Senator. Prior to the Civil War only one of the Pennsylvania Senators was in Washington for two full terms. The Senators of the ante-bellum period who held office the longest were Daniel Sturgeon, who served two terms, and James Buchanan, 11 years. Buchanan resigned to become Secretary of State in the Cabinet of President Polk. Robert Morris and William Bingham were one-term Senators. George M. Dallas, who was elected to a vacancy, served 15 months, and David Wilmot was a Senator for only two years.

Although Simon Cameron was given four elections to the Senate and was a member of the body for about 18 years, he served only one complete term, as he was named for a vacancy and did not remain until the end of two of the terms for which he was chosen. Entering the Senate in 1845 he filled the vacancy occasioned by the resignation of James Buchanan, and at the expiration of the term—four years—was not continued in office. Elected for a full term 12 years later over John W. Forney, he again was a Senator for four years, resigning to become Secretary of War under President Lincoln. Leaving the Cabinet after two years, he entered the diplomatic corps as minister to Russia, but soon returned home to again stand for a senatorial election. His longest tenure of office was about 10 years, from 1867, when he defeated Andrew G. Curtin, until his resignation in 1877 to make way for his son, J. Donald Cameron. The elder Cameron was one of the few men who have relinquished a seat in the Senate to accept an appointment to the Cabinet. The experience of J. Donald Cameron was in the opposite direction, as he retired from a Cabinet office, that of Secretary of War under President Grant, and then became a Senator.

Completing the remaining two years of his father's term, the younger Cameron had an unbroken membership in the Senate for 20 years, until 1897, when he retired and was succeeded by PENROSE. Matthew Stanley Quay was elected three times and was a Senator for about 15 years, but was in successive possession of his seat for only two full terms. Chosen first in 1897 and again in 1893, he was denied a reelection in 1899, was for two years a private citizen, and then was returned to Washington, the election that signalized his retirement from politics, and died before his term expired.

BOIES PENROSE entered the Senate on the day that William McKinley became President and Garrett A. Hobart Vice President, March 4, 1897. Only three men who were in the Senate then now remain there—HENRY CABOT LODGE, of Massachusetts; FRANCIS E. WARREN, of Wyoming; and KNUTE NELSON, of Minnesota. Only one man then serving in the House, Mr. CANNON, remains.

If one should attempt to tell in detail the legislative work of Senator PENROSE it would be to call the title and describe the purpose of every important measure enacted by Congress since 1897. He had a hand in shaping all of this legislation and took part in the consideration of measures in the Senate. As to many of the important laws, he exerted influence in the last stages—and indeed the most important stage—in the conference committee. He exerted more than influence in the Senate; he was a power there.

The interests of Pennsylvania are such that the policy of protection has found its strongest advocacy there. To maintain the system it has sent to Washington only thoroughgoing protectionists. By reason of his steadfastness and influence in this field of legislative effort alone Senator PENROSE would have occupied a place of eminence in the public life of Pennsylvania. He was prominent in the preparation of every Republican tariff measure during his service in the Senate and his unfaltering advocacy of high rates of duty constituted him the most conspicuous exponent of the protective principle since the time of William McKinley. His speeches and writings on the tariff were voluminous and exhaustive.

His first legislative experience at Washington was in the enactment of tariff legislation. A few weeks after Mr. PENROSE became Senator President McKinley convened Congress in extra session to pass a measure that would provide the Government sufficient revenue and restore the Republican system of protection for the American wage earner. The result of its deliberations was the Dingley tariff act. It was known by those who were conversant with the activities of that session that Senator Quay left to his junior colleague the most laborious portion of the work for Pennsylvania.

With the knowledge that a tariff bill is a compendium of the energies of Pennsylvania as it affects every industry there, Senator PENROSE had prepared himself for the work of tariff legislation. He was familiar with conditions in the mine, factory, and on the farm. On a tour of the State that embraced nearly every county, he had grasped the vastness of Pennsylvania's industrial organization. He had inspected iron and steel mills of western Pennsylvania; he had stood beside wage earners in textile and other manufacturing establishments; and he had gone down into mines. He knew of conditions in rural sections, for he had consulted representatives of granges and addressed gatherings of farmers. At Harrisburg he had conferred with delegations from labor organizations and with employers of labor on measures for the improvement of conditions under which the working people toiled. He had witnessed everywhere the idleness and distress of the Cleveland administration and had emptied his pockets for the starving.

The Dingley bill was before Congress for nearly five months, and in the debates on it were delivered some of the most notable addresses that have ever been made on the revenue system of the country. As passed, from the point of view of protectionists, it was a perfect piece of legislation. It transformed the United States from a commercial slough of despondency into the busiest and most prosperous nation on the globe. To Senator PENROSE's patient investigations and indefatigable energy were due largely the favorable conditions which doubled the industries of Pennsylvania in a single decade, increasing wages and wage earners in like proportion, and greatly augmenting the State's population. In the enactment of this bill Senator PENROSE laid the foundation of constructive service in tariff legislation that in time would place him in the chairmanship of the Finance Committee and make him a Republican leader in the Senate.

From that time on Senator PENROSE fought for maintenance of a protective tariff. It was during the extra session of the Sixty-first Congress that he attained a position in the Senate where he could be of largest usefulness to the people of Pennsylvania. As passed by the House, the Payne bill contained tariff reductions which Pennsylvania manufacturers insisted would prove ruinous to the interests of labor and capital of the State. These reductions ranged from 10 to 50 per cent from rates of the Dingley law and included nearly every manufactured article of which Pennsylvania was a large producer. Senator PENROSE knew what sort of tariff revision the Keystone State was willing to accept, and as a member of the Finance Committee, to which body he had been recently promoted, he opposed the sweeping reductions adopted by the House. When the bill passed the Senate it provided duties pronounced by Pennsylvania manufacturers adequate protection of the State's industries. As a member of the conference committee he successfully defended the increased rates. For the service he rendered Pennsylvania in connection with the Payne-Aldrich bill, Senator PENROSE was warmly commended by the people and press.

A holiday called "Penrose Day" was declared by the manufacturing districts of Philadelphia. Senator PENROSE spent the day in going around from mill to mill observing wheels of industry in motion. Attended by a party of manufacturers, he visited workrooms, shook hands with employees, and was greeted on all sides with enthusiasm born of returned prosperity both to manufacturer and wage earner.

It was Penrose Day even beyond the expectations of those who planned it. The mill district bedecked itself in the most brilliant array for the event. Flags and ensigns flew from every staff. Thousands of busy workers, both men and women, left their looms to greet and listen to the Senator as he went from place to place.

As a fitting culmination of the day, Senator PENROSE was a guest of honor at a brilliant banquet at the Bellevue-Stratford, when manufacturers of Philadelphia, representing millions of invested capital, gathered together to praise the man who, more than any other, they said, was responsible for the protection given Pennsylvania in the Payne-Aldrich Act.

A more striking testimonial has never been accorded a publice official in Pennsylvania. His part in making the tariff bill that had brought a return of prosperity was the controlling thought in the minds of all those at the dinner as they cheered him and praised him in speeches. From the moment he made his appearance at the banquet hall until he concluded his address there was almost continuous cheering for him. More than a thousand men representative of the industrial and business element of Pennsylvania were there to testify by their presence that they owed a debt of gratitude to the guest of the evening.

At the speaker's table were Edwin S. Stuart, Governor of Pennsylvania; and John E. Reyburn, mayor of Philadelphia; Nathan B. Folwell, president of the Manufacturers' Club—who presided—and all Philadelphia Members of the House at Washington.

Two years later Senator PENROSE led the protection forces in the Senate against proposed low-tariff legislation. The Payne-Aldrich Act had been bitterly attacked by certain western Senators and Representatives and other public speakers who used it as an issue in the congressional campaign of that year. Senator Aldrich had just retired from the Senate and Mr. PENROSE had been made chairman of the Committee on Finance. Bills reducing the duties on iron and steel, cotton, woolen, chemical, and, in fact, every schedule of the Payne Act affecting the industries of Pennsylvania were referred to that committee. To prevent passage of these bills, the Republicans in the Senate were compelled to meet the opposition of the solid Democratic strength in that body, and those low-tariff Republican Senators who were vigorously attacking President Taft because of his action in signing the Payne bill.

Senator PENROSE at once assumed an aggressive and determined attitude toward the proposed legislation. To prevent hasty action by the Senate and to afford representatives of the manufacturers an opportunity to submit arguments in opposition to it he arranged for a series of hearings before the Finance Committee. Those hearings afforded ample opportunity to emphasize the injury to American industries that would result from the enactment of low tariff bills. They continued through a period of several months.

Manufacturers sent to Washington delegations who submitted facts bearing upon every phase of the industrial situation in this country. The hearings were more exhaustive and illuminating than any other series of hearings ever held by the Finance Committee. Through skillful questioning by Senator PENROSE it was shown that proposed legislation would result in widespread business depression. Representatives of each industry affected declared that if the proposed reductions in duties became effective, they would be compelled to curtail production and as a result hundreds of thousands of workmen would be thrown out of employment.

Senator PENROSE was strongly supported by other Republicans of the Committee on Finance in his determination to prevent the low-tariff measures from being enacted into law. At his instance nearly all of them were rejected by the Republican majority of that body. Senator PENROSE reported them adversely to the Senate and in many effective and forceful speeches defended the protective-tariff principle. The opposition, however, was too strong and the combination of low-tariff Republicans and Democrats forced some of the bills through.

When they reached the White House President Taft held many conferences with leaders of the Republican majority in Congress. At these conferences Senator PENROSE was consulted by the President regarding every measure before him. Mr. PENROSE earnestly urged the President to veto them and return them to Congress with messages which would present a vigorous defense of the protective principle. This the President did.

When the Democrats entered upon control of the Senate the committees were reorganized; Senator PENROSE was succeeded as chairman of the Finance Committee by a Democratic Senator who was in harmony with the tariff policy of the Democratic party. The enactment of the Underwood tariff bill, which Senator PENROSE vigorously opposed, followed.

In the debate on a war revenue bill, in a notable speech in the Senate Mr. PENROSE predicted that with the return of peace, the protective system would be restored.

I do not at this time—because the occasion would not be proper—go into an argument in favor of the protective tariff—

He said—

In my opinion, the time will come sooner or later, with the close of the war, when a protective tariff will be more than ever necessary to the people of the United States. With the close of the military war the industrial contest will be resumed.

We are at war. Revenue must be provided; the American Government has never hesitated to raise revenue by direct taxes and loans when required during a war, and the people will pay them cheerfully so long as they are uniform, equitable, and logical. When the war is over, the whole tax system of the country will, of course, be revised.

The several emergency laws will have to be repealed and the good that is in them retained, with such additions as experience has demonstrated are required. When the time comes my hope is that a fiscal system will be enacted providing for the requirements of the Government by duties on imports based on adequate protective lines, the usual revenue from excise taxes, and such moderate direct taxes as the Government may require to carry on the heavy burdens which will be ours for a considerable period after peace is declared.

The selection of Senator PENROSE as head of the Finance Committee was a notable mark of distinction. No man has held the chairmanship of that committee who has not been accounted by his colleagues fully qualified for leadership. The Senate does not allow anything to take the place of experience and ability, and it does not recognize anybody as a leader until he has been tested for years in the Senate itself. Since the Civil War only nine men have directed this committee's deliberations—William P. Fessenden, of Maine; John Sherman, of Ohio; Justin S. Morrill, of Vermont; Thomas F. Bayard, of Delaware; Daniel F. Voorhees, of Indiana; Nelson W. Aldrich, of Rhode Island; Senator Simmons, of North Carolina; and Senator McCumber. Senator Morrill held the chairmanship longer than any other—17 years—and was succeeded by Senator Aldrich, who retained it until he retired from public life.

Records of the Senate show that for at least 70 years, despite Pennsylvania's vast industrial interests and the fact that the State to a greater degree than any other is affected by tariff legislation, Senator PENROSE is not only the one Pennsylvanian who has held the chairmanship but he is the only Republican Senator from the State who has been a member of the committee.

The Americanism of Senator PENROSE was a source of pride to Pennsylvania. As a private citizen and official of the Government he placed America first in our relations with foreign governments, and when the national honor even remotely appeared as an issue he demanded its vindication without equivocation or concession. He resolutely denounced indecision in dealing with foreign questions when such a policy compromised the national respect and threatened the national security. As a Senator his attitude toward disloyalty was distinct and emphatic. He assailed it as an evil that must be boldly met and destroyed and proposed measures to this end. His service as a Senator throughout was marked by a broad and unhesitating loyalty to American ideals and American traditions.

Senator PENROSE'S Americanism was of a substantial and practical character, directed at the fundamentals of patriotism. He resorted to none of the arts of the soap-box orator; in his public utterances were no bombastic deliverances; he made no blatant appeal to the mob; he was no jingo.

The determined and aggressive attitude of Senator PENROSE in demanding protection for the rights of American citizens in Mexico forms a striking chapter in our dealing with that bandit-ruled country. That the Wilson administration finally abandoned its policy of indecision, known as "watchful waiting," and sent soldiers to the Mexican border was due largely to the vigorous criticisms of PENROSE and other Republican Senators, speeches which attracted the attention of the people to a situation involving the dignity and honor of the Nation. But one question had been presented by the Mexican revolutions, so far as this country was concerned, PENROSE asserted, and it was:

Shall the lives and property of the American citizens in Mexico be protected?

This position he ably defended on the floor of the Senate and in addresses he delivered elsewhere.

Senator PENROSE made his influence felt in seven national conventions of the Republican Party for the nomination of candidates for President and Vice President. He was five times chosen a delegate to represent Pennsylvania, three times from the second congressional district, and twice a delegate at large under the direct primary system. At four of these conventions he was chairman of the Pennsylvania delegation, and always his judgment carried weight in the selection of the candidates and in the construction of the platforms. The representative on the national committee of the foremost Republican Commonwealth, he occupied an official position of prominence in the management of four campaigns for the Presidency.

His supremacy as a party leader he maintained to the end. In 1920 his leadership commanded a notable mark of approval, a vote of confidence that is without a parallel in the politics of Pennsylvania. At the primaries he was the successful candidate for the Republican nomination for United States Senator, for delegate at large to the national convention, and for reelection to the national committee, the last-named place to be filled by the Republican State committee chosen on the same ballot.

My personal relations with Senator PENROSE were most cordial and extended through a long period of years. I first was associated with him in politics in 1897, and from that time on I was an active member of the organization of which he was the directing head. Never having held public office, the suggestion that I become a candidate for Congress came from Senator PENROSE, with the result that in 1916 I was elected to this body.

In various campaigns I accompanied the Senator on speaking trips throughout Pennsylvania which gave me an opportunity to enjoy his keen sense of humor as well as to admire his sterling party loyalty and his wonderful genius for organization. The place he occupied in public affairs in Pennsylvania never will be filled.

Mr. SHREVE. Mr. Speaker, it was my very great privilege and pleasure to have been intimately associated in a political way with the three distinguished United States Senators whose memory we are here to honor to-day. I may say I was in the Pennsylvania Legislature when Senator PENROSE was its recognized leader and during a time when he was particularly interested in the affairs of the great State of Pennsylvania. Naturally we were closely associated, and during all my experience and association with him I found him always seeking the best interests of the State, working out those great problems that have made Pennsylvania one of the foremost States in the Union. He was a lover not only of the United States of America but a particular lover of his own great State; so it was a pleasure during those years, after working with him in the State legislature, to work with him after I came to Congress.

I had the honor and pleasure of voting for the Senator before the uniform primary law was passed. I also had the honor and the pleasure of voting for PHILANDER C. KNOX, Senator from Pennsylvania. I wish particularly this afternoon to say just a few words about Senator KNOX, because he came from western Pennsylvania, my own part of the State.

But before doing so, I want to say a word about Senator CROW, whom I knew so well and intimately for many years. He was in the Senate of Pennsylvania during all the time I was a member of the legislature, and frequently we worked on commissions, he on one side and I on the other, and I learned to know the sterling worth and that intensity and honesty of purpose that made him the great leader that he was. It was a pleasure to be associated with the Senator, and I shall never forget the very many pleasant days we spent together. His passing was a source of great regret to all of us.

The Hon. PHILANDER C. KNOX was truly a product of western Pennsylvania. Born in Brownsville, a graduate of Pennsylvania universities and colleges, admitted to the bar and practiced law in Pittsburgh, we of western Pennsylvania have a right to be proud of the distinguished career of one of our number.

PHILANDER C. KNOX ranked high among the men who have contributed to the greatness and unparalleled prosperity of the Keystone State.

The late Senator also wrote his name high on the scroll of fame not only in his own country but in the countries with whose affairs he had such an extended acquaintance while Attorney General and Secretary of State under two administrations.

His great ability as a lawyer attracted the attention of the country and he was called to be Attorney General in Roosevelt's Cabinet. After serving conspicuously in this capacity he was elected to the Senate, but later on was again called back to the Cabinet as Secretary of State under Taft.

It was as Secretary of State that the Hon. PHILANDER C. KNOX attained his greatest achievements. His keen knowledge of world affairs and the training he had received during his years of public service eminently fitted him for this high position.

Through his efforts a plan for departmental organization was put into effect, and newly created divisions and offices were by law made specific and permanent as part of the general organization.

The Department of State took upon itself new forms of modern business methods. Under his administration there was created the Division of Latin American Affairs, Far Eastern Affairs, Near Eastern Affairs, and Western European Affairs, all of them continuing up to the present time, and the Department of Commerce has established within its service the same divisions, so that at all times there is close cooperation and coordination between the two services.

The creation of these divisions has given the departmental establishment an opportunity for careful attention to increased and increasing friendly relations between the friendly countries, and the correlation between these energies has evolved a complete organization for the development of commercial interests, the results of which have been far beyond our most sanguine expectations.

Secretary KNOX felt that the Department of State and the whole working of our foreign-service establishment should be utterly outside the sphere of partisan politics if our foreign affairs are to progress for the highest benefit of the whole Nation.

The successful operation of these departments affects the people of all occupations and all political faith in every part of the country.

After serving out his term as Secretary of State, the Secretary returned to the Senate, where he again became one of the foremost leaders. He was always genial, affable, and approachable, and expressed the keenest interest in the wishes of his many constituents.

His services will long be remembered and have placed him on the highest pinnacle among statesmen of the State and Nation.

The Nation could ill afford to lose him, but an all-wise Providence ruled that he should be taken at the height of his great activities and achievements, and the Nation mourns his loss to-day.

In closing I desire to say a few words about the Hon. CHARLES R. CONNELL, truly a distinguished son of a distinguished father, who for several terms represented the Scranton district in the Halls of Congress.

The father was prominently identified with the great industries of Pennsylvania, and while in Congress rendered valuable service to his country.

It was the son's ambition to take the place of his father, and although in his first term when taken away, he was giving careful attention to all the great problems of the country, and in particular those affecting his own district. He was regular in his duties, both in committee and on the floor of the House, and was a valuable Member of the Pennsylvania delegation in Congress. We all shall mourn his loss.

Mr. KENDALL. Mr. Speaker, Pennsylvania, the great Keystone State, has, within the brief span of one year, suffered a loss unparalleled in the history of the Nation, the loss by death of her three distinguished Senators, men endowed with unusual qualifications and renowned not only in their native State but in the Nation, PHILANDER CHASE KNOX, the intellectual giant, scholarly statesman, and lawyer of international fame; BOIES PENROSE, the superb leader and authority on finance, whose wonderful mind embraced the life of the great Commonwealth and made him the leader of leaders; and WILLIAM EVANS CROW, loving and beloved, brilliant, magnetic, and sympathetic, with an almost superhuman understanding of men and ability to influence their actions.

Both Senators KNOX and CROW were born in Fayette County, in the district which I have the honor to represent in Congress. Senator KNOX was born May 6, 1853, in Brownsville, and lived there until early manhood; Senator CROW was born in German Township March 10, 1870, and lived in Fayette County until his death at Chalk Hill on August 2, 1922.

The records and achievements of Senators PENROSE and KNOX will be related by others, and I shall confine my remarks to the "favorite son" of "old Fayette," WILLIAM EVANS CROW.

Senator CROW was born on a farm and as a farmer boy had the personal touch and experience of farm life. He attended the country school, and later became a teacher, in which capacity he inspired his pupils with the same devotion with which he later enthused all who came within his range. He became a successful journalist, a lawyer, and at the age of 28 was elected district attorney of Fayette County. At the age of 25 he was political leader in his county and moved onward and upward, becoming chairman of the Fayette County Republican committee, Republican State chairman, State senator, successive reelection keeping him in the State senate as its matchless leader until, upon the death of Senator KNOX, he was appointed by Gov. William C. Sproul to fill the vacancy from Pennsylvania in the United States Senate.

He was a masterful politician, and for the field which he had chosen he had temperament, ability, and poise unexcelled. Few men in public life were endowed with such lovable and commanding personality, and had he lived he would have reached the pinnacle in the Nation which he had attained in his beloved State.

Senator CROW's health began to fail about a year before his death, but with indomitable will he remained at his desk in the State senate at Harrisburg until the adjournment of the legislature in 1921, when he went into seclusion in his mountain home. He battled with illness, and for a time it seemed as though he would conquer; and while he was scarcely able to come to Washington to be inducted into his high office, he made the trip and with undaunted courage appeared on the floor of the United States Senate, where on October 24, 1921, he took the oath of office as junior United States Senator from Pennsylvania. On that occasion the Bar Association of Fayette County, members of the senate and legislature of the State, and hundreds of other admiring friends accompanied their "Fayette County boy" to the Nation's Capital to see him realize the ambition of his life. They hoped he could win the battle with the dread malady with which he was stricken; alas, this was not to be. Death had singled him for its own. And when he found that he was beyond human skill and realized that he was fighting a losing battle, he asked that he be taken to his beloved mountain home at Chalk Hill, where, surrounded by the beauties of nature, he had spent his happiest days in the companionship of his noble wife and three manly boys. Love for one's family is the most sublime attribute of life, and Senator CROW's devotion to his wife and children portrayed the sweetest characteristic of his great intellect.

While Senator CROW was at his mountain home it was the Mecca for hosts of admiring friends—rich and poor, black and white, men, women, and children. They all loved him, not for his great achievements but because he was "BILL" CROW, their friend.

When President and Mrs. Harding drove over the old National Pike on their way to their old home at Marion they found time to call to extend to the stricken Senator their heartfelt prayers for his recovery and their sincere hope that he might take his place in the Senate and aid in the great constructive legislation to be enacted. With the President and Mrs. Harding were the Governor of Pennsylvania, Hon. William C. Sproul, General Pershing, and General Sawyer, all eager to show their friendship and love for the stricken friend.

On August 2, 1922, the Angel of Death paid a visit to that mountain home and the great soul of WILLIAM EVANS CROW passed into the light of the eternal morn.

Senator CROW was buried on a beautiful day in August and never in the history of Fayette County was there such an outpouring of sorrowing friends. The streets were lined with people from all sections of the county—by proclamation of the mayor of Uniontown all business places were closed, and all branches of the city government paused to pay tribute to the first citizen of that town. Amid the tolling of the bells and the sobs of the multitudes all that was mortal of WILLIAM EVANS CROW was laid to rest in the little cemetery at the end of the town.

As I stood at the open grave and looked into the saddened faces of the countless friends I realized there could be no higher eulogy of man than that the humblest pay him tribute in tears, and my mind could but revert to the immortal ode of the great Tennyson on the death of the Duke of Wellington:

On God and godlike men we built our trust.
Hush, the dead march wails in the people's ears;
The dark crowd moves, and there are sobs and tears;
The black earth yawns; the mortal disappears;
Ashes to ashes, dust to dust;
He is gone who seemed so great—
Gone; but nothing can bereave him
Of the force he made his own
Being here, and we believe him
Something far advanced in state,
And that he wears a truer crown
Than any wreath that man can weave him.
Speak no more of his renown,
Lay your earthly fancies down,
And in the vast cathedral leave him.
God accept him, Christ receive him.

Miss ROBERTSON. Mr. Speaker, there is not one of us but who, looking back, may remember one of those days, marked with a white stone, that stands out vividly from other days of that time. Such a day was my introduction to Fayette County. At the Summit Hotel I was waked by the matin songs of the birds. From my window I looked out over clouds of mist, which, like the gossamer veil of a lovely bride, enhanced rather than concealed the beauty of mountain, forest, and valley.

I felt myself honored, indeed, to have been chosen to make a Memorial Day address at Uniontown. In Fayette County, where the struggle for the foundation of our great America began with the colonial wars, its history is written above the resting places of those who fought its battles. Some of these inscriptions are well-nigh obliterated by the storms of more than a century. Hundreds of newly carved names are those of Fayette County's sons who fought no less valiantly to maintain the Government that their gallant forbears had founded.

I seem to see before me again the long procession of marching men in uniform—men of three wars. Men of the sixties, unable to conceal a certain jealous pride of preferment because it was for their comrades the day was first set aside, and if gray and bent, as they were—cars were provided for them in procession—it was an acknowledgment on their part of a right of precedence rather than a consideration of physical weakness. The World War men, who at the city square earlier in the day had conducted their own exercises and had afterwards served the other veterans with army fare at their beautiful Legion Home, followed, marching many hundred strong, with hosts of little children, flower laden and each carrying an American flag—blood-bought emblem of our "Land of Liberty," of which their chorus swelled in words of patriotic song.

Could there be greater inspiration for a patriotic life than to have been reared amid such surroundings and among a people of such loyalty to American ideals?

It was here at his Uniontown home that I met WILLIAM EVANS CROW, upon whose bier I have come to-day to lay one little flower of remembrance. I had, of course, known of him vaguely as one of the giant leaders of the political organization which functioned irresistibly in the Keystone State, and wished I might meet one of such power among his fellow men. Having heard that strict rest was enjoined by physicians, who made him a prisoner in his room, I was indeed gratified to be met by Mrs. Crow, who insisted that it was the desire of her husband as well as herself that I become their guest.

What an ideal home it was to which I was thus welcomed—comfortable, livable, and unpretentious. A home where you found a well-worn Bible in sight and where the most prized ornaments were portraits of their sons in uniform.

I was allowed to see Mr. CROW, who was interested in me as representing a new element in political life—that of the conservative woman who had not striven for a place in politics—and knowing there were in Pennsylvania thousands of my type there was a great temptation to both of us for a discussion which his weakness did not allow.

So his devoted wife took me away from the cheery upper room where the May sunshine streamed in and the scent of lilacs came through the open windows.

There was an inspiration I shall never forget in the encouraging, interested words of this giant battling for life. He knew that he had been sorely wounded in his stern fight for the ideals he had made his goal, but he was not disheartened.

The domestic life of that home as I saw it was one of that sacred mutual devotion which it is not for me, even with the deepest reverence, to try to tell you. To me it seemed the perfection of human love and companionship.

I saw him only once again. A day when I availed myself of a privilege I felt a natural timidity in exercising, and went upon the floor of the Senate to see him take his oath of office—the first woman to have thus congratulated a Senator.

Surrounded as he was by eager colleagues and friends, when he saw me waiting there was an immediate smile of recognition and a warm handclasp. I felt the new element in politics would have a good friend in him.

While it seems tragic beyond all expression that just at the moment of ambition's realization the sun should suddenly drop from its zenith, we can but admit that there is a sublimity in such a cloudless departure.

Love is the greatest gift ever bestowed upon frail humanity. This he had in fullest measure, and in its joy he went happily home to that Father's house where many mansions are.

Mr. BEGG. Mr. Speaker, we are assembled to-day to pay our respect to the memory of our deceased colleague, Hon. CHARLES R. CONNELL, of Scranton, Pa.

We shall leave it to his colleagues and friends from his own State of Pennsylvania to tell of his life history, for it was not the privilege of many of us to know him in his boyhood and early manhood.

His service with us in the House was all too brief, but in that time he established a place for himself in the hearts of his colleagues. Those of us who knew him best loved him most. It was my privilege to know him intimately, having visited his home on several occasions.

He was a man of big business and naturally and by training looked on all things in a big way. He was broad visioned, practical, and successful in serving his constituents of the tenth Pennsylvania district, as well as in business.

Thousands of men were in his employ for years and never once did he fail in that understanding of men which makes one's employees love him. In politics they were his supporters, and he their representative; in business he was their associate and coworker. Of no man in his employ did he ask that which he was unwilling to give himself. Socially he was democratic and measured his friends by their true worth.

His life was an inspiration for all who knew him. I realize how futile it is to try to add to his glory and honor at this time, but by a recital of his virtues we who are left may be inspired to better things. His passing was a tremendous shock, yet by it we have been moved to appreciate more and more his lovable characteristics, and, indeed, we have been made to understand that his very life was a force for good.

He was of a nervous temperament and often chafed at the seeming delays of definite accomplishment in legislation. In business, habit had taught him to count that day lost whose low, descending sun saw nothing accomplished, nothing done. That is why legislation seemed to irk him, yet with it all he took an active part in the daily procedure of this House and no Congressman gave stricter attention to the demands and needs of his people than he. He frequently spoke with reverence of his father's prior service, and said that was the only enchantment for him in representing his district in Congress.

Our beloved colleague leaves a wife, two children, and a host of friends to mourn his loss. Time may dull the pain of his leaving, but each succeeding year can only serve to brighten the memory of his lovable character.

Mr. GERNERD. Mr. Speaker, we are gathered here to-day in solemn contemplation for the purpose of paying a human tribute to those distinguished sons of Pennsylvania who have answered the last call. Of one of these I shall humbly speak.

To Pennsylvanians the name of BOIES PENROSE will always arouse a feeling of genuine regard. His intimate knowledge of her people and their traditions, together with his thorough understanding of their economic problems, made him a dominating character. For more than 30 years he was identified in molding and advancing the legislation which attended the marvelous growth and development of our State. Endowed with a rare intellect, which absorbed all of the exceptional advantages that a cultured home could give, he attended Harvard College as a youth, where his natural qualities soon ripened into commanding scholarship. Few young men were ever better equipped to battle the trials of life than he—possessor of a wonderful physique and an engaging personality and backed up by the prestige of a wealthy and distinguished family. He knew none of the hard and perplexing struggles that confronted most of our successful men in their youth. He craved a different ambition than those who were reared and educated as he was, for even in his college days he was found pursuing the study of politics. To him Martin Van Buren was a most absorbing and fascinating personality. It was but natural that soon after he completed his education he should turn to politics as a career.

Within four years after his graduation from Harvard College he was elected a member of the General Assembly of Pennsylvania. He entered that body full of vigor and self-confidence, and immediately attracted the attention of his colleagues by his forcefulness in debates and the calm and adroit manner in which he met attack. Strange as it may appear, he began his political career with reform ideas. So thoroughly was he imbued with these conceptions that he, in conjunction with his law partner, Edward P. Allinson, wrote a volume on municipal government advocating the principles of reform. It is a remarkable work, giving an exhaustive historical treatise of city governments in this country. It reveals a thorough knowledge of the grave and difficult problems that then confronted our municipalities. He strongly urged reforms, but within party lines. Through the publication of his work he acquired great publicity, which immediately placed him in the forefront as a student and an authority on municipal governments, which naturally greatly enhanced his political prestige. After a single term in the lower branch of the general assembly he was elected a State senator, to which position he was successfully reelected three times. This gave him a wonderful opportunity to develop his natural talents, and his keen knowledge of the essentials of government intimately brought him in contact with the great political problems in the concrete. He gave them exhaustive study and zealously fought for those legislative measures which he believed were for the welfare of the State. His career in the Senate of Pennsylvania is a most brilliant one, for his activities during those 10 years were not dominated as the politician but as the student of legislation. His advocacy of a measure was not actuated by political motives, but, on the contrary, based solely on their social and economic effect on the State. His legislative inquiries and the measures he championed revealed a remarkable knowledge of the institutions of his State.

Continually pursuing the quest for a greater intimacy, he embraced in his personal sphere of influence every one of the 67 counties of Pennsylvania. He knew their characteristics, their problems, resources, and leading citizens. Just as he got to know the people of his State, so they came to know and trust him. He possessed an unusual capacity for work, and it appeared that the greater the burden the happier and more responsive he became. It was but natural, then, that he should become the leader in the senate, for his capacity and successful qualities of leadership crystallized public confidence in him and the people everywhere sought his counsel and aid in furthering their legislative enactments.

During the entire period that he served in the State legislature he was looked upon as the enlightened student and expounder of public questions. His frank and incisive views upon legislation either gave it life and assurance of being enacted into law or else he disclosed their fallacies, which invariably caused them to die through the weight of their own weaknesses.

Throughout the Commonwealth of Pennsylvania there were many growing and prosperous towns which constantly required legislation to insure their continued progress and prosperity. His great knowledge of municipal government made these municipalities the happy beneficiaries of his wisdom and forethought, for he enthusiastically fostered the legislation which enabled them to enjoy the many advantages that local self-government brought them. It is a rare tribute to his integrity and high sense of public duty that no one ever questioned the wisdom or sincerity of his motives in any cause which he championed before the legislature of our State. His achievements were many and the citizens of Pennsylvania took a keen pride in his brilliant career. With each succeeding year he grew in stature and public esteem, so that it was but natural that thousands of the influential citizens of his native city should insist upon his running for mayor of Philadelphia.

At that time the political destinies of the City of Brotherly Love were dominated by David Martin and Charles A. Porter, two resourceful and astute politicians who baffled the ambitious plans of PENROSE and his many friends, for they brought forward Charles F. Warwick as an opposing candidate, who after a spirited and intensely partisan contest defeated him for the nomination. While his defeat proved a very serious disappointment to many Philadelphians who had hoped to rescue their city from the sinister and baneful machinations of the municipal political bosses into whose grip their city government had fallen, nevertheless for his own political future it proved a most fortunate incident. The contest for mayor attracted nation-wide attention, and the result was anticipated with unusual interest. Instead of losing prestige by defeat, his political assets were greatly enhanced by the experience, for the many talents of the young State senator had been so successfully exploited that he became the romantic political hero of the State. His fascinating career appealed intensely to the young men of Pennsylvania, for he captured their imaginations and inspired their loyalty and admiration. Enjoying so eminent a position in the hearts of Pennsylvanians at the youthful age of 35, his political ascendancy was assured.

For many years the political organizations of Pennsylvania were controlled by the two United States Senators, J. Donald Cameron and Matthew Stanley Quay. Their supremacy was frequently and bitterly contested, and the politics of the State were in constant turmoil. Many scars had been inflicted, and there were able and clever politicians who nursed continuous warfare and kept the political wounds from healing. Matthew Stanley Quay was then the recognized leader, and as the senatorial term of J. Donald Cameron drew to a close he cast about his discerning eyes and found in BOIES PENROSE a colleague of his choice. He recognized only too well that to insure his own leadership he must choose wisely. Naturally he gave the great popularity of the young senator due recognition, for he realized that the seat of Senator Cameron would be bitterly contested.

How carefully he had reckoned—for the opposition selected John Wanamaker, Postmaster General in the Harrison administration, as its choice. Here was a formidable foe, a man whose name was a household word in every family in Pennsylvania, and whose splendid administration as a Cabinet official challenged the support of the business men of the State. It proved a remarkable political battle. Here were two rare and exceptional men arrayed against each other. The one a young, brilliant, and successful leader, whose worth as a legislator was recognized by everyone in the State, and the other the greatest merchant in America, whose life story gripped every youth and who had won the plaudits of the mercantile world. Nevertheless the verile and spectacular leadership of BOIES PENROSE so completely captivated the young men of Pennsylvania that they triumphantly brought about his election as United States Senator. What a remarkable achievement, to attain the toga of a United States Senator of one of the greatest States of the Union at the unusual age of 37. That goal, however, was only reached through the exercise of high political ideals and abnormal passion for public service. With him there was no compromise with time when public duty beckoned. His scholarly attainments and practical insight into domestic problems, as they effected the general welfare of the State, made his judgment unerring. The great experience he acquired as a legislator of his Commonwealth gave him a superb equipment for the larger problems which awaited him.

I shall not speak of his subsequent career, for I shall defer that to other colleagues who have had the pleasure of serving with him in the United States Congress for a much longer period than has been my privilege. I wish to emphasize the fact, however, that he never lost grip upon the legislation of his State. Every problem challenged his attention, and he liberally gave of his wisdom and support. The people of Pennsylvania truly understood and appreciated his remarkable services, for they showed their gratitude by their generous confidence in electing him to the United States Senate for five successive terms. No man can enjoy a greater tribute than this honor, as bestowed upon him by the citizens of his native State.

Mr. GERNERD. Mr. Speaker, I wish to say a few words in memory of our dear friend and former colleague, CHARLES CONNELL. Coming here as strangers we met for the first time, although the name of CONNELL had been a household word to most Pennsylvanians for nearly a generation. I frequently in my youth heard of his father, and it was with keen eagerness that I greeted CHARLES CONNELL as a colleague of mine in this Congress. We got to know each other intimately, we lunched together, and discussed problems together, both business, economic, and social.

CHARLES CONNELL was a positive, direct character. There was no hypocrisy or vainglory about his make-up. He had a high appreciation of business ethics, and frequently when matters on the floor of the House seemed to be in a turmoil he would say to me, "That is not the way to do business. You and I could settle this in a very short time." We believed that to be true because we did not then know enough about the procedure of legislation, although we did know something about the problems of business.

I wish to say of him that although brought up as the son of a very wealthy and distinguished man he did not do that which most wealthy young men do—follow the paths of least resistance. He buckled down to business, and never permitted the contributions which came to him from his father to interfere with his honest ambition to be a successful business man. He employed hundreds of men and women, and treated them on the basis of social equality, for I know CHARLES CONNELL repudiated the idea that to be rich is to be one of a class. He never had that in his system. With him business was a noble profession. To possess wealth, and distributing it in investments, and making that wealth work, realizing more wealth in the creation of employment, he regarded as a duty to society. I know that he took a keen interest in his church, for he spoke to me of having helped to create a memorial fund for charitable purposes to which he himself had contributed very liberally. I wish we had more men imbued with the same unselfish ideas that possessed CHARLES CONNELL. He has passed to the great beyond and I mourn his going. I shall always remember his pleasantries and his buoyant countenance with rare pleasure.

Mr. CRAGO assumed the chair as Speaker pro tempore.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. FOCHT].

Mr. FOCHT. Mr. Speaker, in attempting to express an estimate of the unselfish purposes and lofty ideals of the men we mourn to-day, we can not help but feel our weakness in the presence of the memory of these great outstanding figures who so long labored for Pennsylvania in the wide field of local endeavor and of American statesmanship—Senators PENROSE, KNOX, and CROW, and Congressman CONNELL.

Senator PENROSE was trained in legislative practice in that school where the rudiments are acquired to great advantage—the State legislature, house and senate. There was early evidence of his grasp of details and the understanding of men and as the shaper of vast national progressive projects, culminating in the attainment of a high place among his fellows and as counselor great and wise in guiding the destiny of the Nation.

There is pardonable pride in reverting to the vast energies of his State and its prodigious commercial expansion and production, and in linking this great man of mind and heart to the steps of immeasurable progress of Pennsylvania stretching over a period of more than 30 years. During that time, which marked a greater sweep of advancement than during any other period in the State's history, he was early a potent factor and latterly the masterful, dominating mind.

For one of the greatest single divisions of government in the world—Pennsylvania—he helped shape an unmatched fiscal system which provides vast revenues without direct taxation.

During his leadership of the great dominant party there was written on the statute books more progressive laws than during the Commonwealth's entire previous history. From the mighty fund collected from the corporations the public-school system was given new impetus, with free school books for all children and compulsory education a requirement. The agricultural department was established, State police organized to guard every section, compensation in abundance for every injured workman, first aid and revised laws providing safeguards for those engaged in the vast mining industry, with millions for colleges and institutions for the weak and helpless, and a wider scope of rights and protection for women than prevailed in any State having woman suffrage 20 years before the vote was given in Pennsylvania.

It was great honor, indeed, to represent the State of Franklin and Muhlenburg, the State that was the Nation's birthplace and its cradle. Stephen Girard and Robert Morris, Rittenhouse, Fulton, Mad Anthony Wayne, Priestly, and Trumbull are outstanding figures who furnished inspiration for this youth; then Meade, Hancock, Reynolds, and Gregg, John Bannister Gibson, Andrew G. Curtin, John Wanamaker, and Russell Conwell. From the Declaration of Independence to Valley Forge, the Brandywine, and the slopes of Gettysburg we have everything in patriotic sacrifice and scientific, scholastic, and philanthropic accomplishment.

And it was this illustrious patriotic example, this vast energy and scientific attainment and philanthropy applied for the welfare of man that inspired Senator PENROSE when a boy and pointed him the way of duty and where promise was resplendent and the reward of achievement made certain.

Senator PENROSE was a statesman and philosopher, yet a pure democrat in his contact with men. While vast and overshadowing were often his engagements, he could become deeply interested in the details of the smallest concerns for others, and it was in countless instances that he extended the hand of helpfulness to the afflicted and brought rejoicing to many who otherwise would have despaired of relief. There was an intensity and sacredness about his devotion to the performance of every detail relating to the discharge of his duties, and that nothing might be overlooked he employed many skilled assistants and the ablest secretaries obtainable, three masters of detail long in this trusted, confidential association being Col. Wesley R. Andrews, Mr. W. Harry Baker, and Mr. Leighton Taylor.

And after all, it is faithfulness in the performance of duty that entitles a man to the fair-and-square estimate of his merits and the gratitude of those whom he served.

Thus the keystone of the arch of the Republic, Senator PENROSE represented in the world's greatest forum, and there among peerless men, many of them the Nation's most brilliant, he spent a quarter of a century the peer of any, and died while their leader in shaping the great tariff bill which bears his name and that of his beloved friend, JOSEPH FORDNEY.

It was in this very Hall, on February 27, 1882, that James G. Blaine, in paying tribute to the martyred President, James A. Garfield, said in part:

> Great in life, he was surpassingly great in death. He begged to be taken to the sea, and gently and silently the love of the great people bore the pale sufferer to the healing of the boundless waters of the deep. He looked out wistfully on the ocean's changing wonders, on its far sails, whitening in the morning light; on its restless waves, rolling ashore to break and die beneath the noonday sun; on the red clouds of evening, arching low to the horizon; on the serene and shining pathway of the stars. Let us believe that in the silence of the receding world he heard the great waves breaking on the farther shore and felt already on his wasted brow the breath of eternal morning.

Nothing in the life of Senator PENROSE was so profoundly heroic as his resignation to the inevitable, which he faced with unwavering courage. That end he knew had been decreed and that the hours for earth were fast passing; then, like the martyred Garfield, this giant among men repaired to a place of rest in the Capital City which overlooked the center of the Nation's Government, yet secluded. Just before him stood a fringe of green-belted forest, and beyond the masterpieces of architecture set against the Lincoln Memorial, the Washington Monument, and the Capitol, and in the distance the hills of Maryland; to the south, and in full view, the majestic and historic Potomac. To Senator PENROSE this all offered charm and enchantment, even though he contemplated the early drawing of the curtain that was to reveal the shores of eternal day.

From this sunlit resting place he could see every part of the city, and a flood of happy memories must often have swept through his mind as he contemplated the scene spread before him. His was a great, profound mind, and clear must have been his conception of what he was approaching with such rare fortitude. No complaint was ever heard from him. His was the suffering of the Spartan. Only a few days before the soul took its flight my colleague, Congressman HENRY W. WATSON, and I, both of us close friends of Senator PENROSE from early life, were his guests at his apartments, and a more gracious host never welcomed friends than did Senator PENROSE on that evening. Detesting ostentation, he held in contempt vain conceit, and freely, in a spirit of mirth, characterized the snob and buffoon. To him life was serious, and yet no man more greatly enjoyed the human viewpoint or could more quickly or sharply rebuke the unreal and the counterfeit.

Thus, brave and great and useful in life, he did not shrink when the pale messenger approached his bedside but answered the summons as those who knew him best expected. He passed into the shadows without ceremony or circumstance, and thus, in the last act, as during his entire life, there was expressed his aversion for anything suggesting the spectacular.

The Nation loses a statesman and trained servant and a faithful official, while his party is bereft of an unbeaten leader whose wise counsel will long be missed.

His friends to-day mourn a companion and counselor, whose acts of kindness and love and unselfish helpfulness will be cherished and remain ineffaceable through every cycle of time.

Before retiring from the floor, I feel that on account of my long personal acquaintance with and my high admiration for the public services of Senator KNOX and Senator CROW, and also of the opportunity I had of association with Mr. CONNELL, as well as with his father, I should like to say a few words about each of these distinguished gentlemen.

While I have not read every speech delivered by Senator KNOX, or every opinion given by him, or every one of his decisions when he was Secretary of State, it is my opinion that his address at Gettysburg in 1911 is the briefest, yet the most profound, exposition of the causes of the Civil War and of the hope for future liberty and the perpetuation of this Union that I have read anywhere. Further, his address in the Senate on the question of the League of Nations, the shortest address delivered on the subject, covered the case entirely in no more than three pages of the ordinary size in which we send out our speeches. I believe what he said there, in its brevity and clarity and tremendous power and understandability, his explanation that it meant an association and affiliation for war purposes with Europe, had as much to do with the rejection of that intolerable League of Nations as any other deliverance or all the other deliverances combined on the subject. In the light of all that I have known and read of the speeches and decisions of men of power and genius and statesmanship in this Republic, these two utterances meet two situations more clearly than all the other things I have read on these two questions.

As has been said in admiration and pride, Senator CROW was a product of the evolution of the politics of Pennsylvania. I have briefly enumerated a few of the accomplishments of the great leader of the dominant party in Pennsylvania and the progressive measures which he assisted in enacting into law. He was one of the most abused and maligned men in America until he died, and now come the encomiums even of those who attacked him most bitterly.

So Senator CROW was a man of most benevolent impulses. As his dear friend, Mr. KENDALL, and another friend, Colonel CRAGO, have said, he was of a temperament which reflected the one great method of accomplishing results in American politics, namely, that no man can have his way entirely and in full, on the assumption that any man can be infallible, nor has he the right to presume that he is always and entirely right. Hence Senator CROW, with broad vision, with real statesmanship, met his political enemies half way, and as a result we have had splendid concord in the western part of the State of Pennsylvania. We had the opportunity to assist in advancing him and are proud to-day to refer to his memory as one of the brightest and most honorable careers in the history of our party in Pennsylvania in recent years.

Of our friend Mr. CONNELL I wish to say that when I first came to this House I met his father. Much like Senator CROW, he was of a benevolent, charitable, forgiving spirit, the kind of man who cares to accomplish results rather than to wreak vengeance. He was not a man of reprisals, but rather of compromise and helpfulness to both sides, and there is of record a most notable instance in Pennsylvania where by the exercise of that spirit he saved the Republican Party a backset probably for many years. I knew him here. He was held in high esteem. His son had every reason to reverence his memory. A man who started at the bottom round in the vicinity of Scranton, he accumulated a fortune. He was benevolent in the wide distribution of his wealth, in the building of churches, in the helpfulness of the poor, his hand always extended to the weak and the unfortunate. The best I could say of my young friend, his son, and the best he would want me to say, is that in that respect he emulated his father. As we knew him no one could have been more companionable, and as you knew him a little better it was revealed that he had a wide range of knowledge, gained by extensive travel. Having been in Europe, and in every city of Europe, many times, and in the far recesses of South America, he was fond of detailing in most interesting and instructive narrative his contact and association with those strange people.

I can not help feeling how great has been the loss to Pennsylvania in the death of these men. When we think how long, yea, how many centuries it took to develop and refine minds such as these men possessed, we appreciate our loss, in fact we are appalled. All we can do is simply to go ahead and strive for the best, and as nearly as possible follow their example, which has been good and great and inspiring. Under their leadership vast progress has been made and great munificences and benefactions have been bestowed. We can simply emulate them and hold them in fond recollection, affection, and love.

Mr. FOCHT again took the chair as Speaker pro tempore.

Mr. CRAGO. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that all Members who have spoken may have permission to extend their remarks in the RECORD, and that those who have not spoken may have five days in which to insert in the RECORD remarks concerning the Members whom we have remembered to-day.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Pennsylvania asks unanimous consent that all Members who have spoken may have the privilege of extending their remarks in the RECORD, and that other Members may have five days in which to print remarks in memory of the deceased Members. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. WALTERS. Mr. Speaker, within two years we have witnessed the passing of five men named by the people of Pennsylvania to represent them in the American Congress. In order they were: MAHLON H. GARLAND, PHILANDER C. KNOX, BOIES PENROSE, WILLIAM E. CROW, and CHARLES R. CONNELL. Others have and will bear testimony to the eminent personal worth of these sons of the Keystone State. Others have and will recall the distinguished public services of these representative Pennsylvanians. I desire to add a personal testimonial to the memory of CHARLES R. CONNELL.

Mr. CONNELL came to the Congress rich in experience. He was a type of Pennsylvania's progressive business men. Proud of his heritage, proud of his State, proud of his community, he gave richly of his personal abilities and fortune that the life-giving industries of Scranton might prosper and the community prosper with them. A type of Pennsylvania's business men, CHARLES R. CONNELL possessed a high regard for the general welfare, and leaves a record which might well be emulated.

In performing his duties as a Member of Congress Mr. CONNELL carried the same regard for strict integrity that he did in private business. He viewed every governmental problem broadly. No personal interest, no local interest, no partisan plea could compel him to deviate from what he regarded as a plain duty. He sought with all the energy of his fine nature to serve those who had expressed trust in him. It was characteristic of his service in Washington that no personal interest, political or otherwise, could influence his decision.

The charm of Mr. CONNELL's personality attracted men, and he held as close friends perhaps more than the usual number of his associates in the House. Coming back among us with the knowledge that his days were numbered, he went about with his usual genial word and smile, with his accustomed good nature and willingness to aid. His courage in the face of the inevitable was remarkable. His memory will long linger with those who knew him best.

Mr. APPLEBY. Mr. Speaker, under the permission given Members to extend their remarks in the RECORD upon the death of our beloved colleague, I should not want this occasion to pass without joining with the other Members present in testifying to his splendid personality, nobility of character, and value to his country of his short public career.

Mr. CONNELL, in common with myself, was elected to Congress in November, 1920. He was one of the first Members of the House with whom I became acquainted. That acquaintance ripened into a warm friendship, and in listening to the eulogies presented this afternoon by his colleagues, many from his own State, I am satisfied that the early judgment I formed of the man was a correct one. Always considerate of others, even tempered, self-controlled, kind, and gentle, he made warm friends, whom he held in growing attachment. One of my earliest recollections of the man was the pride which he so frequently expressed in being one of the few Members who had the distinction of representing in Congress the same district once represented by their fathers. The elder Connell, now deceased, represented this same Pennsylvania district some 20 years prior to our colleague's election.

Mr. CONNELL brought to the House of Representatives a ripe business experience gained through the management of several large manufacturing plants, as well as service on the boards of directors of several banking institutions. His practical, common sense, sound judgment, sterling honesty, and high ideals at once marked him as a valuable Member of this legislative body. He was exactly the type of man needed—a business man in Congress. May we have more men of his courage, faith, ability, and firmness!

To have acted with him in the work of important legislation was a privilege, and to meet him socially and learn of his fine traits of character, and to have counted him my friend, was an inspiration.

During the recess of Congress last summer he was stricken with a fatal illness, and in August, in the homestead of his father, in which he had so long resided, in the beautiful residential section of the city of Scranton, surrounded by his devoted family, our beloved colleague passed on to his just reward. Sadly missed by the many friends he had made in this legislative body, mourned by his thousands of employees, and amid the tears of the hosts of his admiring friends he was buried in his native city. He was an honor to the State and the Nation. He died at his post of duty a faithful public servant, loved for his frank and manly dealings with his fellows, his loyalty to his trusts of high responsibility, and his modest and unassuming mode of life. Personally, I felt, and still feel, the keenest sense of loss, and I am glad to pay this feeble tribute to his memory. May it linger with us for many years. But in a full life, nobly lived, such as that of CHARLES R. CONNELL, there should be no sadness of farewell. He has but gone to his reward. In the words of the immortal Tennyson:

Sunset and evening star,
And one clear call for me!
And may there be no moaning of the bar
When I put out to sea,

But such a tide as moving seems asleep,
Too full for sound and foam,
When that which drew from out the boundless deep
Turns again home.

Twilight and evening bell,
And after that the dark!
And may there be no sadness of farewell,
When I embark;

For tho' from out our bourne of Time and Place
The flood may bear me far,
I hope to see my Pilot face to face
When I have crost the bar.

ADJOURNMENT.

Mr. CRAGO. Mr. Speaker, in accordance with the resolution previously adopted, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; accordingly (at 2 o'clock and 35 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned until Monday, February 19, 1923, at 12 o'clock noon.

SENATE.

MONDAY, February 19, 1923.

The Senate met at 11 o'clock a. m.

The Chaplain, Rev. J. J. Muir, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Our Father, help us to realize that life is a constant benediction, and as we spend it for higher interests enable us to recognize the privileges given unto us, so that daily and hourly we may have in mind Thy glory and the best interests of our loved land. Hear and help us through this day's service. For Christ Jesus' sake. Amen.

THE JOURNAL.

The reading clerk proceeded to read the Journal of the proceedings of Saturday, when, on the request of Mr. CURTIS and by unanimous consent, the further reading was dispensed with and the Journal was approved.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Sixty-six Senators have answered to their names. A quorum is present.

ACCOUNT OF THE STATE OF NEW YORK (S. DOC. NO. 304).

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a communication from the Comptroller General of the United States, in response to Senate Resolution 378, agreed to December 6, 1922, relative to the reexamination and restatement of the account of the State of New York, for which appropriation was made by the act of Congress approved February 27, 1906, which was referred to the Committee on Claims and ordered to be printed.

DEPARTMENTAL USE OF AUTOMOBILES.

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting, in response to Senate Resolution 399, agreed to January 6, 1923, a statement showing automobiles in use by the Treasury Department, both in Washington and in the field, together with certain cost data pertaining to said automobiles, garages in which they are housed, etc., for the six months' period July 1 to December 31, 1922, and stating that it was deemed best to report the information for the first six months of the present fiscal year rather than for the fiscal year 1922, owing to changes in the assignment of work between the Public Health Service and the United States Veterans' Bureau affecting the administrative supervision of automobiles belonging to the former service, which was ordered to lie on the table.

WORLD'S DAIRY CONGRESS ASSOCIATION.

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a communication from the president of the World's Dairy Congress Association, which was read and referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry, as follows:

MILK IS VITAL TO NATIONAL HEALTH.

WORLD'S DAIRY CONGRESS ASSOCIATION (INC.),
Washington, D. C., February 19, 1923.

Hon. CALVIN COOLIDGE,
Vice President of the United States,
Washington, D. C.

SIR: As authorized by act of Congress of March 3, 1921, the President of the United States has invited the nations of the world to send delegates and representatives to a World's Dairy Congress. This congress will be held in Washington October 2 to 5 of this year, and the delegates, after the close of the congress, will attend the National Dairy Show to be held at Syracuse, N. Y., October 6 to 13, 1923.

The World's Dairy Congress Association has been organized at the suggestion of the United States Department of Agriculture to act as a committee of management to make the necessay and proper arrangements for the housing and entertainment of this congress and to extend the proper courtesy to the delegates and other visitors who will attend.

On behalf of this association, I wish to thank the Members of Congress for the authorization of the World's Dairy Congress and for the support which has been voted to translate and publish its proceedings to make it of the greatest possible value to the public.

On behalf of the association, I wish to extend an invitation to the Congress of the United States to be represented at the World's Dairy Congress, and to request that a committee representing the Senate and House of Representatives be appointed for this purpose. I feel sure that the presence of this committee at the World's Dairy Congress and its participation in the deliberations of that body will add greatly to the Congress and to the cordial feeling that the representatives of other nations may have as to the feeling of sympathy and cooperation of the United States in their problems and aspirations.

The invitations from the President of the United States have been transmitted by the Department of State to all the nations of the world, and many acceptances have already been received, and many more are expected, indicating a high degree of international interest in this coming gathering.

Respectfully, H. E. VAN NORMAN, President.

Mr. LADD. I introduce a joint resolution authorizing the appointment of a joint committee of the Senate and the House to represent the Congress of the United States at the World's Dairy Congress to be held in Washington, and I ask that it be referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

The joint resolution (S. J. Res. 284) authorizing the appointment of a joint committee of the Senate and the House to represent the Congress of the United States at the World's Dairy Congress was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a telegram from E. F. Stokes, secretary of the National Association of Builders' Exchanges, relative to tax-exempt securities, which was referred to the Committee on Finance and ordered to be printed in the RECORD as follows:

[Western Union telegram.]

WEBSTER CITY, IOWA, February 17, 1923.

SECRETARY OF THE UNITED STATES SENATE,
Washington, D. C.:

The National Association of Builders' Exchanges of the United States, representing the building interests in every territory of the country, while in convention assembled at Des Moines, Iowa, did unanimously adopt on February 15, 1923, a resolution which follows, and requests you through your official office to direct the same to the proper channels for information of Senate now in session:

"Resolved by the National Association of Builders' Exchanges—

"First. That this association believes that the present freedom from income tax of incomes from bonds and other securities issued by States, counties, and municipalities has operated to relieve large incomes from bearing their proper share of Federal taxation; it feels that this is contrary to the interest of the public and should be stopped as soon as possible.

"Second. That the preference given by large investors under the above circumstances to State and municipal bonds has operated to the disadvantage of investments in private building and has thus operated as a restriction upon the amount of building for residences, stores, hotels, and factories requisite to meet the situation caused by the cessation of building during the war. It has thus been an important contributing cause to the continuance of high rents.

"Third. That this association strongly urges the passage by the Senate at this session of Congress of the proposed constitutional amendment (H. J. Res. 314) designed to put an end to this condition."

E. F. STOKES,
Secretary National Association of Builders' Exchanges.

Mr. TOWNSEND presented a resolution of Port Huron Lodge, No. 158, Loyal Order of Moose, of Port Huron, Mich., favoring the calling of an international conference to consider the restriction of the traffic in narcotic drugs, which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

Mr. LODGE presented resolutions of the Women's International League for Peace and Freedom, Massachusetts Branch, at Boston, Mass., protesting against the French occupation of the Ruhr as an ineffective and dangerous method of securing reparations and favoring the calling of an international conference to secure justice and protection to France and to solve world economic problems, the resumption of trade relations with Russia, recognition of the Government of Mexico, and the repeal of the espionage act; which were referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

Mr. STANLEY presented a memorial, numerously signed, of sundry citizens of Covington, Ky., remonstrating against the passage of legislation providing for compulsory Sunday observance in the District of Columbia, which was referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

Mr. KEYES presented resolutions adopted by the congregation of the Congregational Church of Hill and a meeting of the District Sunday School Institute at Rochester, both in the State of New Hampshire, favoring an amendment to the Constitution governing the passage of legislation regulating child labor, which were referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. KEYES. I present a copy of a joint resolution entitled "Joint resolution relating to the valuation of railroads" which was adopted by the New Hampshire Legislature on February 16th instant. I ask that it be printed in the RECORD and referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce.

The resolution was referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce, as follows:

STATE OF NEW HAMPSHIRE,
Office of Secretary of State.

I, Enos K. Sawyer, secretary of state of the State of New Hampshire, do hereby certify that the following and hereto attached is a true copy of a joint resolution entitled "Joint resolution relating to the valuation of railroads" (approved February 16, 1923), as engrossed in this office and in my custody as secretary of state.

In testimony whereof I hereto set my hand and cause to be affixed the seal of the State, at Concord, this 16th day of February, A. D. 1923.

ENOS K. SAWYER,
Secretary of State.

STATE OF NEW HAMPSHIRE, 1923.

Joint resolution relating to the valuation of railroads.

Resolved by the senate and house of representatives in general court convened, That whereas by section 19 (a) of the interstate commerce act providing for the valuation by the Interstate Commerce Commission of the properties of common carriers it is provided that "such investigation shall show the value of its property in each of the several States and Territories and the District of Columbia, classified and in detail as herein required"; and

Whereas the bureau of valuation of said commission has recommended to the commission that it request Congress to relieve it from showing values of said properties by States; and

Whereas it is desirable for various uses and purposes that such valuation shall be shown separately by States, as aforesaid:

Resolved, That it is the view of the Senate and House of Representatives of the State of New Hampshire that the Interstate Commerce Commission should show as to each interstate carrier the value of its property in each of the several States in which said property exists, and that no change in the law to sanction failure to make such showing ought to be sought or made; and be it further

Resolved, That a copy of this resolution be mailed to each United States Senator and each Member of Congress from New Hampshire.

WILLIAM J. AHERN,
Speaker of the House of Representatives.
WESLEY ADAMS,
President of the Senate.

Approved February 16, 1923.

FRED H. BROWN, Governor.

Mr. SHEPPARD. I present for publication in the RECORD and reference to the Committee on Foreign Relations a resolution adopted by the Legislature of Texas favoring the recognition of the present Government of Mexico.

The resolution was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations, as follows:

House concurrent resolution.

Whereas President Obregon has the confidence, respect, and support of the people of Mexico to a degree almost unprecedented in the history of that country, with the result that to-day Mexico is enjoying peace and stability; and

Whereas through the efforts of President Obregon a new era of cordiality and friendly relations has been initiated between the peoples on either side of the Rio Grande, who for so long misunderstood and distrusted each other; and

Whereas the friendly attitude toward American citizens and American interests so uniformly manifested by President Obregon since becoming the President of the Republic of Mexico is of that sincere nature and of that evident good faith which makes the best feeling between nations, strengthened by the promise of President Obregon in frequent utterances that Mexico will meet every just obligation for which Mexico as a nation is responsible: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the house of representatives, the senate concurring, That the Legislature of the State of Texas declares itself pleased with the administration of President Obregon and congratulates the people of Mexico upon the new era of peace, prosperity, and amicable relationship which have been established; and be it further

Resolved, That it is the sense of the Legislature of Texas that the best interests of our Nation and our State will be served and the restoration of order in world affairs will be hastened by the immediate official recognition of Mexico as administered by President Obregon; and be it further

Resolved, That the clerk of the house be and is hereby directed to forward copies of this resolution to the President of the United States, to the President of the Senate of the United States, to the Speaker of the House of Representatives, and to each of the Texas Senators and Representatives in Congress; and be it further

Resolved, That the clerk of the house be and is hereby directed to send a copy of this resolution to His Excellency, the Hon. Alvero Obregon, President of the Republic of Mexico.

R. E. SEAGLES,
Speaker of the House.
T. W. DAVIDSON,
President of the Senate.

I hereby certify that H. C. R. No. 13 was passed by the house February 6, 1923.

C. L. PHINNEY,
Chief Clerk of the House.

I hereby certify that H. C. R. No. 13 was passed by the Senate February 8, 1923.

W. V. HOWERITON,
Secretary of the Senate.

Mr. PHIPPS presented the following memorial of the Legislature of Colorado, which was referred to the Committee on Irrigation and Reclamation:

Senate Joint Memorial No. 1, memorializing Congress to liberalize repayment requirements under the Federal reclamation act.

Whereas it appears conclusively that a considerable majority of unit holders on the Uncompahgre and Grand Valley United States reclamation projects in Colorado are now and will continue to be unable to meet present statutory requirements for repayment of project costs; and

Whereas, due largely to adverse agricultural and economic conditions, a majority of unit holders on these Colorado projects are unavoidably delinquent in relation to payment of current operation and maintenance charges; and

Whereas the Federal reclamation act and acts amendatory thereof impose penalties ranging from 6 to 12 per cent per annum on such delinquent construction and operation and maintenance cost payments; and

Whereas by reason of conditions herein set forth large numbers of unit holders have been obliged to dispose of their equities at great loss to themselves; and, unless substantial and immediate relief is afforded, an increasing number of unit holders on these Colorado projects must inevitably be forced in the future to sacrifice the fruit of substantial investments and many years of hard labor; and

Whereas the entire scheme or policy of Federal reclamation will be greatly advanced by proper treatment of unit holders already on Federal reclamation project lands: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the Senate of the State of Colorado (the House of Representatives concurring), That the Congress of the United States be memorialized to enact legislation the purpose of which shall be:

(a) To provide additional time for the repayment of construction and operation and maintenance charges to the United States.

(b) For the withdrawing of public land notices announcing the dates and time for the commencement of payment of construction and operation and maintenance charges on reclamation projects; crediting construction charges already paid to delinquent operation and maintenance charges; reducing the penalty for delinquent repayments from 12 to 6 per cent per annum, providing that no public notices be reissued until the Secretary of the Interior by a commission determines through investigations held on the projects the financial and economic conditions of the farmers on said projects, together with the physical condition of the farm units, and recommends the date on which public notice shall be issued.

(c) That the time of repayment of construction charges as provided for in the reclamation extension act be extended to not less than 40 years, that lands be classified as to producing value and that the period of repayment be graduated and based upon said classification: Be it further

Resolved, That a copy of this memorial be sent to Senator Lawrence C. Phipps, Senator Samuel Nicholson, Hon. Edward T. Taylor, Hon. Guy U. Hardy, Hon. Charles B. Timberlake, and Hon. William N. Vaile, Representatives in Congress for the State of Colorado.

ROBERT F. ROCKWELL,
President of the Senate.

CHAS. C. SACKMANN,
Speaker of the House of Representatives.

Mr. MYERS presented the following memorial of the Legislature of Montana, which was referred to the Committee on Public Lands and Surveys:

House Joint Memorial 4—Memorial to the Congress of the United States, praying for an appropriation to provide for the construction of public roads leading into and through national forests, Indian reservations, and other public land areas.

To the Honorable Senate and House of Representatives in the Congress of the United States of America:

Your memorialists, the members of the Eighteenth Legislative Assembly of the State of Montana, the senate and house concurring, respectfully represent:

Whereas there are in the 13 public-land States of the Northwest 382,032,487 acres of unappropriated and unreserved public lands, Indian reservations, and national-forest areas that are nontaxable and that do not contribute to the building of public roads, except the 25 per cent of the gross proceeds of the forests, which is only a negligible amount. The nontaxable areas of these States are as follows:

	Acres.
Arizona	48,692,722
California	38,173,917
Colorado	24,562,927
Idaho	27,366,215
Minnesota	1,855,548
Montana	30,829,638
Nevada	58,453,899
New Mexico	30,418,359
Oregon	27,384,757
South Dakota	4,386,100
Utah	39,207,579
Washington	15,357,519
Wyoming	34,343,307
Total	382,032,487

Whereas Indian reservations, forest reserves, and other public lands stretch across county, State, and interstate highways, becoming insurmountable barriers to highway improvement, community, and State development; and

Whereas in many counties of the public-land States from 50 to 75 per cent of their area is nonassessable public-land area, affording no taxes for schools and roads; and

Whereas the public-land States, owing to large area, small population, and small valuation, have not been able to participate in the 50-50 provision of the Federal highway act; and

Whereas under the provisions of Senate bill 1072 there was enacted a law, November, 1921, providing for an appropriation of $75,000,000, $15,000,000 of which was to be applied on roads in national forests and leading into national forests; and

Whereas highway projects in the public-land States initiated under this appropriation must halt unless another appropriation is made to effect their completion: Therefore be it

Resolved, That the Congress of the United States be memorialized to make an appropriation of $20,000,000 for roads in and leading into national forests, in and through Indian reservations; and be it further

Resolved, That copies of this memorial be transmitted by the secretary of state to the President, the Secretary of the Interior, the Forest Service, Department of Agriculture, the Bureau of Public Roads, the United States Senators and Members of Congress, the governors of the 13 public-land States.

CALVIN CRUMBAKER,
Speaker of the House.

UNITED STATES OF AMERICA, State of Montana, ss:

I, C. T. Stewart, secretary of state of the State of Montana, do hereby certify that the above is a true and correct copy of house joint memorial No. 4, "A memorial to the Congress of the United States, praying for an appropriation to provide for the construction of public roads leading into and through national forests, Indian reservations, and other public-land areas," enacted by the eighteenth session of the Legislative Assembly of the State of Montana, in regular session assembled, and approved by Jos. M. Dixon, governor of said State, on the 13th day of February, A. D. 1923.

In testimony whereof, I have hereunto set my hand and affixed the great seal of the State of Montana, at Helena, the capital, this 13th day of February, A. D. 1923.

Mr. McNARY presented the following memorial of the Legislature of Oregon, which was referred to the Committee on Immigration:

House Joint Memorial No. 4.

To the honorable Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled:

Your memorialists, the Legislature of the State of Oregon, respectfully represent that—

Whereas the present number of unemployed aliens in the United States is largely in excess of the number the welfare of the country warrants, there being 13,300,000 people of foreign birth, with many others of foreign descent living in the foreign groups and of whom hundreds of thousands have not been assimilated and know little of our ideals, traditions, and purposes, and that it will take many months and years to fully acquaint all of these people with our aims as a Nation and to amalgamate them in the body politic; and

Whereas the State of Oregon is vitally interested in this problem, because in this State there are more than 17,000 who are unable to speak the English language or write their own name; and

Whereas the cost to the Government of our alien population by reason of the violation of the eighteenth amendment and the Harrison Narcotic Act, as well as of the Volstead Act, by thousands of these aliens is burdensome in the extreme; and

Whereas there are a sufficient number of American laborers to perform all work available, but they are crowded from industries and made to suffer by this enormous influx of aliens, as witnessed by the following percentage of alien laborers employed in our industries:

	Per cent.
Steel industry	58
Packing industry	61
Woolen mills	62
Cotton mills	69
Oil refineries	67
Clothing manufacturers	72
Mining industry	75

Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the House of Representatives of the State of Oregon (the Senate jointly concurring), That the Legislature of the State of Oregon is unalterably opposed to further immigration into the United States in excess of the present quota, and further recommends that our immigration laws be so amended as to restrict the entrance into the United States of all Asiatics and southern European internationals; but that under no condition will the immigration laws of the United States be so amended as to destroy the efficiency of the present immigration law or in any way permit a larger number of aliens to come into our borders than permitted by that law until a permanent immigration policy is adopted in which the interests of America, her ideals and institutions, traditions, and aims are fully protected and cared for by a rigid exclusion of all further immigration until such time as we may fully assimilate those within our own borders and give to American labor and American laws the rights and respect which are fully their due; be it further

Resolved, That the secretary of state is hereby instructed to transmit by mail a copy of this resolution to each member of the Oregon delegation in the United States Senate and House of Representatives at Washington.

Mr. McNARY presented the following memorial of the Legislature of Oregon, which was referred to the Committee on Public Lands and Surveys:

House Joint Memorial No. 5.

To the honorable Senate and House of Representatives of the Congress of the United States:

Your memorialists, the Legislature of the State of Oregon, respectfully represent that—

Whereas the Government of the United States by legislative enactment has withdrawn from public entry and settlement 156,666,045 acres of land in the States of California, Oregon, Washington, Idaho, Montana, Wyoming, Colorado, New Mexico, Arizona, Utah, and Nevada for the purpose of creating national forests; and

Whereas there is now standing on this land nearly 500,000,000,000 feet, board measure, of merchantable timber; and

Whereas 13,133,081 acres of our national forests are within the confines of the State of Oregon, upon which acreage it is estimated by Hon. William B. Greeley, United States forester, that there is now standing over 130,000,000,000 board feet of timber; and

Whereas over 5,000,000,000 board feet of merchantable timber within our national forests has been destroyed by forest fires during the past five years; and

Whereas over 18,000,000 acres of national forest lands were burned over by forest fires during the summers of 1918 and 1919; and

Whereas in many instances these national forest fires have spread over large tracts of privately owned timber, destroying large tracts of virgin forests and thereby causing tremendous losses to the owners of the land; and

Whereas the Government of the United States has withdrawn this land from entry and pays no taxes on same, leaving the whole burden of taxation, including all pioneer work, upon the people of the several counties of this State, some of which counties are as high as 68 per cent national forests; and

Whereas the timber in our national forests is worth, at $3 per thousand stumpage, approximately $1,500,000,000, which pays no tax whatever, while many of our counties are bonded to the constitutional limit for highway purposes, much of the money having been used for the construction of highways adjacent to or through national forests; and

Whereas there is no way known to man whereby these forests may be saved from destruction by fire except in the construction of permanent commercial highways through and adjacent to our national forests so that the ripe timber may be moved to market and so that fire fighters may be taken quickly to the blaze after it has been discovered: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the joint assembly of the Senate and House of Representatives of the State of Oregon, That the Congress of the United States be, and the same is hereby, memorialized to provide, by appropriation from our National Treasury or by sale of bonds on our national-forest timber, the necessary funds with which to construct a system of highways through and adjacent to our national forests commensurate with their needs of protection against destruction by fire; and be it further

Resolved, That the secretary of state of the State of Oregon is hereby authorized and directed to transmit a copy of this memorial to the President of the United States Senate, the Speaker of the House of Representatives of the United States of America, and to each United States Senator and Representative in Congress from Oregon.

Adopted by the house January 29, 1923.

THE COAL SITUATION.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. Mr. President, I have several telegrams from public authorities in Massachusetts giving additional evidence that there is a continuing and extensive shortage of coal and much suffering in those communities; also resolutions adopted by various organizations indicating the dire consequences to health and comfort that the shortage of coal is causing and the widespread dissatisfaction and unrest this situation has aroused. I request that the telegrams and communications be printed in the RECORD, treated as petitions, and referred to the Committee on Education and Labor, and that copies thereof be transmitted by the Secretary of the Senate to the Interstate Commerce Commission and the Federal Fuel Commission. These petitions indicate the pressing need of immediate relief.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered. The matter referred to is as follows:

MILFORD, MASS., February 17, 1923.

Hon. DAVID I. WALSH,
Washington, D. C.:

As selectmen of Milford we want you to know that there is much suffering here on account of having no coal. The situation is serious and requires prompt relief. Please help Milford.

JOHN H. EGAN.
FRANCIS G. KERR.
JOHN H. CUNNIFF.

MILFORD, MASS., February 16, 1923.

Hon. DAVID I. WALSH,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.:

Milford, Mass., without any hard coal and only scanty supply of soft coal. No relief in sight and conditions serious. Urge you institute measures for immediate relief from present suffering. Suggest running relief coal trains on passenger schedule, abandoning passenger service temporarily if necessary.

HOPEDALE MANUFACTURING CO.

MEDWAY, MASS., February 19, 1923.

Senator DAVID I. WALSH,
Washington, D. C.:

Local fuel situation serious this town. Intense suffering account severe cold and coal shortage. Is there not something you can do to give New England priority in coal movement? Suggest railroads curtail passenger trains and use motive power to rush coal cars to destinations.

THOMAS F. MALLOY,
Local Fuel Administrator.

MEDWAY, MASS., February 19, 1923.

Hon. DAVID I. WALSH,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.:

No coal in this community. Actual suffering exists. Will you assist us?

HINMAN COAL & GRAIN CO.

MALDEN, MASS., February 19, 1923.

Senator DAVID I. WALSH,

Conditions relating to supply of coal very critical here in Malden. Can not some steps be taken to hasten deliveries? Case very urgent and would appreciate your assistance.

JOHN V. KIMBALL, Mayor.

MEDWAY, MASS., February 19, 1923.

Senator DAVID I. WALSH,
Washington, D. C.:

Distressing conditions here for fuel. Can you help us immediately?

REV. MARTIN J. LEE.

STATE MUTUAL LIFE ASSURANCE CO. OF WORCESTER, MASS.,
Boston, Mass., February 15, 1923.

Hon. DAVID I. WALSH,
Senate Office Building, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR SENATOR: The people of my acquaintance in my town with whom I have talked within the last few days are very much interested in learning if it is possible to secure the delivery of one or two cars of egg or stove size anthracite at a siding either at Wellesley Farms or Wellesley proper. Having noted the very earnest efforts that you are making for the alleviation of inconvenience and suffering incidental to the coal situation in this State, I thought you might be in a position to advise me as to the possibilities of the above.

With kind personal regards, I am, yours very truly,

RALPH H. HOHMAN.

CLEVELAND, OHIO, February 16, 1923.

Hon DAVID I. WALSH,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.:

Referring to your letter to Interstate Commerce Commission regarding coal needs of New England, we have been trying for a week past without success to get the New York Central Railroad to accept shipments of specially prepared domestic bituminous coal from our Meadow Lands mine on Pittsburgh & West Virginia Railroad at Avella, Pa., destined to New England points on New York, New Haven & Hartford Railroad for domestic use. The New York Central Railroad has a general coal embargo against the New Haven road, although the latter road has modified its existing embargoes to permit acceptance of domestic coal. If by any action you can take you can make the railroads of this country realize their shortcomings and take action to overcome them, and that the present coal shortage is due entirely to their failure to furnish such reasonably adequate transportation as the transportation act justified the shipping public to expect, the country at large will be forever in your debt. The rank and absolute failure of the coal-carrying railroads of this country to provide even reasonable service and facilities in the handling of coal in this emergency is almost criminal. There is plenty of coal available and men and mine equipment to produce it, only transportation being lacking to provide for the country's needs, and the continued failure of the railroads to furnish such transportation leads one to the conclusion that they are discriminately hauling other higher-revenue freight to the exclusion of coal, notwithstanding the emergency.

WILLIAM TAYLOR,
Vice President the Cleveland & Western Coal Co.

The Hon. DAVID I. WALSH,
United States Senator, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: At the regular meeting of the Men's Club, First M. E. Church, Medford, Mass., the following resolution was unanimously adopted:

"Resolved, That we, the members of the Men's Club, First M. E. Church, Medford, Mass., realizing the suffering and deplorable condition caused by the shortage of coal, believing that the time is ripe for legislation at our National Capital that will for all time put an end to the cause or causes that brought about this alarming state of affairs, we believe there is a universal demand that steps be taken, drastic or otherwise, that will for all time put an end to the possibility of a recurrence of these conditions; be it further

"Resolved, That a copy of this resolution be mailed to our representatives in Congress.

SPRINGFIELD TENANTS' PROTECTIVE ASSOCIATION,
Springfield, Mass., February 13, 1923.

Hon. DAVID I. WALSH,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: We feel grateful for your inspiring letter of the 1st instant.

We are completing the organization of the Coal Consumers' League. Already 8,000 signers are listed, representing a yearly consumption of 50,000 tons of hard coal. We propose to purchase coal for our members direct from the mines.

We heartily indorse your work in Congress. It truly represents the desire of the majority of the people of Massachusetts. The sentiment of our members repeatedly expressed is, if immediate relief from present fuel conditions and prevention of its reoccurrence is not obtainable, that this organization goes on record as in favor of Government control of the coal mines.

* * * * * * *

Situated as we are, and in close touch with the people, we can not emphasize too strongly the fact that the citizens are losing faith in our Government.

Sincerely yours, WILLIAM F. GRADY,
President Tenants' Protective Association,
Chairman Organization Committee Coal Consumers.

OBITUARY—COAL SHORTAGE CLAIMS PNEUMONIA VICTIM IN ASAHEL EZRA LYON, 80.

Asahel Ezra Lyon, 80, and for half a century one of the best-known house builders in Springfield, is the victim of the latest tragedy occasioned by the coal shortage. He died in a private sanitarium in Westport, Conn., Sunday, after having made several fruitless efforts to find some place where he could stay and enjoy the warmth that he craved.

Mr. Lyon had lived alone on his farm on Tinkham Road following the death of his wife. About two years ago he sold the farm and went to live with his only surviving daughter, Mrs. Bertha L. Arnold, of 101 Oak Street. When Mrs. Arnold's coal supply became exhausted a few weeks ago Mr. Lyon was removed to a local sanitarium, but even there he could not find the warmth that he needed. Then, still hoping to find a place of warmth and comfort, he left the sanitarium and went to visit his only surviving sister, Mrs. Etta Bunnell, in Wallingford, Conn., but found that the coal situation there was as bad as he had experienced in Springfield. A few days after his arrival in Wallingford he was stricken with pneumonia and was taken to the sanitarium at Westport, where he remained until his death.

NO CHANGE IN COAL SITUATION—MANY WAIT AT CHICOPEE YARDS FOR COAL THAT FAILS TO APPEAR—WOOD BRINGING $17 AND $18 A CORD.

While a group of children persistently waited outside the gates of the Pomeroy Coal & Wood Co.'s siding at the Chicopee freight yard yesterday for coal which they were assured had not come, another patient group of kiddies did the same in front of the D. P. Hopkins coal yard.

Mayor J. M. Grise and Fuel Administrator J. E. Granfield were working hard to learn what the Boston & Maine Railroad officials were doing in the fuel transportation.

Besides Administrator Granfield and Mayor Grise, the coal dealers were on their jobs and went down into the railroad yards to see only empty bins. Investigation of nearly all the cars in the yards showed that while there was no anthracite yet that in a New York Central coal car was some steel and wood consigned to the Moore Drop Forging Co. Along the tracks trudged a Polish woman and her little boy, each bearing a heavy railroad tie. Railroad officials smiled and said they were sure it would be all right. Several empty coal cars were on sidings.

Meanwhile yesterday afternoon those who were unable to buy anthracite snapped up what wood was in sight. One hundred cords were reported sold at $17 to $19 a cord at the Chicopee wood yard. Half of the wood being sold is bought by Springfield people, according to Trumanz Gurvitch, who has charge of the yard. One woman called up Mr. Gurvitch yesterday and said she was out of fuel and asked for four cords. He pointed out that a cord or half a cord would do just as well.

FAMILY OF EIGHT WITHOUT COAL MAY DIE OF PNEUMONIA—INDIAN ORCHARD RESIDENTS, IN TWO LOCAL HOSPITALS, HAD LIVED IN ONE ROOM WHOLE WEEK WITHOUT HEAT.

Louis Meyette, his wife, and six small children were found dangerously ill with pneumonia at their home 111 Healy Avenue, Indian Orchard, by the visiting nurse of the health center yesterday. All were living in one room of their four-room tenement. They have been without heat for the past week, when the father, mother, and six children were taken ill and were unable to notify neighbors.

The visiting nurse called Dr. A. H. Reardon, and the family was immediately sent to the hospital. The father and oldest daughter, Edith, were on the dangerous list at the Wesson Memorial Hospital with lobar pneumonia last night, and the hospital authorities had little hope for their recovery. The mother and five children are at the City Hospital, and were reported last night as in danger, with little hope for the recovery of Mrs. Meyette and 7-year-old Viola. The other children are Sylvia, Willard, David, and Lattabell. They are being attended by City Physician W. A. R. Chapin.

The family has only been living here a short time, coming from Canada about two months ago. They have no relatives here and have made but few acquaintances. Mr. Meyette was employed as a woodchopper until the time of his illness last week.

FIVE NEW COAL SUBSTATIONS—FUEL RELIEF FOR HYDE PARK, DORCHESTER, AND WOLLASTON.

In order to relieve conditions in Hyde Park, Dorchester, and Wollaston, five new substations have been opened under the direction of the city fuel committee, supplied by a local coal company.

The coal will be sold in 100-pound lots, at 80 cents a bag. The stations are: Everett Square, Hyde Park; Adams Street, near Granite, East Milton; corner of Dunbar Avenue and Washington Street, Dorchester; Blue Hill Parkway at Eliot Street, Milton; Wollaston Fire Station, at Wollaston Bridge.

TOWN OF ASHBURNHAM, MASS.,
OFFICE OF TOWN CLERK,
February 10, 1923.

Hon. DAVID I. WALSH,
Washington.

DEAR SENATOR WALSH:

* * * * * * *

Your article in the press of to-day reflects an absolute truthful view of the effect that their present suffering has on their attitude toward our Government. There is a prevailing feeling that the Government is not functioning for the help and benefit of the people, and I am conscious of the fact that even in our small community there is a spirit of unrest and dissatisfaction that bodes evil for the future.

I am surprised that Congress as a whole fails to grasp the extent of the suffering caused by its neglect. I believe that this whole situation might have been averted by thoughtful and patriotic action.

With assurance of my gratitude and esteem, I am,

Very truly yours,

WALTON B. WHITNEY.

DEPARTMENT OF PARKS AND PUBLIC PROPERTY,
City Hall, Newark, N. J., February 8, 1923.

Hon. DAVID I. WALSH,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR SENATOR: I believe the American people generally regard you as an absolutely independent Senator. They believe you are free of any entanglements with special interests and that your first consideration in public life is the welfare of the American people. The present coal famine brings to the surface a vital question, which must be settled. Every year we are threatened with a coal shortage and a battle or a sham battle occurs annually between the miners and the mine owners. The American people are held in suspense for months each year wondering if they will be able to get sufficient coal to heat their homes during the coming winter. Some of the mines are owned by independents, some by railroad combinations. The independents are more practical, if anything, than the large organized coal-mining companies. While mayor of Newark during the famine of 1918 I sent men to investigate the coal situation in Pennsylvania. I learned then that there were vast coal fields that could be purchased at reasonable prices. They were offered to me.

Daily I pass coal yards in this city and I see a line of men, women, and children, young and old, waiting with pails and bags, sometimes for hours, to purchase a bushel of coal, paying at the rate of almost $20 per ton. They look like the bread lines that used to wait outside of the East Side soup houses during the panic period. In these coal lines, however, you find rich and poor alike. Why do they stand for hours waiting for a bushel of coal? Because they must have heat in their homes to protect their young, their old, and their sick, and they are willing to submit to any humility or inconvenience to get even the scant supply for a fire or two. How long will the American people submit to such a condition, a condition which could be remedied in one month by the Government of the United States? These coal lines are a blot on the intelligence, the decency, and the independence of the American people. No one can now estimate, outside of a thoughtful physician, the terrific damage caused to the health and life of the American people by the shortage of fuel which occurs now annually. Disease and death multiply in cold homes.

This is the remedy. Let you Senators, who are really American, who are not owned by the corporations or the interests, get together, introduce a bill to have the Government of the United States go into the coal mining business. Do not seize the present mines. Let the Government buy new fields at once, install the machinery and start mining coal, have a large supply on hand and the moment a strike is threatened, a shortage is imminent, or the price becomes excessive, arrange to deliver the coal mined by the Government throughout the country to the retail dealers to be sold to the people. The Government is then in a position to meet any emergency or shortage. It does not necessarily mean that the Government is putting any private competitor out of business, but the Government should have on hand enough coal to supply the people when the miners and the owners refuse or are unable to do so. No Member of Congress who understands the seriousness of these coal famines will vote against such a measure.

I have served this city as an official for more than a decade and I know the wants of the people as well as any other official. I speak from experience. I have given long thought to this particular subject and I feel that this would be a logical and feasible solution. I hope you will do me the honor of expressing your opinion of this plan.

With best wishes, I am, very truly yours,

CHARLES P. GILLEN, Director.

F. C. HENDERSON CO.,
Boston, February 15, 1923.

Hon. DAVID I. WALSH,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: Your idea of coal for New England now is absolutely necessary. In fact this not only ought to have been thought about six weeks ago, but acted on at that time. We have the coal, miners, railroads, and boats. Isn't the Government big enough to reciprocate what we did for them five or six years ago?

Your idea, if necessary, of embargoing everything but coal is right. You must know how exceedingly difficult it is to deliver coal or anything else after it gets to the local point of distribution. The roads are and have been for weeks almost impassable.

For heaven's sake, let's do something besides talk.

Yours truly,

RICHARD E. COLTON,
48 Hollis Street, East Milton.

No. 10 HUNTOON STREET,
Dorchester, Mass., February 13, 1923.

DEAR SENATOR: I am sending you a few lines to inform you of the terrible conditions which exist in my particular district.

I have a brother who has been waiting with the utmost patience for the last month for his wife to come home and live with him again after a siege of sickness in a Boston hospital.

Owing to the lack of fuel he is unable to have her come home and live in arctic atmosphere.

I am positive that these conditions are absolutely unnecessary.

I am not a union advocate because I am not connected in any way whatsoever with union organizations; although I think that the railroad situation could be satisfactorily settled.

With proper Government control and ownership the entire railroad systems throughout the country for the general betterment of the people as a whole.

Yours truly,

FRANK C. WALSH.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

[*NOTE.—In view of varied salaries, no suggestions are made concerning Finance Committee. No changes have been made in Appropriations Committee, leaving that to your committee to adjust.]

MEMBERSHIP OF STATE BANKS, ETC., IN FEDERAL RESERVE SYSTEM.

Mr. McLEAN submitted the following resolution (S. Res. 444), which was referred to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate:

Resolved, That the Committee on Banking and Currency of the Senate, or any subcommittee thereof, be, and hereby is, authorized, during sessions and recesses of the Sixty-seventh or Sixty-eighth Congress, to inquire into the effect of the present limited membership of State banks and trust companies in the Federal reserve system upon financial conditions in the agricultural sections of the United States; the reasons which actuate such banks and trust companies in failing to become members of the Federal reserve system; what administrative measures have been taken and are being taken to increase such membership; and whether or not any change should be made in existing law, or in the rules and regulations of the Federal Reserve Board, or in its methods of administration, to bring about in the agricultural sections a larger membership of such banks or trust companies in the Federal reserve system.

In pursuance of this inquiry said committee, or subcommittee thereof, is further authorized to send for persons, books, and papers, to administer oaths, and to employ experts deemed necessary by such committee, a clerk, and a stenographer to report such hearings as may be had in connection with any subject pending before said committee, at a cost not to exceed 25 cents per folio, all expenses incurred in furtherance of the purposes of this resolution to be paid out of the contingent fund of the Senate, not to exceed the sum of $500.

The committee shall from time to time report to the Senate the results of its inquiries, together with its recommendations, and may prepare and submit bills or resolutions embodying such recommendations, and its final report shall be submitted not later than January 31, 1924.

PROPOSED INTERNATIONAL CONFERENCE.

Mr. OWEN. I submit a resolution which I ask may lie on the table.

The resolution (S. Res. 445) was ordered to lie on the table, as follows:

Resolved, That the President of the United States is requested to invite all the nations of the earth, whether they have adhered to the covenant of the league or not, to attend, in the city of Washington, United States of America, a three months' international economic conference for the promotion of international trade and understanding and a conference for the establishment throughout the world of the territorial integrity and political independence of every nation, great and small, and the abolition of war.

LIQUOR SALES BY SHIPPING BOARD.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, I offer the resolution which I send to the desk, which I ask that the Secretary may read, and then I shall ask unanimous consent for its immediate consideration.

Mr. CURTIS. Let the resolution be read.

Mr. McKELLAR. I have asked that it be read by the Secretary.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will read the resolution.

The reading clerk read the resolution (S. Res. 446) as follows:

Resolved, That the Shipping Board report to the Senate at the earliest practicable hour the following:

1. What quantity of whisky, wine, beer, and other alcoholic beverages was sold on Shipping Board vessels during the time that such sales were carried on with the approval of the Shipping Board?
2. What was the quantity dispensed per vessel?
3. What quantity of these liquors was purchased by the Shipping Board or by its agents, and what was the total value thereof and the total receipts thereof per vessel?
4. How many pints, quarts, and cases of liquor were sold to passengers independent of what they purchased over the bars of the vessels?
5. How much liquor was purchased by the crews of such vessels and what was the value thereof?
6. Was liquor served as a part of the crews' mess and could the crews of such vessels purchase liquor freely?
7. How many pints, quarts, gallons, and barrels of whisky, wine, beer, and cognac and other intoxicating beverages were in the possession of the Shipping Board when the order was given to stop selling same aboard vessels?
7½. Has any of these liquors been sold in the United States?
8. Where is this liquor at the present time? If disposed of, to whom, at what prices, where shipped, and what was total amount of sales?
9. Was any of it sold to officers or members of the crews of such vessels or to any employees of the Shipping Board, and at what prices, when the order for stoppage of sales was given?
10. Did any of the officials of the Shipping Board or officers of Shipping Board vessels engage in the sale of liquors to passengers aboard vessels for private gain?
11. To what extent, if any, is liquor being sold aboard vessels at the present time? Are any prohibition enforcement officers allowed aboard such vessels?
12. What was total amount of profits made by the Shipping Board out of sales of intoxicating beverages?

Mr. McKELLAR. I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of the resolution.

Mr. CALDER. I object to the consideration of the resolution.

Mr. McKELLAR. Then I ask that the resolution be printed and lie on the table.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The resolution will be printed and go over under the rule.

REVISION OF THE LAWS.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, I desire to submit a motion which I ask may lie on the table. It is a motion to discharge a committee from the consideration of a bill.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will read the motion intended to be submitted by the Senator from Mississippi.

The reading clerk read as follows:

I move to discharge the Committee on Revision of the Laws from the further consideration of the bill (H. R. 12) to consolidate, codify, revise, and reenact the general and permanent laws of the United States in force March 4, 1919.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The motion will be entered.

AMENDMENT OF WAR RISK INSURANCE ACT.

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the action of the House of Representatives disagreeing to the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 10003) to further amend and modify the war risk insurance act, and requesting a conference with the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon.

Mr. McCUMBER. I move that the Senate insist on its amendments, accede to the request of the House for a conference, and that the conferees on the part of the Senate be appointed by the Chair.

The motion was agreed to, and the Vice President appointed Mr. McCUMBER, Mr. SMOOT, and Mr. WILLIAMS conferees on the part of the Senate.

CONSIDERATION OF THE CALENDAR.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there further morning business?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Mr. President, I desire to ask whether it is intended when we take up the calendar that its consideration shall begin where it was left off a week ago or whether we shall go back to the beginning?

The VICE PRESIDENT. No such order has been made, and, unless it is made, the consideration of the calendar will commence at the beginning.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Mr. President, I move that to-day we begin the consideration of the calendar where its consideration was left off a week ago, and after that that we shall go back to the beginning of the calendar.

Mr. SMOOT. I understood that there was a unanimous-consent agreement to begin the consideration of the calendar under Rule VIII with the first bill appearing on the calendar.

Mr. McCUMBER. I do not so understand, and if that is the record, I should like to see it.

Mr. SMOOT. I think that is the record. I think objection was made by the Senator from Nebraska to beginning with the calendar at the point where its consideration was left off the last time it was before the Senate.

Mr. NEW. Mr. President, I have been unable to hear the Senator from Utah. Do I understand from what he has said that unanimous consent was asked and given that we begin this morning with the consideration of the calendar with the first bill?

Mr. SMOOT. As I understand, the first request for unanimous consent was that we begin with the calendar where we left off when it was last under consideration, but that the Senator from Nebraska objected and requested that the calendar should be taken up without that understanding. I will look up the record in regard to the matter; but what I have stated is my impression.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, I can clear up the situation. The unanimous-consent agreement entered into provides for a consideration of unobjected bills on the calendar under Rule VIII, but does not specify with what number on the calendar the Senate shall begin its consideration. So I assume that the agreement contemplated that the consideration of the calendar this morning was to commence at the beginning of the calendar. It is certainly proper that the Senate should have an opportunity to pass upon all the bills on the calendar, and if possible clean up the calendar. Mr. President, I call for the regular order.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair has already made the statement which has just been made by the Senator from Arkansas.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, I was merely going to say what has already been stated. The agreement covers the consideration of unobjected bills on the calendar, commencing at the beginning.

Mr. NEW. Mr. President, I submit that it is not entirely fair that we should begin the consideration of the calendar with the first bill thereon. We had reached Order of Business No. 1042 when the calendar was last under consideration, and had that bill under consideration when the morning hour closed. That was the situation when the calendar was last under consideration. It would be just as easy to begin with Order of Business 1042 to-day, and after the end of the calendar shall have been reached to return to the numbers preceding it, as it would be to begin with the first bill on the calendar. Should the latter method be adopted there will be bills on the calendar which will have no chance for consideration at all, while the bills which are first on the calendar will have had two chances at least.

Mr. McCUMBER. They will have had three or four chances.

Mr. NEW. As the Senator from North Dakota suggests, they will have had three or four chances. I submit that in ordinary fairness we should begin with the calendar where we left off its consideration the other day.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, will the Senator from Indiana yield to me?

Mr. NEW. Certainly.

Mr. ROBINSON. For more than a month the Senate has been beginning with the calendar where it left off the last time the calendar was under consideration. It has made no substantial progress. The matter was discussed informally at least the other day when the request for unanimous consent was made, and objection was indicated. Though, perhaps, it does not appear in the RECORD, it was known that objection would be made against beginning where the calendar was left off on the last call of the calendar, the object being to give an opportunity to consider all bills on the calendar.

If we do not consume the time in which those bills may be considered in contesting where we shall begin, we can, under Rule VIII, consider every bill on the calendar. Any Senator can at any time object to the consideration of a bill which is called on the calendar.

Mr. NEW. Certainly he can under the rule.

Mr. ROBINSON. We may thus complete the calendar.

Mr. FLETCHER. A parliamentary inquiry, Mr. President.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Florida will state his parliamentary inquiry.

Mr. FLETCHER. Have we disposed of morning business and reached the calendar?

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair inquired if there was any further morning business and several Senators rose.

Mr. MYERS. I desire to present some additional morning business for a second, if I may. Will the Senator from Indiana yield to me for a second?

Mr. NEW. I yield to the Senator for the purpose of the introduction of a bill or any such purpose as that.

[Mr. MYERS presented a memorial of the Legislature of the State of Montana, which appears under the proper heading.]

Mr. NEW. Mr. President, in the interest of fairness I move that the Senate proceed with the consideration of bills on the calendar, beginning at the point where we left off when the calendar was last under consideration.

Mr. ROBINSON. I make the point of order that that motion is not in order.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The point of order is well taken.

Mr. ROBINSON. I demand the regular order.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The regular order is the completion of morning business. Is there further morning business? If there is no further morning business, morning business is closed. The calendar under Rule VIII, under the unanimous-consent agreement, is in order. The Secretary will state the first bill on the calendar.

BILLS AND JOINT RESOLUTIONS PASSED OVER.

The bill (S. 491) to provide, without expenditure of Federal funds, the opportunities of the people to acquire rural homes, and for other purposes, was announced as first in order.

Mr. ROBINSON. I ask that that bill go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over.

The bill (S. 7) to amend the act entitled "An act to regulate the business of loaning money on security of any kind by persons, firms, and corporations other than national banks, licensed bankers, trust companies, savings banks, building and loan associations, and real estate brokers in the District of Columbia," approved February 4, 1913, was announced as next in order.

Mr. ROBINSON. I ask that that bill go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over.

The bill (S. 2228) to amend certain sections of the Judicial Code relating to the Court of Claims was announced as next in order.

Mr. SMOOT. I ask that that bill go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over.

The bill (H. R. 8331) to amend the transportation act, 1920, and for other purposes, was announced as next in order.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, that is a very important measure, and I believe it will require some time to discuss it. So I suggest that it go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over.

The joint resolution (S. J. Res. 41) authorizing transportation for dependents of Army field clerks and field clerks, Quartermaster Corps, was announced as next in order.

Mr. SMOOT. I ask that the joint resolution go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The joint resolution will be passed over.

The bill (S. 2718) to provide for leasing of the floating dry dock at the naval station, New Orleans, La., was announced as next in order.

Mr. PAGE. Mr. President, I have been requested by several Senators to ask that Order of Business No. 376, being Senate bill 2718, be recommitted to the Committee on Naval Affairs for further consideration, and I ask unanimous consent that that be done.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the bill is recommitted to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

The bill (S. 2589) to amend section 11 of the act entitled "An act for the retirement of public-school teachers in the District of Columbia," approved January 15, 1920, was announced as next in order.

Mr. McCUMBER. I notice that the author of this bill is not present, and I think it due to him that it be passed over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over.

The bill (S. 67) for the relief of the heirs of Adam and Noah Brown was announced as next in order.

Mr. SMOOT and Mr. KING asked that the bill go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over.

The bill (S. 1539) for the relief of Watson B. Dickerman, administrator of the estate of Charles Backman, deceased, was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING and Mr. SMOOT asked that the bill go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over.

The bill (S. 1861) authorizing the Court of Claims to adjudicate the claim of Capt. David McD. Shearer for compensation for the adoption and use and acquisition by the United States Government of his patented inventions was announced as next in order.

Mr. SMOOT. I ask that the bill go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over.

The joint resolution (S. J. Res. 133) proposing an amendment to the Constitution of the United States was announced as next in order.

Mr. ROBINSON. I ask that that go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The joint resolution will be passed over.

The bill (S. 14) providing for the election of a Delegate to the House of Representatives from the District of Columbia, and for other purposes, was announced as next in order.

Mr. WILLIS. I ask that that bill go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over.

The bill (S. 2992) authorizing the Secretary of War to furnish certain information for historical purposes to the adjutants general of the several States and the District of Columbia, and making an appropriation therefor, was announced as next in order.

Mr. LODGE. That bill does not appear on the calendar. According to the calendar before me the next number is 537.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, I rise to a parliamentary inquiry. I do not know whether or not the inquiry comes strictly within the rule, but the Secretary is calling a bill which is not printed on the calendar which has been laid on the desks of Senators.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair is advised that the bill the title of which has just been stated by the Secretary has passed the Senate, but a motion to reconsider it is pending.

Mr. ROBINSON. Very well; let the bill go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over.

The bill (S. 3254) to encourage the development of the agricultural resources of the United States through Federal and State cooperation, giving preference in the matter of employment and the establishment of rural homes to those who have served with the military and naval forces of the United States, was announced as next in order.

Mr. McNARY. I ask that that bill go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over.

The bill (S. 1343) granting relief to persons who served in the Military Telegraph Corps of the Army during the Civil War was announced as next in order.

Mr. SMOOT. I ask that that bill go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over.

The bill (S. 1345) to amend an act entitled "interstate commerce act," approved February 28, 1920, was announced as next in order.

Mr. NEW. I ask that that bill go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over.

The bill (S. 1346) to amend an act entitled "An act to regulate commerce," approved February 4, 1887, and all acts amendatory thereof, including the safety appliance acts and the act providing for the valuation of the several classes of property of carriers subject to the Interstate Commerce Commission, approved March 1, 1913, was announced as next in order.

Mr. NEW. I ask that that bill go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over.

The bill (S. 2921) to amend an act entitled "An act to establish a uniform system of bankruptcy throughout the United States," approved July 1, 1898, and acts amendatory thereof and supplementary thereto, was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. I ask that that bill go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over.

The joint resolution (S. J. Res. 188) creating a committee to investigate existing conditions of industry and commerce in the United States for the purpose of recommending to Congress legislation defining the rights and limitations of cooperative organizations as distinguished from illicit combinations in restraint of trade was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING and Mr. WILLIS asked that the joint resolution go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The joint resolution will be passed over.

The bill (S. 171) to extend the provisions of the act of May 11, 1912, was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. Reserving the right to object, I should like to have the bill read.

The reading clerk proceeded to read the bill.

Mr. KING. I ask that the bill go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over.

The joint resolution (S. J. Res. 227) rejecting bids for the acquisition of Muscle Shoals, was announced as next in order.

Mr. ROBINSON. Let that go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The joint resolution will be passed over.

The bill (H. R. 13) to assure to persons within the jurisdiction of every State the equal protection of the laws, and to punish the crime of lynching, was announced as next in order.

Mr. ROBINSON. Let that go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over.

The bill (S. 3146) to amend section 5 of the United States cotton futures act was announced as next in order.

Mr. WILLIS. Let that go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over.

The bill (S. 2388) for the relief of Augusta Reiter was announced as next in order.

Mr. NEW. Let that go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over.

The bill (S. 3858) to define butter and to provide a standard therefor was announced as next in order.

Mr. STERLING. Mr. President, a few days ago I asked unanimous consent for the present consideration of this bill. Some objection was made to the consideration of the bill at that time, the Senator making the objection desiring further time to look into it. Since that time——

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, if this is Senate bill 3858, I ask that it go over.

Mr. STERLING. Will the Senator permit me to complete the statement? Since the objection made the other day to the further consideration of the bill, the bill has passed the House in identically the same language as here, except for the addition of six words at the end of the bill; and I hope to move——

Mr. WILLIAMS. I ask that it go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over.

The bill (H. R. 211) to extend the provisions of the pension act of May 11, 1912, and May 1, 1920, to the officers and enlisted men of all State militia and other State organizations that rendered service to the Union cause during the Civil War for a period of 90 days or more, and providing pensions for their widows, minor children, and dependent parents, and for other purposes, was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. Let that go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over.

The bill (S. 3995) to authorize the Secretary of Agriculture to exterminate bean beetles in the State of New Mexico, and authorizing expenditures therefor, was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. Let that go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over.

JOHN L. LIVINGSTON.

The bill (S. 2792) for the relief of John L. Livingston was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. Let that go over.

Mr. NICHOLSON. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator from Utah to permit the consideration of this bill, because this case is a very meritorious one. It is the case of a young man who was connected with the Naval Air Service. Eleven days after the armistice was signed, in the line of duty, he had his back broken. He was in front of the propeller, and the pilot of the airplane started the propeller in motion and broke his back. He was in the hospital here for about nine months, and he is declared by the physicians to be incurable. His retirement has been recommended by the Secretary of the Navy, and I may say that all of the members of the Naval Affairs Committee excepting one reported favorably on this bill.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, as I understand the bill, the beneficiary was not a regular officer of the Navy.

Mr. NICHOLSON. He attained the rank of captain during the war.

Mr. KING. Yes; but he merely came in during the war, with the expectation of retiring to private life after the war was over.

Mr. NICHOLSON. I do not know that it was with that expectation. I am not sure about that.

Mr. KING. If he were a naval officer, it seems to me he would be entitled to the benefits of retirement without any special legislation.

Mr. NICHOLSON. I know that at the time of the accident he was a commissioned officer and in good health and physical condition, and from the reports before us we can be certain he is not in that condition now.

Mr. KING. There is no doubt but that the Government ought to care for this man and care for him most liberally and generously, and I can not understand why the compensation acts do not apply to him. The objection that I have to the bill is this: There is a determined effort, as the Senator knows, to give to reserve officers, both in the Army and in the Navy, the benefits of the retirement privileges which are given to the Regular Army officers. We passed a bill—I think it was injudiciously passed—which extended these benefits to reserve officers of the Navy. When we saw the injurious consequences resulting therefrom we speedily repealed it. This is a return to that principle; and if we give this man the benefit of retirement privileges, then it seems to me we must give to every reserve officer, both in the Army and in the Navy, the same benefit.

Opposition to this measure is not grounded upon the proposition that this man should not be compensated for his injuries. He was in the service, and he is entitled to compensation; and, as the Senator knows, liberal compensation is provided for those who receive injuries. If the compensation act now does not give him all that he is entitled to by reason of his serious injury, I shall be very happy to join with the Senator in passing a bill giving to him most liberal and most generous compensation.

Mr. NICHOLSON. I want to say to the Senator from Utah that I am quite sure the compensation act does not give him what he is entitled to; and, if my memory serves me right, I believe the Secretary of the Navy said that if this bill was passed and he was placed upon the retirement list his compensation would not exceed $125 a month.

Mr. KING. The only objection I have to it is the precedent that it will establish. The Senator knows that a very great effort is being made now to drive through the Congress a bill to give to reserve officers all of the benefits of retirement. I am opposed to that measure. I am willing to give to this man, if the Senator will offer an independent bill, most generous compensation for life if his injuries are permanent.

Mr. NICHOLSON. I think the Senator will agree that this bill does not place him on a retired officer's pay. I think, if the Senator will look up the matter, he will find that the bill does not provide for a retired officer's pay in this case.

Mr. KING. If the Senator will permit me, I think this language means that. It says that he shall be eligible for retirement as if his physical disability was incurred in time of war.

Mr. NICHOLSON. Yes; but he did not have the rank of captain at the time he was disabled, so that the Senator's objection does not apply to his case.

Mr. KING. It would carry him to the retired list with the grade that he had. I say to the Senator that it is quite likely, from the character of the injuries to which the Senator refers, that this man may be entitled to more than he would receive as a retired officer of the rank which he had, and I should be willing to vote for it; but I am not willing to support this bill, because, as I understand its terms, it announces the proposition that we will give to reserve officers who will go back into private life the same retirement benefits and privileges that are enjoyed by the officers of the Regular Army and Navy.

Mr. NICHOLSON. Is the Senator quite sure that the case which we have under consideration comes under the classification to which he refers?

Mr. KING. I think so. That is my opinion.

Mr. NICHOLSON. But there is a doubt about it. We are about to adjourn. This man is without means to support himself, because he is totally disabled and therefore unable to earn a living. We do not meet until next December. I think it is a great imposition upon this man, who served his country faithfully and with distinction, to be denied relief at this time. That is the way I feel about it.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, he will not be denied relief, because he is entitled to compensation now.

Mr. NICHOLSON. But he is not receiving compensation now.

Mr. KING. It is because he has not applied for it, then.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from New Jersey. The time of the Senator from Colorado has expired.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. Does not this throw some light on the case? In hearings, in the letter from the Secretary of the Navy——

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I will object to the consideration of the bill, if no one else will.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Upon objection, of course, the bill goes over.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. Mr. President——

Mr. HEFLIN. I did not understand that there was objection. Some disposition ought to be made of this case.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT] objects.

Mr. HEFLIN. If this soldier's back is broken, and he has to live on charity, something ought to be done, and something must be done to relieve him now, because Congress will adjourn March 4.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. Mr. President, who has the floor?

Mr. HEFLIN. I give notice that we will not consider any other measures unless something is done for this poor unfortunate soldier.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from New Jersey has the floor. Does the Senator yield?

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will call the roll.

The roll was called, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Ashurst	George	McKinley	Sheppard
Ball	Gerry	McLean	Smith
Bayard	Glass	McNary	Smoot
Brookhart	Hale	Moses	Spencer
Broussard	Harreld	New	Stanfield
Calder	Harris	Nicholson	Sterling
Capper	Harrison	Norbeck	Sutherland
Caraway	Heflin	Norris	Swanson
Colt	Hitchcock	Oddie	Townsend
Couzens	Johnson	Overman	Underwood
Culberson	Jones, Wash.	Page	Wadsworth
Curtis	Kellogg	Pepper	Walsh, Mass.
Dial	Keyes	Phipps	Walsh, Mont.
Dillingham	King	Pittman	Warren
Edge	Ladd	Poindexter	Watson
Ernst	La Follette	Pomerene	Weller
Fernald	Lenroot	Ransdell	Williams
Fletcher	Lodge	Reed, Mo.	Willis
France	McCumber	Reed, Pa.
Frelinghuysen	McKellar	Robinson

The VICE PRESIDENT. Seventy-eight Senators having answered to their names, a quorum is present.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, I ask the Senator from Alabama not to persist in the announcement he made a moment ago, and that he permit us to consider the calendar in regular order. I suggest that the next number on the calendar be called.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will report the next bill on the calendar.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, a moment ago I objected to the consideration of Order of Business No. 847, Senate bill 3858, a bill introduced by the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. STERLING]. I made the objection under a misapprehension about the bill. I wish to withdraw the objection.

Mr. DIAL. Mr. President, I ask that the bill go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over.

BILLS PASSED OVER.

The bill (H. R. 12817) to amend and supplement the merchant marine act, 1920, and for other purposes, was announced as next in order.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Being the unfinished business, the bill will be passed over.

The bill (S. 3247) to transfer to the classified service agents and inspectors in the field service, including general prohibition agents and field supervisors appointed and employed pursuant to the national prohibition act, and for other purposes, was announced as next in order.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Let that go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over.

The bill (S. 4050) to provide for the purchase and sale of farm products was announced as next in order.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Let that go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over.

The bill (S. 4012) to control the possession, sale, and use of pistols and revolvers in the District of Columbia, to provide penalties, and for other purposes, was announced as next in order.

Mr. PITTMAN. Let that go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over.

The bill (S. 3252) to amend paragraph 8 of the act entitled "An act relating to the Metropolitan police of the District of Columbia," approved February 28, 1901, as amended, was announced as next in order.

Mr. SMOOT. The employees of the District of Columbia will be taken care of under the reclassification bill, and there is no reason for our passing this bill. I ask that it go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over.

The bill (S. 799) to prevent deceit and unfair prices that result from the unrevealed presence of substitutes for virgin wool in woven fabrics purporting to contain wool and in garments or articles of apparel made therefrom, manufactured in any Territory of the United States or the District of Columbia or transported or intended to be transported in interstate or foreign commerce, and providing penalties for the violation of the provisions of this act, and for other purposes, was announced as next in order.

Mr. LODGE. Let that go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over.

The bill (H. R. 2049) for the relief of the Delaware River Lightering Co. was announced as next in order.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I ask that that go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over.

The bill (H. R. 4619) for the relief of the Link-Belt Co., of Philadelphia, Pa., was announced as next in order.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Let that go over.

Mr. SWANSON. I hope the Senator from Mississippi will not object to the four bills, beginning with Order of Business 950, because if he is going to object to this kind of bill, he might as well object to everything. These four bills passed the House and were reported unanimously. They are bills covering cases of collision with Government boats, and they simply provide that the cases shall go to the Court of Claims for adjudication.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Did the Senator say they have been adjudicated?

Mr. SWANSON. They have not been adjudicated. These are bills to refer the claims to the Court of Claims for adjudication. I suppose that 35 or 40 similar bills have been passed before. They are simply to allow the claims to be taken to the Court of Claims for adjudication.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I withdraw the objection.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will report Order of Business 950.

DELAWARE RIVER LIGHTERING CO.

The bill (H. R. 2049) for the relief of the Delaware River Lightering Co. was considered as in Committee of the Whole and was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized and directed to pay, out of the Treasury of the United States, from funds not otherwise appropriated, $1,960, under such conditions as the Secretary of the Navy may direct, to the Delaware River Lightering Co., of the city of Philadelphia, State of Pennsylvania, in full payment for damages done when the Navy tug Carl R. Gray collided with and damaged the barge Ruth, owned and operated by the said Delaware River Lightering Co.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

LINK-BELT CO., OF PHILADELPHIA, PA.

The bill (H. R. 4619) for the relief of the Link-Belt Co., of Philadelphia, Pa., was considered as in Committee of the Whole and was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the claim of the Link-Belt Co., of Philadelphia, Pa., a corporation organized under the laws of the State of Pennsylvania, for damages alleged to have been sustained by a certain coal chute under construction by said Link-Belt Co. for the Norfolk & Western Railroad on its coal pier No. 3 at Lamberts Point, in the city of Norfolk, Va., by reason of collision therewith by the U. S. S. Buitenzorg on the 1st day of March, 1919, may be submitted to the United States District Court for the Eastern District of Virginia at Norfolk, under and in compliance with the rules of said court, sitting as a court of admiralty; and that the said court shall have jurisdiction to hear and determine the whole controversy and to enter a judgment or decree for the amount of the legal damages sustained by reason of said collision, if any shall be found to be due, either for or against the United States, upon the same principle and measure of liability, with costs, as in like cases in admiralty between private parties, with the same rights of appeal: Provided, That such notice of the suit shall be given to the Attorney General of the United States as may be provided by order of the said court, and it shall be the duty of the Attorney General to cause the United States attorney in such district to appear and defend for the United States: Provided further, That said suit shall be brought and commenced within four months of the date of the passage of this act.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

TH. BROVIG.

The bill (H. R. 4620) for the relief of Th. Brovig was considered as in Committee of the Whole and was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the claim of Th. Brovig, owner of the Norwegian bark Bennestvet, against the United States for damages alleged to have been caused by collision between the said vessel and the U. S. barge F. W. Babcock in Hampton Roads on the 29th day of June, 1919, may be sued for by the said Th. Brovig in the District Court of the United States for the Eastern District of Virginia, sitting as a court of admiralty and acting under the rules governing such court, and said court shall have jurisdiction to hear and determine such suit and to enter a judgment or decree for the amount of such damages and costs, if any, as shall be found to be due against the United States in favor of Th. Brovig or against Th. Brovig in favor of the United States upon the same principles and measures of liability as in like cases in admiralty between private parties and with the same rights of appeal: Provided, That such notice of the suit shall be given to the Attorney General of the United States as may be provided by order of the said court, and it shall be the duty of the Attorney General to cause the United States attorney in such district to appear and defend for the United States: Provided further, That said suit shall be brought and commenced within four months of the date of the passage of this act.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

OWNERS OF ITALIAN STEAMER "TITANIA."

The bill (H. R. 4622) for the relief of the Lloyd Mediterraneo Societa Italiana di Navigazione, owners of the Italian steamer Titania, was considered as in Committee of the Whole and was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the claim of the Lloyd Mediterraneo Societa Italiana di Navigazione, owners of the Italian steamer Titania, arising out of a collision between said steamer and the United States S. C. 421, which occurred at the south side of pier No. 2 of the Norfolk & Western Railway Co., Lamberts Point, Va., on July 18, 1919, for and on account of the losses alleged to have been suffered by the owners of said steamer by reasons of damages to said steamer, may be submitted to the United States Court for the Eastern District of Virginia, under and in compliance with the rules of said court sitting as a court of admiralty; and that the said court shall have jurisdiction to hear and determine the whole controversy and to enter judgment or decree for the amount of the legal damages sustained by reason of said collision, if any shall be found to be due, either for or against the United States, upon the same principle and measure of liability, with costs, as in like cases of admiralty between private parties, with the same rights of appeal: Provided, That such notice of the suit shall be given to the Attorney General of the United States as may be provided by order of the said court, and it shall be the duty of the Attorney General to cause the United States attorney in such district to appear and defend for the United States: Provided further, That said suit shall be brought and commenced within four months of the date of the passage of this act.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

EPHRAIM LEDERER.

The bill (H. R. 5249) for the relief of Ephraim Lederer, collector of internal revenue for the first district of Pennsylvania, was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. Reserving the right to object, I ask that the bill be read.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to credit the account of Ephraim Lederer, collector of internal revenue for the first district of Pennsylvania, by reason of shortage of 100 sheets of class C cigar stamps, each set consisting of 20 stamps, each of said stamps being worth 45 cents, a total of $900. Also for the loss of a book of wholesale liquor dealers' special-tax stamps, consisting of 10 stamps, each of the value of $100, and totaling $1,000.

Mr. KING. I would like to have some explanation of the bill. If not, I will ask for the reading of the report. Let the report be read.

The report, No. 979, submitted by Mr. CAPPER January 4, 1923, was read, as follows:

The Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 5249) for the relief of Ephraim Lederer, collector of internal revenue for the first district of Pennsylvania, having considered the same, report favorably thereon with the recommendation that the bill do pass without amendment.

The facts in the case are fully set forth in House Report No. 246, Sixty-seventh Congress, first session, which is appended hereto and made a part of this report.

House Report No. 246, Sixty-seventh Congress, first session.

The Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 5249) for the relief of Ephraim Lederer, collector of internal revenue for the first district of Pennsylvania, having considered the same, report thereon with a recommendation that it do pass.

This is a bill to credit to the account of the collector of internal revenue, Philadelphia, Pa., for losses of stamps occurring in his office.

The facts in the case are fully stated in the letter of the Secretary of the Treasury, under date of June 21, 1921, and which is made a part of this report.

As it had been customary for Congress to grant relief for losses occurring in the various offices of the Treasury Department, and as this bill has the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury, favorable consideration of the measure is recommended.

TREASURY DEPARTMENT,
Washington, June 21, 1921.

Hon. GEO. W. EDMONDS,
Chairman Committee on Claims, House of Representatives.

MY DEAR MR. EDMONDS: Referring further to your letter of the 16th ultimo, inclosing a copy of bill (H. R. 5249) for the relief of Ephraim Lederer for 100 sheets of class C cigar stamps and one book of wholesale liquor dealers' special-tax stamps, with a money value totaling $1,900, found to be short in his revenue account as collector of internal revenue for the first district of Pennsylvania, I wish to state that an investigation conducted by the Bureau of Internal Revenue established the following facts:

That, on or about November 7, 1919, a package containing class C cigar stamps was received in the office of the collector for the first district of Pennsylvania, receipted for, and charged in his accounts according to the quantity of stamps designated in the invoice, without verifying the contents of the package; that the stamps were shipped from the Internal Revenue Bureau in a sealed package as received from the Bureau of Engraving and Printing; that it is customary in the Bureau of Engraving and Printing for expert counters to verify by actual count the number of stamps to be placed in sealed packages for delivery to the Commissioner of Internal Revenue; that the stamp account and stock of stamps in the office of Collector Lederer were in balance at the close of business November 6, 1919; that on or about November 7, 1919, there was found to be short one layer of 100 sheets of class C stamps, and each cigar manufacturer who had purchased this class of stamps was visited and his stamps on hand verified, but no excess was discovered; that an assistant supervisor of collectors' offices visited each of the stamp deputies outside of the Philadelphia office, checked up the office and verified the stamps on hand, but no discrepancies in the stamp deputies' accounts were found; that the sales of cigar stamps were checked against Forms 72 (cigar manufacturers' returns) for the month of November, 1919, and were found to be in agreement; that the investigation made by the Bureau of Internal Revenue failed to determine how the shortage occurred or to fix the responsibility therefor, and in the absence of conclusive evidence, Collector Lederer is in no way to blame for the shortage in his accounts of 2,000 stamps with a money value of $900.

An investigation also conducted by the Bureau of Internal Revenue shows that one package of wholesale liquor dealers' special-tax stamps, consisting of 10 stamps, each valued at $100, a total of $1,000, was lost in the process of moving from the Federal Building to the Vandam Building, Philadelphia, Pa., on July 30, 1920; that the stamps cou-tained in this book did not bear the stamp of the first district of Pennsylvania, nor did they bear the facsimile signature of the collector; that without the signature of the collector these special-tax stamps would be of no value to anyone, and that the loss was unavoidable.

Mr. KING. I shall not object to the consideration of this bill, but I shall vote against it and ask for a vote. It seems to me there was negligence upon the part either of the collector or some other person. The committee does not attempt to localize the negligence, nor does the Secretary of the Treasury, and if we are to make appropriations of this kind, without fastening the responsibility, of course it will make for negligence and will result in an increase in the number of claims for which the Government will be called upon to appropriate. I ask for a vote.

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. President, I have no desire to stop the consideration of bills on the calendar. I am simply trying to have justice done to a poor unfortunate American soldier who had his back broken by a Government airplane, who has no means of support, and who is entitled to Government aid. I am not going to object to the consideration of other measures, because there has been an agreement made by which the Senator from Colorado [Mr. NICHOLSON] can get his bill through. He is now preparing an amendment, and I understand there will be no objection to it.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

IKE T. BOYLES.

The bill (H. R. 5648) for the relief of Ike T. Boyles was considered as in Committee of the Whole and was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Postmaster General be, and is hereby, authorized and directed to credit the accounts of Ike T. Boyles, postmaster at Stiles, Tex., in the sum of $343.57, due to the United States on account of postal funds, money-order funds, and postage stamps on account of losses resulting from fire January 24, 1916.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

AMENDMENT TO BANKRUPTCY LAW.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Mr. President, I have been detained in the Committee on the Judiciary. I inquire what disposition was made of Order of Business 589, Senate bill 2921, to amend an act entitled "An act to establish a uniform system of bankruptcy throughout the United States," approved July 1, 1898, and acts amendatory thereof and supplementary thereto.

The VICE PRESIDENT. It went over under objection.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. I am very desirous that that bill shall have consideration. I think it is a good bill.

There being no objection, the Senate as in Committee of the Whole proceeded to consider the bill.

The bill had been reported from the Committee on the Judiciary with an amendment to strike out all after the enacting clause and to insert:

That section 3 (a), section 14 (b), section 24 (b), section 25 (a), section 29 (a), (b), and (d), section 57 (n), section 60 (a), section 62, section 64 (a), and section 72 of an act entitled "An act to establish a uniform system of bankruptcy throughout the United States," approved July 1, 1898, and acts amendatory thereof and supplementary thereto be, and the same are hereby, amended so as to read as follows:

"SEC. 3. (a) Acts of bankruptcy by a person shall consist of his having (1) conveyed, transferred, concealed, or removed, or permitted to be concealed or removed, any part of his property with intent to hinder, delay, or defraud his creditors, or any of them; or (2) transferred, while insolvent, any portion of his property to one or more of his creditors with intent to prefer such creditors over his other creditors; or (3) suffered or permitted, while insolvent, any creditor to obtain a preference through legal proceedings, and not having at least five days before a sale or final disposition of any property affected by such preference vacated or discharged such preference; or (4) suffered or permitted, while insolvent, any creditor to obtain through legal proceedings any levy, attachment, judgment, or other lien, and not having vacated or discharged the same at least five days before the expiration of four months from the date of obtaining such levy, attachment, judgment, or other lien; or (5) made a general assignment for the benefit of his creditors; or, being insolvent, applied for a receiver or trustee for his property, or because of insolvency a receiver or trustee has been put in charge of his property under the laws of a State, of a Territory, or of the United States; or (6) admitted in writing his inability to pay his debts and his willingness to be adjudged a bankrupt on that ground.

"SEC. 14. (b) The judge shall hear the application for a discharge, and such proofs and pleas as may be made in opposition thereto by the trustee or other parties in interest, at such time as will give the trustee or parties in interest a reasonable opportunity to be fully heard, and investigate the merits of the application and discharge the applicant unless he has (1) committed an offense punishable by imprisonment as herein provided; or (2) with intent to conceal his financial condition, destroyed, concealed, or failed to keep books of account or records from which such condition might be ascertained; or (3) obtained money or property on credit upon a materially false statement in writing made by him to any person, or his representative, for the purpose of obtaining credit from such person; or (4) at any time subsequent to the first day of the 12 months immediately preceding the filing of the petition transferred, removed, destroyed, or concealed, or permitted to be removed, destroyed, or concealed, any of his property, with intent to hinder, delay, or defraud his creditors; or (5) in voluntary proceedings been granted a discharge in bankruptcy within six years; or (6) in the course of the proceedings in bankruptcy refused to obey any lawful order of, or to answer any material question approved by the court: Provided, That a trustee shall not interpose objections to a bankrupt's discharge until he shall be authorized so to do at a meeting of creditors called for that purpose.

"SEC. 24. (b) The several circuit courts of appeal shall have jurisdiction in equity, either interlocutory or final, to superintend and revise in matter of law the proceedings of the several inferior courts of bankruptcy within their jurisdiction. Such power shall be exercised on due notice and petition by any party aggrieved, and such petition shall be filed within 30 days after the judgment or order or other matter complained of has been rendered or entered.

"SEC. 25. (a) Appeals, as in equity cases, may be taken in bankruptcy proceedings from the courts of bankruptcy to the circuit courts of appeal of the United States, and to the supreme courts of the Territories in the following cases, to wit: (1) From a judgment adjudging or refusing to adjudge the defendant a bankrupt; (2) from a judgment granting or denying a discharge; and (3) from a judgment allowing or rejecting a debt or claim of $500 or over. Such appeal shall be taken within 30 days after the judgment appealed from has been rendered, and may be heard and determined by the appellate court in term or vacation, as the case may be.

"SEC. 29. (a) A person shall be punished by imprisonment for a period not to exceed five years upon conviction of the offense of having knowingly and fraudulently appropriated to his own use, embezzled, spent, or unlawfully transferred any property or secreted or destroyed any document belonging to a bankrupt estate which came into his charge as trustee, receiver, custodian, or other officer of the court.

"(b) A person shall be punished by imprisonment for a period not to exceed two years upon conviction of the offense of having knowingly and fraudulently (1) concealed any property belonging to the estate of a bankrupt; or (2) made a false oath or account in, or in relation to, any proceeding in bankruptcy; (3) presented under oath any false claim for proof against the estate of a bankrupt, or used any such claim in composition personally or by agent, proxy, or attorney, or as agent, proxy, or attorney; or (4) received any material amount of property from a bankrupt after the filing of the petition, with intent to defeat this act; or (5) extorted or attempted to extort any money or property from any person as a consideration for acting or forbearing to act in bankruptcy proceedings.

"(d) A person shall not be prosecuted for any offense arising under this act, unless the indictment is found or the information is filed in court within three years after the commission of the offense, except where he has been absent from the United States or any place subject to their jurisdiction, in which case the time during which such person has been so absent from the jurisdiction shall not be a part of the period of limitation prescribed herein.

"(b) The Attorney General shall have the power, through inspectors or agents, to inspect and audit all records in bankruptcy.

"SEC. 57. (n) Claims shall not be proved against a bankrupt estate subsequent to six months after the adjudication; or if they are liquidated by litigation and the final judgment therein is rendered within 30 days before or after the expiration of such time, then within 60 days after the rendition of such judgment: Provided, That the right of infants and insane persons without guardians, without notice of the proceedings, may continue six months longer.

"SEC. 60. (a) A person shall be deemed to have given a preference if, being insolvent, he has, within four months before the filing of the petition, or after the filing of the petition and before the adjudication, procured or suffered a judgment to be entered against himself in favor of any person, or made a transfer of any of his property, and the effect of the enforcement of such judgment or transfer will be to enable any of his creditors to obtain a greater percentage of his debt than any other of such creditors of the same class. Where the preference consists in a transfer, such period of four months shall not expire until four months after the date of the recording or registering of the transfer, if by law such recording or registering is required or permitted.

"SEC. 62. (a) The actual and necessary expenses incurred by officers in the administration of estates shall, except where other provisions are made for their payment, be reported in detail, under oath, and examined and approved or disapproved by the court. If approved, they shall be paid or allowed out of the estates in which they were incurred. Such expenses shall be only the expenses actually incurred, and shall not be commuted at fixed rates.

"(b) All clerk hire, office rent, and other overhead expenses of the referee's office shall be paid only from the referee's compensation prescribed in section 40 of the bankruptcy law as amended, and shall not in any other way become a charge upon the respective estates.

"SEC. 64. (a) The court shall order the trustee to pay all taxes legally due and owing by the bankrupt to the United States, State, county, district, or municipality in advance of the payment of dividends to creditors, and upon filing the receipts of the proper public officers for such payment he shall be credited with the amount thereof, and in case any question arises as to the amount or legality of any such tax the same shall be heard and determined by the court: Provided, That such payment shall not be made out of the assets of the estate on account of any taxes assessed or levied upon property which does not become an asset of the bankrupt estate for distribution among general creditors, which taxes shall be and constitute a lien upon such property.

"SEC. 72. Neither the referee, receiver, marshal, nor trustee shall in any form or guise receive, nor shall the court allow him, any other or further compensation for his services than that expressly authorized and prescribed in this act. Any person who shall willfully violate the provisions of this section shall, upon conviction thereof, be fined not more than $2,000 or be imprisoned for not more than three years, or both, in the discretion of the court."

SEC. 2. That section 48, as amended, of said act be, and the same is hereby, further amended by adding a new paragraph to read as follows:

"(f) In the event of the appointment of joint or successive receivers, the court shall apportion the fees and commissions between or among them according to the services actually rendered, so that there shall not be paid to receivers from any estate a greater amount than one receiver would be entitled to; and when the same person shall be appointed successively receiver and trustee for an estate he shall not be allowed greater compensation than he would be entitled to if he held but one of such offices."

SEC. 3. That nothing herein shall have the effect to release or extinguish any penalty, forfeiture, or liability incurred under any act or acts of which this act is amendatory.

SEC. 4. That all parts of acts inconsistent herewith be, and the same are hereby, repealed.

SEC. 5. That this act shall take effect and be in force on and after the expiration of three months from the date of its passage and approval.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. I will state that the bill proposes various amendments of the bankruptcy law, most of which were proposed by the National Credit Men's Association, and in my judgment they should be made. They are simple in character. There was considerable contention concerning one amendment, in relation to the fees of referees. It was suggested to the committee by the Department of Justice, but different views have prevailed with respect to it, and I have been induced to ask the Senate to nonconcur in that part of the amendment. I know of no opposition whatever to the amendment proposed other than the one to which I have referred.

Mr. LODGE. I would like to ask the Senator, if he will allow me, if that is the part of the amendment about which I have spoken to him?

Mr. WALSH of Montana. It is.

Mr. LODGE. What is the final arrangement made in regard to it?

Mr. WALSH of Montana. The arrangement is that I shall ask the Senate to reject the part of the amendment concerning which the Senator and myself had some correspondence, it having been objected to by some of the Senator's constituents.

Mr. LODGE. Where is the provision in the bill?

Mr. WALSH of Montana. The part of the amendment to which the Senator refers is subdivision (b) of section 62, referred to at page 5 of the report.

Mr. CURTIS. It is in reference to the fees of referees?

Mr. WALSH of Montana. It is.

Mr. CURTIS. The Senator from Washington [Mr. JONES], who had objected before, said if the Senator's amendment striking out that provision were agreed to he would have no objection to the consideration of the bill.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. I propose to ask that that be rejected.

Mr. LODGE. All I want to understand is just how it leaves the law.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. It leaves the law exactly as it is now; that is, if the Senate does not concur in this part of the amendment, no change will be made in the law.

Mr. LODGE. Then that will have to be stricken out?

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Yes. The amendment is found on page 12 of the printed bill, at the bottom of the page. I ask that the report of the committee be amended by striking out subdivision (b) of section 62, found on page 12 of the bill.

Mr. LODGE. The amendment is to strike out subdivision (b) of section 62?

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Subdivision (b) of section 62.

Mr. LODGE. And that leaves the law as it is?

Mr. WALSH of Montana. It does.

If the Senator from Massachusetts will give me his attention for a moment, the answer I gave was a little too comprehensive. If the Senator will refer to page 5 of the report he will find that there is a slight addition to be made, but no exception was taken to that. This language is proposed to be added to the present law:

Such expenses shall be only the expenses actually incurred, and shall not be commuted to fixed rates.

To that extent the present law would be amended.

Mr. LODGE. That leaves it, I understand, as it was to be left.

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. Mr. President, I thought the understanding of the Senator was that paragraph (a) of section 62 would also be stricken out.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. No; there never was any controversy about that, I think.

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. I had understood that the last two lines of paragraph (a) were objected to because a very considerable amount of those expenses can not be apportioned to particular cases, such as stenographer's services and matters of that nature.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. I understand, but that is all covered by subdivision (b).

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. No; I think it is covered by lines 19 and 20 of paragraph (a).

Mr. WALSH of Montana. If the Senator from Pennsylvania has any objection whatever to urge to that portion of it, I shall ask that the entire section be stricken out, but I am perfectly certain he is in error about it.

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. I have had it under consideration particularly with reference to those two lines and find a great deal of objection.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. If the Senator objects, I shall ask that the entire section be stricken out.

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. I would like to have section 62 go out.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. I move that amendment to the amendment.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment to the amendment will be stated.

The READING CLERK. On page 12, strike out lines 13 to 25, inclusive, being all of section 62, subdivisions (a) and (b).

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. LODGE. That leaves the law exactly as it is.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. With reference to that subject.

Mr. LODGE. Certainly.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

FISHING SMACK "MARY S. DOLBOW."

The bill (H. R. 6177) for the relief of the owner of the fishing smack Mary S. Dolbow was considered as in Committee of the Whole, and was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the claim of the owner of the fishing smack Mary S. Dolbow for damages alleged to have been caused by collision between said fishing smack and the U. S. ship N–1, on October 3, 1920, at 12 o'clock and 30 minutes a. m., in the Delaware River channel, off Tinicum Island, whereby she became a total loss, may be sued for by the owner of the said fishing smack Mary S. Dolbow in the district court of the United States for the district of New Jersey, sitting as a court of admiralty, and acting under the rules governing such court, and said court shall have jurisdiction to hear and determine such suit and to enter a judgment or decree for the amount of such damages and costs, if any, as shall be found to be due against the United States in favor of the owner of the said fishing smack Mary S. Dolbow, or against the owner of said fishing smack Mary S. Dolbow in favor of the United States, upon the same principles and measures of liability as in like cases in admiralty between private parties, and with the same rights of appeal: Provided, That such notice of the suit shall be given to the Attorney General of the United States as may be provided by order of the said court, and it shall be the duty of the Attorney General to cause the United States attorney in such district to appear and defend for the United States: Provided further, That said suit shall be brought and commenced within four months of the date of the passage of this act.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

OWNERS OF AMERICAN STEAMSHIP "VINDAL."

The bill (H. R. 8214) to compensate the owners of the American steamship Vindal for damages and expenses in repairing the said steamship, and to make an appropriation therefor, was considered as in Committee of the Whole and was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to Vindal Co. (Inc.), a New York corporation, owner of the American steamship Vindal, the sum of $3,295 in full compensation for damages and expenses due to a collision between the United States barges Washington and General Knox and the said steamship Vindal while the said steamship was lying at anchor in the harbor of New York, on Gowanus Flats, off Fifty-second Street, Brooklyn, on the 30th day of October, 1917, at about the hour of 6 o'clock antemeridian.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

PENNSYLVANIA RAILROAD CO.

The bill (H. R. 9887) for the relief of the Pennsylvania Railroad Co. was considered as in Committee of the Whole, and was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to the Pennsylvania Railroad Co., the sum of $285.86, to compensate the said company for damages caused by collision of the Coast Guard cutter Guthrie with the Pennsylvania Railroad car float No. 7, at Philadelphia, Pa., November 26, 1920.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

BILLS PASSED OVER.

The bill (H. R. 10287) for the relief of John Calvin Starr was announced as next in order.

Mr. DIAL. Let the bill go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over.

The bill (H. R. 8086) to prohibit the shipment of filled milk in interstate or foreign commerce was announced as next in order.

Mr. DIAL. Let the bill go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over.

AMENDMENT OF CIVIL SERVICE ACT.

The bill (S. 4167) to amend an act entitled "An act for the retirement of employees in the classified civil service, and for other purposes," approved May 22, 1920, in order to extend the benefits of said act to certain employees in the Panama Canal Zone, was announced as next in order.

Mr. SMOOT. Let the bill go over.

Mr. STERLING. Will not the Senator withhold his objection for a moment?

Mr. SMOOT. Very well.

Mr. STERLING. When the bill was reached on a former call of the calendar, objection was made to the last proviso in the bill, it being claimed that the proviso was ambiguous and was not understood. I have here a communication from the Secretary of War in which he incloses a memorandum from the chief of the Washington office of the Panama Canal, which quite fully explains the reasons for the proviso on account of which objection was made to the consideration of the bill. I would like to read a portion of the memorandum, as follows:

The object of the above-quoted proviso is to make sure that these unclassified or excepted American employees do not become classified through the passage of the bill, which might require all future appointments to vacancies to be made through civil service examinations. The bulk of these unclassified employees are skilled workmen and artisans of a wide variety of trades, particularly shipbuilding and repairing trades, railroad operatives, etc. For a period of a little over a year, during the early days of the construction of the Panama Canal, they were all in the classified service and efforts were made to appoint them through civil service examinations. This proved impracticable and would be impracticable in the future for numerous reasons, among which are the following:

"It is necessary to recruit these men in the United States for duty in a tropical region about 2,000 miles away from their homeland. They must be the best skilled workmen in their trades obtainable, and this type can not be readily attracted through civil-service examination, as they are independent and accustomed to securing employment through more direct methods; the sudden and varying requirements of the canal service make it impracticable to wait on the routine of the civil-service examination; they must be selected with a view to their special fitness, physically and by training and experience, for the particular work to which they are to be assigned; it is not usually practicable to foresee the needs of the service sufficiently in advance to hold a civil-service examination," etc.

Other reasons are set forth why the proviso is in the bill. I hope that what I think is an act of justice will be done in extending the provisions of the retirement law to the employees who are American citizens in the Panama Canal Zone.

Mr. SMOOT. The proviso found on page 3 is one the purpose of which I do not fully understand. I understand what the Senator has just read; but I think if we are going to place such employees on the retirement list as other employees of the Government are placed, they ought at least to take the civil-service examination. They should not be placed in any better position than employees of the Government in the United States.

Mr. STERLING. I will say to the Senator that a great number of people working in the Panama Canal Zone are still subject to the civil service. There are specially trained or experienced men whom they want for the particular service, and they want them often in a hurry, according to conditions in the Panama Canal Zone.

Mr. SMOOT. But that is not what the proviso covers.

Mr. STERLING. That is what it is meant to cover.

Mr. SMOOT. The proviso applies to all employees on the Canal Zone. I have no objection to allowing the first part of the bill to pass, but the second proviso I think is an unwise provision. If the Senator will amend by striking out that provision I shall have no objection to the bill at all.

Mr. STERLING. Very well.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

Mr. SMOOT. I move to amend by striking out on page 2, beginning in line 9, the proviso down to and including the word "service" in line 14.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The READING CLERK. On page 2, after the numerals "1920," in line 9, strike out the remainder of the bill, so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That all employees of the Panama Canal and Panama Railroad Co. on the Isthmus of Panama who are citizens of the United States and whose tenure of employment is not intermittent or of uncertain duration shall be included within the provisions of the civil service retirement act approved May 22, 1920: Provided, That the deduction authorized by section 8 of such act from the pay of such employees shall commence on the first of the month succeeding the approval of this act and that the service of such employees between August 1, 1920, and the first of the month succeeding the approval of this act shall be counted for retirement purposes only if the employee shall deposit with the Secretary of the Treasury 2½ per cent of the salary received by him from the Panama Canal or Panama Railroad Co. during that period, plus interest computed as provided in section 11 of said act of May 22, 1920.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

STANDARD AMERICAN DREDGING CO.

The bill (H. R. 5475) for the relief of the Standard American Dredging Co. was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill had been reported from the Committee on Claims with an amendment, in line 7, to strike out "$3,020.72" and insert in lieu thereof "$4,500," so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, directed to pay to the Standard American Dredging Co., owner of the dredge Long Beach and pipe line thereto attached, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $4,500, or so much thereof as may be necessary to fully reimburse said owner of said dredge and pipe line for damages suffered by its pipe line as a result of a collision with the United States dredge Chinook at Astoria, Oreg., May 1, 1916.

Mr. SMOOT. When the bill was up for consideration on a previous occasion I objected to it. The War Department, in submitting a report to the committee, on page 8 of the report, suggested the following provision:

That the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to the Standard American Dredging Co., Seattle, Wash., the sum of $3,020.72 to reimburse that company for damage done to its property May 1, 1916, by the United States dredge Chinook (submitted), $3,020.72.

That was the recommendation made by the War Department. The Committee on Claims raised that amount to $4,500, and I would like to have some one explain the reason for the increase.

Mr. SHEPPARD. Mr. President, I desire to say to the Senator that I am familiar with the situation. The Treasury Department allowed an amount covering the actual cost of repairs which the company was compelled to make as a result of the collision. The company submitted a claim for $3,000 additional for rental value, or loss of earnings, while the dredge was being repaired. The Senate committee, after considering the matter, decided to allow the company $1,500 to cover the item of loss of earnings.

Mr. SMOOT. The policy has been to pay the damages in such cases, and there has been no objection to bills of that kind, but if we are going to pay for loss of time in the operation of boats, all that have been paid in the past have not been paid sufficiently, and there is no telling what charges may be made in the future for the loss of time of a boat laid up during the time of its repair. I think it is fair and just to adhere to the practice we have always followed in paying the amount of damages to the boat.

Mr. SHEPPARD. Does the Senator object to the item allowing payment for the damages?

Mr. SMOOT. I shall not object to the payment of $3,020.72. I have no objection to the bill if it carries that amount, but I do object to the payment of $4,500.

Mr. SHEPPARD. The Senator objects to the payment for loss of earnings while the boat was being repaired?

Mr. SMOOT. I do.

Mr. SHEPPARD. Then we can just disagree to the Senate committee amendment.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the committee.

The amendment was rejected.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

BILL PASSED OVER.

The bill (S. 3226) for the relief of William J. Ewing was announced as next in order.

Mr. DIAL. Let that bill go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will go over.

ROBERT J. KIRK.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (S. 3849) for the relief of Robert J. Kirk. It proposes to pay to Robert J. Kirk, of Florence, S. C., $332.50 for service as United States commissioner for the eastern district of South Carolina for the period of July 1 to November 5, 1919.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

CHARLES D. SHAY.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (S. 2002) for the relief of Charles D. Shay, which had been reported from the Committee on Claims with an amendment to strike out all after the enacting clause and to insert:

That the Employees' Compensation Commission shall be, and it is hereby, authorized to extend to Charles D. Shay, who received injuries April 7, 1910, without fault or negligence on his part, while in the performance of his duties as locomotive engineer on the Panama Railroad, the provisions of an act entitled "An act to provide compensation for employees of the United States suffering injuries while in the performance of their duties, and for other purposes," approved September 7, 1916, compensation hereunder to commence from and after the passage of this act.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the committee amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

BILLS PASSED OVER.

The bill (S. 1678) for the relief of Edith B. Macon was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. I ask that the bill go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will go over.

The bill (S. 1528) for the relief of Sophie K. Stephens was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. I ask that the bill go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will go over.

Mr. CALDER. Mr. President, will the Senator from Utah permit an explanation of the bill?

Mr. KING. I have read the report on the bill. In my opinion there is no obligation whatever upon the part of the Government to pay the claim involved, and I think an explanation of the bill will simply consume time without changing the result.

The bill (S. 129) to provide for election contests in the Senate of the United States was announced as next in order.

Mr. SPENCER. Let that bill go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will go over.

The bill (H. R. 7761) to amend the Revised Statutes of the United States relative to proceedings in contested-election cases was announced as next in order.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I ask that that bill go over.

Mr. SPENCER. I should like to say that that bill applies only to the House of Representatives. It provides for four changes in the existing law, all of which are merely for facilitating House election contests. There is a unanimous report of the committee in favor of it, and I think there can be no objection to it. It is a House bill and does not apply to the Senate, but applies entirely to the House of Representatives.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I have objected to the bill.

The VICE PRESIDENT. There is objection and the bill will go over.

The bill (S. 4283) to authorize the Commissioners of the District of Columbia to require operators of motor vehicles in the District of Columbia to secure a permit, and for other purposes, was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, that bill is very important and contains some very admirable provisions, but a number of amendments are to be tendered to it. It will take considerable time to consider the bill and I think we shall not be able to dispose of it this morning. I therefore ask that it be passed over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over.

NIGHT WORK IN THE POSTAL SERVICE.

The bill (S. 3773) to reduce night work in the Postal Service was announced as next in order.

Mr. DIAL. I ask that the bill go over.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Mr. President, if the Senator from South Carolina will withhold his objection for a moment, I desire to say that I regretfully admit that this bill may be subject to discussion, which would make it impracticable to consider it during the morning hour. I am sorry that that is so, for I believe it is a bill in the interest not only of the employees of the Postal Department who have to work at night but in the interest of economy. I believe that in the end the passage of the bill would reduce night work very materially. I do not imagine how anyone can believe that night work should be compensated for exactly on the same basis as is day work. It is necessary in some instances, I admit, that night work should be performed, but there should be a reasonable compensation either in the form of additional pay or a reduction of the hours of service.

The joint commission on postal affairs has recommended what this bill attempts to do, namely, to reduce the hours of service for a night's work, or for work between 6 o'clock at night and 6 o'clock in the morning.

I admit, as I said in the beginning, that this bill embraces a subject about which there may be some controversy, and, therefore, it can not be considered at this time. I endeavored to bring it up earlier in the session in order that it might be given time for consideration, and had hoped, but vainly, apparently, that we might consider it by unanimous consent.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, if the Senator will yield to me for a moment, I desire to say that I think this is a bill that most certainly ought to be passed. I hope something will be done in regard to its subject matter. There ought to be a reduction in night work in the Postal Service. I have looked into this matter more or less, and I am satisfied the passage of this bill would have just the effect the Senator from Michigan has described; that is, that it would reduce the expenses in the end, and would reduce the total amount of night work now required of postal employees. I should think the bill might be passed by unanimous consent. It is not a complicated measure.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from South Carolina insist upon his objection?

Mr. DIAL. Let the bill go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over.

JOHN H. M'ATEE.

The bill (S. 3942) for the relief of John H. McAtee, was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. I ask that that bill go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over.

Mr. HARRELD subsequently said: Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to revert to Order of Business 1000, being the bill (S. 3942) for the relief of John H. McAtee.

This is one of those cases where a soldier is seeking to get relief from a charge of desertion. The War Department records show that this man was a prisoner of war at the end of the war, and that was the reason why he was not properly mustered out. The War Department recommends that he be given a discharge, saying that his services were absolutely satisfactory. The record is perfectly clear that he was a prisoner of war, but, inadvertently, not having been mustered out with his command, he was marked as a deserter. I ask the Senator from South Carolina to withdraw his objection to that bill.

Mr. DIAL. Did I understand the Senator to say that the soldier in this case was a prisoner of war?

Mr. HARRELD. Yes.

Mr. DIAL. And that was the reason why he was not mustered out with his command and has been borne on the records as a deserter?

Mr. HARRELD. The War Department reports that he was a prisoner of war and that was the cause of his failure properly to be mustered out.

Mr. DIAL. Under that statement I withdraw the objection. I have not had time to consider the report carefully.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to reverting to Order of Business 1000?

There being no objection the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (S. 3942) for the relief of John H. McAtee, which was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That in the administration of the pension laws and laws conferring rights and privileges upon honorably discharged soldiers, their widows and dependent relatives, John H. McAtee, late of Company K, Sixth Regiment Missouri State Militia Volunteer Cavalry, shall be held and considered to have been honorably discharged from the military service of the United States as a member of said organization on the 25th day of April, A. D. 1864: Provided, That no back pay, pension, bounty, or other emolument shall accrue prior to the passage of this act.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

BILLS PASSED OVER.

The bill (S. 4315) to amend section 2 of the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation act, approved July 31, 1894, was announced as next in order.

Mr. SMOOT. I ask that that bill go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over.

The bill (S. 3078) to provide for the free transmission through the mails of certain publications for the blind was announced as next in order.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. I ask that that bill go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over.

The bill (S. 3544) to enlarge the powers and duties of the Department of Justice in relation to the repression of prostitution for the protection of the armed forces was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. I ask that that bill go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over.

FRANKLIN GUM.

The bill (S. 2598) for the relief of Franklin Gum was announced as next in order.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill has heretofore been read.

Mr. DIAL. I ask that the bill go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, I have examined that bill, and find that it is a case of one who served a full term of enlistment in the Navy and practically served out a term of enlistment in the Army following his service in the Navy. Just at the close of the Civil War he went home very seriously sick, and his mind was impaired. He failed to return to the Army because the war ended, as was the case in a large number of instances. I believe that under those circumstances the bill ought to be passed, and I ask the Senator from South Carolina if he is not willing to let the bill be considered?

Mr. DIAL. Is the bill in the usual form?

Mr. ROBINSON. It is in the usual form.

Mr. DIAL. I understand from the report that he was a deserter.

Mr. ROBINSON. He did not, however, in fact desert. I am convinced from the evidence that he did what a great many other soldiers in both the Confederate and Union Armies did. Military discipline at that time was not so rigid as it now is, and it was not comprehended and appreciated by the soldiers as it now is. As I have said, the man served out a full term of enlistment in the Navy and then served in the Army practically to the end of the war, when he went home and was in a very serious condition. For that reason he was unable to return before the war ended. The charge of desertion was entered against him, but, as a matter of fact, he was not a deserter within the spirit of the law. The War Department could not correct his record for the reason that the record is substantially right.

Mr. DIAL. How long has the bill been pending?

Mr. ROBINSON. I do not know how long the bill has been pending.

Mr. DIAL. Mr. President, I do not look upon these bills to grant pensions to men who served in the Civil War at this late date with any favor. I think that those people have had ample opportunity to establish their status, and the time has now come, in my opinion, when we should undertake to prevent a piling up of names on the pension list. However, I do not wish to be considered unreasonable, and reluctantly I will withdraw the objection to the consideration of the bill. From my hasty reading of the report I understood that the man was a deserter, and it appeared to me that the record, therefore, should be scrutinized very carefully.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair understands the Senator from South Carolina has withdrawn his objection.

Mr. DIAL. I withdraw the objection.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill, which was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That in the administration of any laws conferring rights, privileges, or benefits upon honorably discharged soldiers, Franklin Gum, who was a private in Company A, Forty-eighth Regiment Wisconsin Volunteer Infantry, shall hereafter be held and considered to have been honorably discharged therefrom: Provided, That other than as above set forth no bounty, pay, pension, or other emolument shall accrue prior to or by reason of the passage of this act.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

HOWARD R. GURNEY.

The bill (S. 4333) for the relief of Howard R. Gurney was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill had been reported from the Committee on Claims with an amendment, on line 5, after the words "sum of," to strike out "$5,000" and insert "$4,391.44," so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $4,391.44 to Howard R. Gurney, of Springfield, Mass., as full compensation against the Government for injuries sustained by him when struck by a United States Navy truck in the city of Springfield, Mass., on October 26, 1920.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

E. J. REYNOLDS.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (S. 4345) for the relief of E. J. Reynolds.

The bill had been reported from the Committee on Claims with an amendment on line 4, after the word "pay," to insert "out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated," so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to E. J. Reynolds the sum of $471.60 for reimbursement for money collected as duty on a carload of print paper received at the port of Ashtabula, Ohio, May 26, 1920.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

NOLAN P. BENNER.

The bill (H. R. 3836) for the relief of Nolan P. Benner was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, reserving the right to object, I should be glad to hear an explanation of the bill.

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. Mr. President, this bill is intended to reimburse an officer of the Pennsylvania National Guard who was called into the Federal service for the time actually spent by him in the military service of the Government. He was discharged on the records of the War Department at Washington because he was under weight, but the notice of discharge was never communicated to him or to his commanding officer, and he remained in the Army rendering faithful service until he finaly received notice of his discharge six months later. This bill is to pay him for the time he actually spent in the service. There is no question that he did the work.

Mr. KING. Does the bill provide for his reimbursement at the same rate of pay he would have received if actually in the service?

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. At exactly the same rate.

Mr. KING. I have no objection to the bill.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill, which was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to Second Lieut. Nolan P. Benner, Quartermaster Corps, National Guard of Pennsylvania, the sum of $656.40 for services from August 1, 1917, to December 19, 1917, performed under instructions of commanding general Seventh Division, who under date of July 20, 1917, ordered said Second Lieut. Nolan P. Benner to report to quartermaster State Arsenal, Harrisburg, Pa., where he continued in service until notice of discharge, December 19, 1917. Amount of pay for aforementioned services was disallowed by the Auditor for the War Department because the records failed to show that he was held in service subsequent to July 31, 1917.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

BILLS PASSED OVER.

The bill (S. 1517) for the relief of Antti Merihelmi was next in order.

Mr. DIAL. I ask that the bill go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over.

The bill (H. R. 6134) for the relief of estate of Anne C. Shymer was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. I ask that that bill go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over.

The bill (H. R. 7864) providing for sundry matters affecting the Naval Establishment was announced as next in order.

Mr. KELLOGG. I ask that that bill go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over.

The bill (S. 4245) to provide for the necessary organization of the customs service for an adequate administration and enforcement of the tariff act of 1922, and all other customs revenue laws, was announced as next in order.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I ask that that bill go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over.

The bill (S. 4399) to fix standards for hampers, round stave baskets, and splint baskets for fruits and vegetables, and for other purposes, was announced as next in order.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I ask that that bill go over.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, I inquire if objection was made to the consideration of that bill?

The VICE PRESIDENT. Objection was made by the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. WILLIAMS].

The bill (S. 4132) to amend an act entitled "An act to provide further for the national security and defense, and, for the purpose of assisting in the prosecution of the war, to provide credits for industries and enterprises in the United States necessary or contributory to the prosecution of the war, and to supervise the issuance of securities, and for other purposes," approved April 5, 1918, and for other purposes, was announced as next in order.

Mr. SMOOT. That can not be considered under the five-minute rule, Mr. President.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over.

The bill (S. 4425) to authorize appropriations for the relief of certain officers of the Army of the United States was announced as next in order.

Mr. COUZENS. Let that go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over.

The bill (S. 4119) authorizing the erection in the city of Washington of a monument in memory of the faithful colored mammies of the South was announced as next in order.

Mr. COUZENS. Let that go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over.

The bill (S. 4305) granting an increase of pension to certain soldiers of the Mexican War and Civil War and their widows and minor children, widows of the War of 1812, Army nurses, and for other purposes, was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING and Mr. DIAL. Let that go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over.

ATLAS LUMBER CO. AND OTHERS.

The bill (H. R. 3499) for the relief of the Atlas Lumber Co., Babcock & Willcox, Johnson, Jackson & Corning Co., and the C. H. Klein Brick Co. was announced as next in order.

Mr. COUZENS. Let that go over.

Mr. KELLOGG. Mr. President, I wish the Senator who objected to the consideration of that bill would let me make a statement. Bills for the relief of these people have twice passed the Senate but were not reached in the House. This bill passed the House in January. It is to appropriate money which is in the Treasury which was taken from the contractor's price, and the Government has had the use of that money for 10 years, or nearly that time. This bill is simply to appropriate it to pay the claims for material for constructing the building, a Government building. The Government does not lose a cent. There is a unanimous report from the Committee on Claims, and the bill has passed the Senate at two different sessions.

Mr. SMOOT. I will say to the Senator that this is the same bill that was objected to because of the fact that it carried interest, but I see that is excluded now.

Mr. KELLOGG. The interest has been stricken out. It is simply the principal of $5,030; and if the Senate desires I will make a detailed statement of what occurred.

The Federal Government, in the construction of an Indian school in South Dakota, failed to take a bond as the law requires for the protection of the material men who furnished the material. The material men had no right even to inspect the bond and could not bring any suit upon the bond until six months after the Government should bring a suit. The Government deducted over $5,000 from the contractor's price, and has that money; and by reason of the failure of the Government to take a bond in proper form these material men lost the material they had furnished. As the Government loses nothing, and as the passage of this bill has been recommended several times by the Interior Department, I think it ought to pass for the principal sum without any interest.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection?

Mr. COUZENS. I withdraw my objection.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

RELIEF OF CERTAIN ARMY OFFICERS.

Mr. DIAL. Mr. President, I ask that we revert to Order of Business 1042, Senate bill 4425. The Senator from Michigan [Mr. COUZENS] objected to its consideration.

I desire to state that that is a bill for the relief of two Army officers in a case where their junior, over whom they had no control, stole some money. That junior has been prosecuted and put in the penitentiary. This matter was referred to the War Department, and the Secretary of War reported that the officers ought to have relief. It was referred to the Committee on Claims, and that committee reported unanimously that the bill ought to pass. The Senator from Indiana [Mr. NEW] had it up the other day in the morning hour, and the morning hour expired while it was under discussion.

I want to state, Mr. President, that many bills of this kind pass; in fact, I believe they all pass. I am not asking for a favor. I have objected to the consideration of some bills here, but I did not object to them promiscuously. I read all the reports as well as I could in the time at my disposal, and I have reasons for objecting to every bill to which I have objected. I do not favor now, and I have not favored, and I propose to grow more antagonistic to bills brought up here to appropriate money to pay unliquidated damages; and I hope the Congress of the United States will adopt some business method whereby claims of that character can be adjudicated. If they have rights, I am perfectly willing for them to go to court. That is one character of cases that I objected to, and if anyone will read the reports he will see that there is merit in the objection.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, I observe from the report of the Committee on Claims in this case that the bill is unqualifiedly approved by the Secretary of War in the following language:

> From a careful review of all the circumstances it is evident that the finance officers in question can not be blamed for negligence in connection with the loss of these funds, and that a great injustice will be done to them unless they are relieved from liability.
> It is accordingly recommended that legislation substantially as follows be enacted:

And then follows a draft of a bill which conforms to that now under consideration.

In view of that recommendation of the Secretary of War, it seems that the bill should pass.

Mr. DIAL. That is undoubtedly correct.

Mr. NEW. Mr. President, if the Senator will yield for a moment——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from South Carolina yield to the Senator from Indiana?

Mr. DIAL. I yield to the Senator from Indiana.

Mr. NEW. Just a word with reference to this particular bill. It is for the relief of two Army officers who were charged with the disposal of surplus property down on the border. The Government itself sent them a civilian clerk, for whose selection they had no responsibility and no choice but to take him. That clerk, under regular procedure, received the money that was paid in for those sales, and he absconded with about $12,000 of it and went to Mexico. One of these officers pursued the man into Mexico and actually forced him back over the border and turned him over to the Federal authorities. He was convicted and sent to the State prison for it. The officers had no responsibility, except a theoretical one, for the loss of that property, but unless they are relieved from it the money will have to be taken out of their retired pay, as they have no other income; and I think it would work a great injustice on these men if they are compelled to pay six or seven thousand dollars to the Government.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a question?

Mr. NEW. Certainly.

Mr. KING. We have had a good many cases similar to this and with respect to defalcations in other branches of the Government. Does not the Senator think it would be wise for his committee, or some other appropriate committee, to recommend legislation that would protect the Government from these recurring claims for losses resulting from the defalcations of employees in the Government service?

Mr. NEW. Mr. President, of course, I think that might be wisely done, but it has not been done; and we must act one way or the other upon this case now, in the absence of a general statute. This follows the custom, and the Senator from South Carolina is entirely right in saying that the War Department not only approved it but it suggested the form of this bill.

Mr. DIAL. Now I ask unanimous consent that we consider the bill, if the Senator from Michigan [Mr. COUZENS] will be kind enough to withdraw his objection. I do not want to ask any favors at all—not for a moment. I do not ask any favors for this officer. I simply ask that he be treated like other similar officers.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President——

Mr. DIAL. I yield to the Senator from Oregon.

Mr. McNARY. I think I can relieve the situation at this time. I shall object to the consideration of this bill until I have ample time to look into the record.

The VICE PRESIDENT. There is objection. The Secretary will state the next bill on the calendar.

ELEPHANT BUTTE IRRIGATION DISTRICT, NEW MEXICO.

The bill (S. 4232) authorizing the Secretary of the Interior to enter into a contract with the Elephant Butte irrigation district of New Mexico and the El Paso County improvement district No. 1, of Texas, for the carrying out of the provisions of the convention between the United States and Mexico, proclaimed January 16, 1907, and providing compensation therefor, was announced as next in order.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator in charge of the bill whether this matter of carrying out the provisions of the convention of January 16, 1907, has been submitted to the State Department?

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, I should prefer to refer that inquiry to the Senator who introduced the bill.

Mr. BURSUM. What is the question?

Mr. LODGE. I asked whether the bill had been referred to the State Department, or whether the opinion of the State Department had been taken in regard to it. It apparently modifies the convention.

Mr. BURSUM. Mr. President, I will say to the Senator that this bill in no way affects the treaty. It is simply an adjudication of accounts between the Government and the water users under the Elephant Butte Dam.

In 1906 this Government entered into a treaty with Mexico, agreeing to deliver some 60,000 acre-feet of water annually for irrigating lands, in settlement of a claim by Mexico against this Government for some $35,000,000. The entire cost of building this dam was charged to the water users' association in New Mexico and in a portion of Texas. They were credited with the sum of $1,000,000 by reason of this contract with Mexico, upon the basis that the cost of the dam of this project would be $40 per acre. Now it appears that the cost, instead of $40, is $90 an acre, and the Secretary of the Interior has so certified a charge against the water users under that dam. This bill is simply for the purpose of giving credit to the water users in Texas and New Mexico under the dam in the sum of $1,000,000, which is the pro rata amount which is due to them by the Government on account of the contract with Mexico in regard to water furnished by virtue of the treaty.

Mr. LODGE. The only point I desired to make was that I understand this is in accordance with the terms of the convention.

Mr. BURSUM. Absolutely.

Mr. LODGE. It does not modify it at all?

Mr. BURSUM. It has no effect whatever on the convention. It is merely an economic settlement between the water users and the Government.

Mr. LODGE. I have no objection.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I want to ask the Senator where the $1,000,000 to be credited on that account will be obtained. Is it to be taken out of the fund that is supposed to be returned to the Government of the United States?

Mr. BURSUM. The $1,000,000 will be owing by the water users to the Government.

Mr. SMOOT. Not if it is a credit to the water users. In other words, does this bill provide that $1,000,000 of the amount that is owing to-day to the Government of the United States by the water users shall be forgiven?

Mr. BURSUM. It is not forgiven. It is a credit upon the account which the Government owes. It is an obligation of the Government. The basis of the credit which was given to the water users, in the first instance, was $1,000,000, upon the basis that the cost of the project would be $40 per acre. Now, it turns out that the cost of this project is $90 an acre.

Mr. SMOOT. Every reclamation project that I know anything about in the United States has cost just about that much more than the cost estimated at the beginning.

Mr. BURSUM. All right; but am I to understand that the Government can shrink from paying its proportion for the water which it agreed to deliver to Mexico, and saddle that expense on the water users, who are not benefited thereby, and compel the water users' association to deliver that water in the bed of the river and make it available to the farm owners in the Republic of Mexico? The Government would be saddling its proportion, by reason of its agreement, upon the water users of the Elephant Butte Association. There is no relief to the farmers under this project, none whatever. They are simply given credit for that which belongs to them. In other words, the Government owes the water users on account of the Republic of Mexico $2,000,000, and not $1,000,000.

Mr. SMOOT. Then the Government loses a million dollars.

Mr. BURSUM. It does not lose a dime. The Government pays its proportion of what it agreed to pay on account of the water deliverable to Mexico. The Government profited to the extent of $33,000,000 under this transaction. The Government settled a claim of $35,000,000. The Government apportioned what it believed to be the pro rata of the water users at the time the dam was being constructed and the amount apportioned as the proportion to be assumed by the Government now turns out to be less than one-half of its just proportion.

Mr. WILLIS. Mr. President, I do not like to object to the Senator's bill, but it is evident that this is a very important measure, and that if it is to be disposed of now, we can not consider any of the other bills on the calendar. It is going to lead to a further discussion.

Mr. BURSUM. I submit, Mr. President, there should not be any extended discussion.

Mr. WILLIS. But there is discussion. We have had 10 minutes of it already, and there will be 10 minutes more, and to save time, and to give the Senate time to consider other bills on the calendar, I object.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over.

ROBERT J. ASHE.

The bill (H. R. 9316) for the relief of Robert J. Ashe was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. Let it go over.

Mr. NEW. I hope the Senator will withhold his objection.

Mr. KING. I withhold the objection until I hear the Senator's explanation of the bill.

Mr. NEW. I will explain it as briefly as I may. This bill, I think, by all means ought to be passed as an act of simple justice. It is not a pension bill or anything of that kind. This boy, Robert Ashe, was a private soldier, just a boy. In company with two other soldiers he got out one night and went to places where he should not have gone, and admittedly got drunk. Some money disappeared at the time these soldiers were engaged in this nocturnal expedition. Robert Ashe never did admit, but always denied, having taken any of the money. He admitted that he made a mistake in the other respects. He was dishonorably discharged because, in his inexperience, he did not know how to enter a defense. He said he was not guilty, but he did not present a defense.

Afterwards the War Department looked into the case, decided that the boy was not guilty of theft, and that he ought to be given permission to reenlist, but it did not remove the record of a dishonorable discharge. The boy did reenlist. He served until the breaking out of the World War, when the Government permitted him to take a discharge in order that they might commission him, and that they did. He was commissioned a second lieutenant, went into the World War, was promoted to first lieutenancy, then recommended for promotion to a captaincy, but that was not consummated simply because the war ended before it could be done. His commission was a temporary one, of course.

After the close of the war he reenlisted, and he is in the Army now as a master sergeant, with a very splendid military record. This is merely to remove a blemish on a record that is otherwise clear. That boy has certainly redeemed himself, and he is entitled, I think, to the benefit of this action of Congress.

Mr. KING. I agree with the Senator.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill, which was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That in the administration of any laws conferring rights, privileges, and benefits upon honorably discharged soldiers, Robert J. Ashe, who was a private in Troop G, Fifth Regiment United States Cavalry, shall hereafter be held and considered to have been discharged honorably from the military service of the United States as a member of that organization on the 21st day of August, 1914: Provided, That no pay or other emoluments shall accrue by virtue of the passage of this act.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

JOHN H. FESENMEYER, ALIAS JOHN WILLS.

The bill (S. 3742) for the relief of John H. Fesenmeyer, alias John Wills, was announced as next in order.

Mr. DIAL. Let that go over.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President, I want to make a little statement; and then if the Senator from South Carolina asks that it go over, very well.

This is a case where a minor, a young boy, enlisted at the very beginning of the war, in 1861, and served for two years. He was then with a company in Maryland, I think. His father lived in New York. He got a message from his family that his father was dying and wanted to see him before he passed away. The boy asked for a furlough, but it was denied. It is true that he then left and went to New York and saw his father for a few days. Action was brought against him for desertion, and the father then instituted an action to relieve him from imprisonment under a writ of habeas corpus, and he was released, he still being a minor. He had then served two years; and, of course, he had the charge of desertion against him, though it was his intention to immediately return.

Having that charge of desertion against him, he immediately enlisted under the name of John Wills and served until the end of the war and received an honorable discharge from his second enlistment. So he served during practically the entire war. This bill is to remove the charge of desertion for the few days that he was absent at his father's bedside. At the close of the war he was nine months in Libby prison.

If the Senator desires to object, of course I can say nothing further, but I think the charge of desertion ought to be removed when the boy has a record of that kind.

Mr. DIAL. Mr. President, on reading the report I did not get all the facts which the Senator has stated. The Senator makes a very appealing speech. I do not look on these bills with favor, but under all the circumstances I am going to let this one pass. I want to say, however, that I can not see much distinction between trying to do justice to soldiers of the Civil War and trying to do justice to soldiers of the late war.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill, which had been reported from the Committee on Military Affairs with an amendment, on line 9, after the word "no," to insert the words "back pay," and on line 10, after the word "pension" and the comma, to insert the words "bounty, or other allowances," so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That in the administration of the pension laws, John H. Fesenmeyer, alias John Wills, who was a private of Company F, Sixty-fifth Regiment New York Volunteer Infantry, shall hereafter be held and considered to have been discharged honorably from the military service of the United States as a member of said company and regiment on the 15th day of February, 1862: Provided, That no back pay, pension, bounty, or other allowances shall accrue prior to the passage of this act.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

SALE OF UNITED STATES REAL PROPERTY.

The bill (S. 4216) authorizing the sale of real property no longer required for military purposes was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill had been reported from the Committee on Military Affairs with amendments. The first amendment was, on page 3, after line 22, to insert:

Tennessee: Park Field, Millington, Tenn., about 16 miles north of Memphis.

Mr. McKELLAR. I will be compelled to object to the bill with that amendment in it, and ask that it may go over.

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. Will not the Senator from Tennessee permit this item to which he objects to be stricken out and the bill to be passed without that amendment in it?

Mr. McKELLAR. That will be entirely satisfactory.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was rejected.

The next amendments were, on page 5, beginning with line 21, to strike out that line and all of the bill down to and including line 18, on page 6, and to insert in lieu thereof sections 2 to 8, inclusive, so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, authorized to sell or to cause to be sold, either in whole or in two or more parts as he may deem best for the interests of the United States, the several tracts or parcels of real property hereinafter designated, or any interest therein or appurtenant thereto, which said tracts or parcels are no longer needed for military purposes, and to execute and deliver in the name of the United States and in its behalf any and all contracts, conveyances, or other instruments necessary to effectuate such sale.

SEC. 2. If any other executive department of the Government of the United States shall require any one or more of the above-mentioned properties, or any part thereof, for the immediate use of such department, the Secretary of War is hereby authorized to transfer to that executive department the property or part thereof which shall be required for said immediate use.

SEC. 3. In the disposal of the aforesaid properties which shall not thus be required by any other executive department the Secretary of War shall in each and every case cause the same to be appraised, either as a whole or in two or more parts, by an appraiser or appraisers to be chosen by him for each tract, and in the making of such appraisal due regard shall be given to the value of any improvements thereon and to the historic interest of any part of said land.

SEC. 4. After such appraisal shall have been made and approved by the Secretary of War, notification of the fact of such appraisal shall be given by the Secretary of War to the governor of the State in which each such tract of land is located, and such State or the county or municipality in which such land is located shall in the order named have the option at any time within six months after the approval of such appraisal to acquire the same, or any part thereof which shall have been separately appraised, upon payment within said period of six months of the appraisal value: Provided, however, That the conveyance of said tract of land to such State, county, or municipality shall be upon the condition and limitation that said property shall be limited to use for public-park purposes and upon cessation of such use shall revert to the United States without notice, demand, or action brought.

SEC. 5. Six months after the date of approval of said appraisal, if the option given in section 4 hereof shall not have been completely exercised, the Secretary of War shall sell or cause to be sold each of said properties at public sale, at not less than the appraised value, after advertisement in such manner as may be directed by the Secretary.

SEC. 6. A full report of transfers and sales made under the provisions of this act shall be submitted to Congress by the Secretary of War.

SEC. 7. The expense of appraisal, survey, advertising, and sale shall in each case be paid from the proceeds of the sale, whether made in accordance with section 4 or section 5 of this act, and the net proceeds thereof shall be deposited in the Treasury of the United States to the credit of "Miscellaneous receipts."

SEC. 8. The authority granted by this act shall not repeal any prior legislative authority granted to the Secretary of War to sell or otherwise dispose of lands or property of the United States.

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended and the amendments were concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Mr. WADSWORTH subsequently said:

Mr. President, this morning while the calendar was being called the Senate passed calendar No. 1054, the bill (S. 4216) authorizing the sale of real property no longer required for military purposes. I was not present in the Senate at the time on account of attendance at a conference on the War Department appropriation bill. Had I been present I would have asked the Senate to amend the bill in one particular before it was passed, by striking out, on page 5, lines 6, 7, and 8, which read as follows:

Missouri and Kansas: Fort Leavenworth Bridge, connecting the Fort Leavenworth Reservation with the Fort Leavenworth timber reserve.

This language should be stricken from the bill because it has reference to a particular piece of property which is being handled in a different way—a way entirely satisfactory to the Government and those interested—under a provision in the War Department appropriation bill which is now in conference.

I therefore move that the votes by which the bill was ordered to a third reading and passed be reconsidered in order that I may move to amend the bill and place it again upon its passage with the amendment.

Mr. McKELLAR. Before the request is put I wish to say to the Senator that the provision contained in a Senate committee amendment providing for the sale of Park Field, Millington, Tenn., was stricken from the bill. The Senator does not want to interfere with that?

Mr. WADSWORTH. Not at all.

Mr. McKELLAR. Then I have no objection to a reconsideration.

The motion to reconsider was agreed to.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I move to amend, on page 5, by striking out lines 6, 7, and 8.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The READING CLERK. On page 5 strike out lines 6, 7, and 8, as follows:

Missouri and Kansas: Fort Leavenworth Bridge, connecting the Fort Leavenworth Reservation with the Fort Leavenworth timber reserve.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

JACOB MULL.

The bill (S. 2098) for the relief of Jacob Mull was announced as next in order.

Mr. DIAL. Let that go over.

Mr. GOODING. I wish the Senator would withhold his objection for a moment. Mr. Mull is a neighbor of mine in Gooding, Idaho, and is a splendid citizen. I am not ready to believe that he was intentionally a deserter.

He enlisted in Findlay, Ohio, in 1861, when he was but a boy of 16. He served faithfully up until some time in 1863, when he was on a transport on the river going up to Vicksburg with a number of other soldiers, and owing to a storm was put ashore, being instructed not to go beyond a levee about 60 yards from the river. He and a few others of the boys went beyond that levee and he was taken prisoner. He was held prisoner for about six months, and then was exchanged. He reported to his company; he was given transportation and a suit of clothes and sent home, and there the record seems to end as far as Mr. Mull is concerned.

Being a young man, I suppose he did not understand the importance of clearing his record when the war was over. This bill merely provides that his record shall be cleared. He is an old man, 76 years of age, and the last time I saw him he was crippled with rheumatism. I am quite sure this is a worthy case, and I submit that Mr. Mull should be given the benefit of the doubt in this matter. I hope the Senator will not object to the consideration of the bill. I know Mr. Mull very well. He has raised a large family, and he was one of three brothers who volunteered early in 1861. I am sure it is a case of merit.

Mr. DIAL. I can not waive the objection. I ask that the bill may go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over.

THOMAS J. TEMPLE.

The bill (S. 930) for the relief of Thomas J. Temple was considered as in Committee of the Whole, and was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That in the administration of any laws conferring rights, privileges, and benefits upon honorably discharged soldiers, Thomas J. Temple, late of Company K, Thirty-first Regiment Illinois Volunteer Infantry, shall hereafter be held and considered to have been discharged honorably from the military service of the United States as a member of said company and regiment on the 10th day of October, 1865: Provided, That no bounty, pay, or allowance shall accrue by virtue of the passage of this act.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

THE MERCHANT MARINE.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The hour of 1 o'clock having arrived, the Chair lays before the Senate the unfinished business, which will be stated.

The READING CLERK. A bill (H. R. 12817) to amend and supplement the merchant marine act, 1920, and for other purposes.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, I desire to submit to the Senator from Washington [Mr. JONES] and to the Senator from Kansas [Mr. CURTIS] a suggestion. It is perfectly apparent that if the bills remaining on the calendar are to be considered during the present session, consideration must be very quickly given to them. If Senate bills are to reach the House and have any attention there, they should be acted upon immediately by this body. Under the agreement which was entered into on Saturday a large number of bills, some of which have been pending on the calendar for some time, have not been reached, and unless an arrangement to proceed with the consideration of the calendar be effected it seems to me there is quite a probability that those measures will not be reached during the present session.

I have no interest in the matter except to see that the work which has been done by the respective committees of the Senate in considering and reporting the bills may not be lost or prove to have been in vain and the committees during the next Congress be compelled to perform the same services with respect to those measures. I think that the bills which are near the bottom of the calendar ought to have at least one chance for consideration as unobjected bills under Rule VIII.

In view of the fact that the end of the session is approaching and the business of the Senate constantly becomes more and more congested, and that under the circumstances now confronting us there is quite a likelihood that no opportunity to act on bills on the calendar will hereafter be had, I suggest to Senators the advisability of proceeding for a time with unobjected bills on the calendar, so that if possible the whole calendar may be sounded. Under the arrangement I suggest it is within the power of any Senator to object at any time and thus compel speedy action by the Senate, the purpose being to consider only those bills against which no objection will be urged.

I therefore suggest to the Senator from Washington that an arrangement be made to proceed, for a limited time at least, with the consideration of unobjected bills on the calendar under Rule VIII.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. President, I would like to see the bills on the calendar taken care of, and I am going to suggest an arrangement under which I think they can be taken care of, and which seems to be entirely reasonable. I am going to ask unanimous consent that when the Senate close its business to-day it adjourn until 10 o'clock in the morning, the morning hour to-morrow, so far as may be necessary, after routine business is disposed of, to be devoted to the consideration of unobjected bills on the calendar, beginning with the number where we left off to-day. It seems to me that that request is very reasonable. Senators ought to be willing to come here at that time in the morning in order to dispose of measures remaining on the calendar.

Mr. ROBINSON. Will the Senator indicate about what time it is expected the Senate may conclude its labors to-day?

Mr. JONES of Washington. I think I shall not ask the Senate to remain here longer than 10 or half past 10 to-night.

Mr. ROBINSON. Of course the Senator understands that if the Senate remains in session until 10 o'clock to-night it will probably be difficult to secure the attendance of a quorum by 10 o'clock in the morning, and that the very condition which I am seeking to avoid would probably arise.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I thought I was very liberal in making the suggestion.

Mr. ROBINSON. Many Senators have bills on the calendar that ought to be considered. I myself, however, am not going to object to the proposal of the Senator from Washington.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, does not the Senator believe that 11 o'clock is about as soon as we can get the Senate together?

Mr. ROBINSON. I think so.

Mr. FLETCHER. If we meet at 10 o'clock we would lose at least half an hour in getting a quorum.

Mr. ROBINSON. That has always been the experience of the Senate. I suggest to the Senator from Washington that he modify his request and make the hour of meeting 11.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I can not do it. I had no idea of humor when I made the proposition. It was made in all seriousness. When I suggested that we would probably quit at 10 o'clock to-night, it was suggested in all seriousness because I had in mind running longer than that. It seems to me that the proposition I have made is extremely liberal and reasonable under all the circumstances.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. JONES of Washington. I yield.

Mr. NORRIS. I want to suggest to the Senator from Washington what I believe to be an impractical thing in his proposition. I do not know how it may be with other committees, but I have been trying for two weeks to get together a quorum of the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry, but the meeting of the Senate at 11 o'clock has to a great extent prevented that being done. There is a meeting to be held to-morrow at 10.30 o'clock by that committee, at which we are going to try to get a quorum to pass on one or two bills. One of them is a House bill to which I believe there is no objection. Almost the entire country is for it, and it is quite an important measure. The consumers of the country particularly are anxious to get it. We will probably be able to-morrow to report the bill to the Senate. If reported, I think it will be passed unanimously, but we will not be able to do that if the Senate meets at 10 o'clock. I do not like to object to the Senator's proposition, but it does not seem to me that in order to get the ship subsidy bill passed and put on the statute books we should surrender everything else on earth.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I do not think anyone has surrendered very much thus far. I have been in a committee meeting this morning since 10 o'clock. Every morning for a week I have been in a committee meeting at 10 o'clock. Some of the bills on the calendar are bills in which I am interested, and there are others in which I am not specially interested, but I feel satisfied that there will be Senators on the floor who will see that the merits of the bills are considered and that those which are not meritorious will not be passed. So Senators who want to meet with committees while bills are being considered on the floor it seems to me are suffering no hardship if the Senate meets at 10 o'clock. I submit the request.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President, in addition to what has been said by the Senator from Arkansas and the Senator from Nebraska, I think that the Senator from Washington could well let an hour go by in the morning and meet at 11. There is a meeting of the Committee on Finance to-morrow at half past 10. We can get through by 11 o'clock. The meeting has already been called. I assume that if the Senate should meet at 10 o'clock it would take at least half an hour before we could get a quorum. I believe we would not be losing time and we would accommodate a great many Senators, especially those who have committee meetings, if the Senator would fix 11 o'clock to-morrow as the time for meeting. I hope he will do so. Of course, if not, we shall have to cancel our committee engagements.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I am willing to fix 11 o'clock for the time of meeting if it may be unanimously agreed that the morning hour shall close at 12 o'clock.

Mr. McCUMBER and others. Oh, no; let us meet at 11.

Mr. BURSUM. Let us make it 11 o'clock.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I submit my unanimous-consent request.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the unanimous-consent request submitted by the Senator from Washington?

Mr. DIAL. Mr. President, the Senator from Washington is so persuasive and so clever that I would agree to almost any request he made; but he asks us to meet at 10 o'clock in the morning. After laboring here from 10 o'clock in the morning until 10 o'clock at night, that is a little more of a task than I am prepared to perform, and, therefore, I object.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Objection is made.

FILLED MILK.

Mr. LADD. Mr. President, I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of Order of Business 963, the bill (H. R. 8086) to prohibit the shipment of filled milk in interstate or foreign commerce. I regret to be obliged to make this motion, but the bill has been on the calendar for some time and it has been objected to whenever it has been reached during the morning hour. On two or three occasions Senators have stated that at another time there would be no objection to taking up the bill, but there has always been some objection. However, Senators know the condition in which the business of the Senate is now, and while I regret very much to do so under those conditions, yet I feel obliged to move to take up the bill at this time.

The bill is known as the filled milk bill. Eleven States have passed such a measure prohibiting the manufacture and sale of filled milk. Within the past few days the Legislature of the State of Washington, I am informed, has enacted a law prohibiting the manufacture and sale of filled milk within the State of Washington. Wisconsin, which is one of the largest filled-milk producing States, has also passed a law prohibiting its manufacture, and the courts have sustained the law. There is a similar measure before the Legislature of Indiana to prohibit the manufacture and sale of filled milk within the State.

The committee reports that H. R. 8086 be passed as it came from the House with two slight amendments. It developed in the hearings that the bill as it passed the House might possibly be considered as affecting the sale of certain other infant foods or preparations. In order that there might be no question on this point a slight amendment was made clearly exempting these particular foods. Another slight amendment was for the purpose of clarification of the meaning; otherwise the bill is the same as it passed the House—passed the House by a vote of 256 to 40.

The bill which I have moved to take up passed the House in May, 1922, and came to the Senate. In July and August, 1922, very extensive hearings were held and the matter came up at the beginning of the present session of Congress, and early in January the bill was placed on the calendar. It was reported out of the committee without objection on the part of any of the 12 members present, and I feel that it should at this time come up and be disposed of. It has the indorsement of a large number of the leading organizations of the country.

The American Farm Bureau Federation, at their annual convention held in Chicago in November, passed the following resolution:

We urge immediate action by the United States Senate on the Voigt bill, H. R. 8086, as already passed by the House of Representatives. We would also urge that the various State farm bureaus get back of filled-milk legislation in their several States to supplement the pending national law.

Again the Farmers' National Council of Cooperative Marketing Associations, at their annual meeting, under date of December 16, 1922, passed the following resolution:

In recent years there has appeared on the market compounds made of skimmed milk and coconut oil which look, taste, and smell like genuine evaporated whole milk and can not be readily detected from whole evaporated milk except by a chemical analysis. Some of the world's greatest authorities on nutrition have denounced those compounds as being harmful to children and generally injurious to the public health. We, therefore, urge the passage in this session of the Congress by the Senate of the House bill H. R. 8086, intended to prohibit the manufacture of such compounds within the possessions of the United States and their movements in interstate and foreign commerce.

The National Grange, in their legislative program item No. 20, have the following with regard to filled milk:

The National Grange urges the speedy passage of the Voigt bill to relieve the great dairy interests of the country from the depressing effect of the fraudulent product known as filled milk and protecting the health of the consumers, particularly the children, from this adulterated food.

I submit also copy of a letter written by Senator CUMMINS not only indorsing the bill but declaring, in his judgment, that the same is sound constitutionally:

DES MOINES, IOWA, November 9, 1922.

Mr. W. A. WENTWORTH, Secretary,
704 Iowa National Bank Building, Des Moines, Iowa.

DEAR MR. WENTWORTH: I have your letter of the 7th instant inclosing one from Professor Nelson respecting the filled milk bill now pending in Congress. Since my talk with Commissioner Clark, Mr. Barney, and yourself a few days ago I have given some attention to this subject. I am thoroughly convinced that the best interest of the people of the country will be served by prohibiting the manufacture and sale of filled milk. My only doubt with regard to the matter has been respecting the constitutionality of the bill, which forbids the transportation of this commodity from one State to another. After going carefully through the record with respect to the injurious effects of the use of filled milk, and after examining the authorities with much care, I have reached the conclusion that this bill is sound constitutionally, and therefore I shall give it my hearty support.

I return the papers that you left with me.

Yours cordially, ALBERT B. CUMMINS.

A letter from the president of the Farmers' Educational & Cooperative Union of America, Oklahoma City, Okla., under date of December 28, 1922, follows:

Senator E. LADD,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR FRIEND: The farmers of Oklahoma are very much interested in the passage of the Voigt antifilled milk bill. I hope to hear that this bill is making progress and that it gets a favorable report from the Senate committee.

Yours very truly, JOHN A. SIMPSON, President.

The following telegram from Washington State carries the indorsement of Grays Harbor Farm Bureau, Grays Harbor Dairymen's Association, Montesano Chamber of Commerce, and Aberdeen Chamber of Commerce:

Please do your utmost to get Voigt bill (antifilled milk bill) out of Senate committee at once. This is of the greatest importance to dairying and agriculture. We are asking our Senators to support this bill.

Also, from the secretary of the State Dairymen's Association of North Dakota:

Believing our interests will be protected by passage of Voigt bill this session, urge you request Senator MCKINLEY to sign favorable report.

The following telegram from the secretary of the Iowa Dairy Council:

Am advised delay on Voigt bill in subcommittee. You realize importance passage this bill to dairy industry and public welfare. Dairy people of Iowa whom I represent urge that you assume leadership in getting this bill out of committee and passed by Senate quickly.

The following telegram from E. L. Harrison, State president of 20,000 farmers' union members of Kentucky:

May we ask your cooperation in getting immediate report out of Senate committee of Voigt antifilled milk bill? The passage of this bill is of vital importance to and will be appreciated by 20,000 farmers' union members of Kentucky.

The New York Rensselaer County Pomona send the following telegram:

Meeting Rensselaer County Pomona to-day at Hoosick unanimously insist upon prompt passage of Voigt filled milk bill; eight granges, represented by 200 members. Dairymen of entire county thoroughly aroused over delay in Senate and request your support of bill.

Telegram from the president of the Iowa State Guernsey Breeders' Association:

Feeling that the best interests of the thoroughbred breeders of dairy cattle and the milk producers can best be represented in the passage of the bill known as the Voigt filled milk bill, we earnestly request that you use your influence in getting this bill before the Senate and passed.

Telegram from Iowa Dairy Association:

Iowa dairy cattle breeders desire to see the Voigt filled milk bill prohibiting interstate movement of the product filled milk passed by Senate. Passage of bill important. We urge you do all in your power to see that bill is reported from Agricultural Committee to Senate floor.

Telegram from the Cooperative Milk Producers' Association of Dayton, Ohio:

Three thousand milk producers, members of the Miami Valley Cooperative Milk Producers' Association, urge you to support favorable report by committee on Voigt bill, H. R. 8086.

Telegram from master New York State Grange:

Passage Voigt filled milk bill at this session of Congress vital to dairy industry; dairymen New York State unanimous in demand for its immediate passage, both from standpoint of unfair competition with pure dairy products and as pure food measure in protection of health, particularly children.

Telegram from Utica Milk Local:

Our Utica Milk Local earnestly request that Voigt bill be reported out of committee. This bill will stop a flagrant, fraudulent practice in the United States, and one which does a great deal of harm and no good. It injures the foundation of one of the most important industries of the American farmer.

Telegram from Ohio State Dairy Committee:

As secretary of our State dairy committee, I am asked to request favorable action on your part on Voigt bill (H. R. 8086) now in hands of your committee. Please notify us of your action on this bill.

The following telegram from the secretary of the Ohio Farm Bureau Federation:

Ohio Farm Bureau Federation urgently requests you to support favorable action by your committee on Voigt bill (H. R. 8086). Please let us know your stand on this bill.

Telegram from master State Grange of Seattle, Wash.:

Farmers are inquiring every day why we can not do something toward pushing enactment of Voigt milk bill. The manufacture and sale of this product is so potently based upon deception that it is hard for us to understand what reasons can be causing the delay.

Telegram from the State Dairymen's Association of Nebraska:

Nebraska Dairymen's Association urgently asks that Voigt bill be reported out at your earliest convenience.

New Jersey farmerz favor filled milk bill:

New Jersey farmers look to you for assistance in obtaining early favorable reports on the Voigt filled milk bill.

Farmers' Union of Nebraska indorse bill:

Farmers' Union of Nebraska desire that you use all honorable means to have the Voigt antifilled milk bill reported out of the Senate committee. Thank you.

Onondaga County Grange, State of New York, support bill:

As grange deputy of Onondaga County, State of New York, representing 4,500 men and women, I urge you in their behalf to support the Voigt filled milk bill. M. A. Terpening.

Milk producers organizations of Pennsylvania behind bill:

Milk producers organization of Lancaster County, Pa., request immediate favorable report committee on Voigt bill (H. R. 8086) and ask its prompt passage Senate.

Telegram from Everett, Wash.:

Dairymen vitally interested in Voigt bill now in your committee. House of Representatives passed bill by large majority, to satisfaction of dairymen; 1,500 dairymen in Snohomish County, Wash., request report on bill from your committee and expect favorable action for passage.

Maryland milk producers indorse Voigt bill:

Over 2,000 members Milk Producers' Association, Cecil County, Md., urge immediate favorable report Agricultural Committee on Voigt bill (H. R. 8086) and also its prompt passage.

Delaware Milk Producers' Association urge passage:

Our organization, representing producers of milk in the State of Delaware, urge immediate favorable report Committee on Agriculture on Voigt bill (H. R. 8086) and prompt favorable action by the Senate.

New Jersey Milk Producers' Association urge passage:

One thousand seven hundred members Milk Producers' Association, New Jersey, urge immediate favorable report Voigt bill (H. R. 8086) and also its passage Senate.

Dairymen's League Cooperative Association, Utica, N. Y., urge passage of bill:

Vital to dairy industry Voigt filled milk bill be passed at this session of Congress, in view of fact that filled milk is unfair competition with pure dairy products, also as pure-food measure for protection of health, particularly children; dairymen unanimous urging bill be reported out without further delay.

Connecticut Milk Producers' Association indorse bill:

The dairymen of Connecticut beg your assistance for an early and favorable report on the Voigt filled milk bill. Our industry and the consuming public both need it badly.

Allegany County farmers, New York, back bill:

The organized farmers of Allegany County ask you to use your influence to have the Ladd bill reported out at once so action can be secured this session.

New York Farm Bureau Federation indorses bill:

New York Farm Bureau Federation asks that Voigt bill be immediately reported out of committee; of great importance not alone to dairy industry but public health as well.

Six hundred Grangers want law:

Rosehill Grange, of Waterloo, N. Y., with a membership of 600, goes on record as favoring the enactment of the Voigt filled-milk bill. Your efforts in this matter will be greatly appreciated.

Five thousand Grangers, Wayne County, N. Y., want bill passed:

Five thousand Wayne County Grangers urge passage of Voigt filled-milk bill.

St. Paul, Minn., Milk Producers' Association indorses bill:

Respectfully request that you use every effort to get Voigt bill out of committee at once. Our farmers all greatly interested in this bill. Have started action for State legislation along same line and feel we must have your active support now.

Iowa creamery favors bill:

The farmers of our locality to a man are in favor of the Voigt bill. We believe for the interest of the farmers of the common West you should see that this bill passes the Senate.

Iowa State Butter Makers' Association approves bill:

The Iowa Butter Makers' Association, by their secretary, do hereby ask you to use your good influence to secure a favorable report from the subcommittee of the Committee on Agriculture now considering Voigt bill (H. R. 8086). The dairy interests of Iowa are at stake and we pray for immediate action.

The Nebraska Creamery Butter Manufacturers' Association, through its secretary, indorses the bill. The secretary of that association writes as follows:

DECEMBER 19, 1922.

Hon. E. F. LADD,
Senate Office Building, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SENATOR LADD: As secretary of the Nebraska Creamery Association I am writing you pertaining to the Voigt bill which, as you know, was most favorably acted upon by the House last spring. I am sure that 95 per cent of your constituents are favorable to this measure. It is a truly constructive bill and one which the farmers of this country, as well as those who believe in pure foods, are greatly interested in. Thanking you for what you can do, I remain,

Very truly yours,

A. L. HAECKER, Secretary.

Mr. President, I might add some 50 other telegrams from various parts of the country which I have since received, all indorsing the filled milk bill and urging its early passage as a means of protecting the dairy interests of this country as well as the health of the babies and children, which means a stronger manhood in the years to come.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, may I interrupt the Senator.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. MCNARY in the chair). Does the Senator from North Dakota yield to the Senator from Florida?

Mr. LADD. I yield.

Mr. FLETCHER. Not being a member of the committee, I am not advised as to what material is used to make what is called filled milk, and am not familiar with the ingredients which compose that product. I should like to inquire why they are deleterious or harmful and injurious to health? I think the bill declares filled milk is injurious to health and condemns it very strongly. I inquire what is meant by filled milk? I should like to have the Senator explain that.

Mr. LADD. Mr. President, filled milk is a product made from skimmed milk. The butter fat is taken out of the milk, then it is replaced with coconut oil, the product produced is evaporated to the same consistency as evaporated milk, and sold very frequently under the label of evaporated milk or as milk. Filled milk is largely used as milk; it is being exported abroad as condensed or evaporated milk. It is doing exactly for our evaporated and condensed milk business what the filled cheese and the skim-milk cheese did in the eighties and nineties in this country, namely, destroying our dairy industry.

The product is injurious because the coconut oil does not contain the same constituents that are contained in the butter fat of milk, which contain what are known as vitamines, the lack of which in the filled-milk product retards growths and produces eye trouble. There are various other vitamines; some five, I think, have now been discovered; none of these are in the filled milk but one of the most important of these is found in milk. The only source from which the child may receive this vitamine is through milk. When butter fat has been removed from milk, the vitamines have been largely taken away and there has been substituted in their place a cheap oriental oil devoid of vitamines. Filled milk is, therefore, injurious to health because of the absence of the vitamines and because it has not the same nutritive constituents as has butter fat. Yet I think it is sold in most cases as milk. Here in this city, I am informed, 156 line grocery stores sold it at the same price for which they sold evaporated milk. The average person does not know that.

With regard to these vitamines, more especially the ones in whole milk, the evidence was given before both House and Senate by leading experts in this country. I am confident that there are few, if any, abler investigators in this particular field of industry than Doctor McCollum, of the Johns Hopkins University, who appeared before the committee. He said:

I say the evidence clearly indicates that there are certain vitamines in some food products, and if any of these are absent from the diet certain nutritional difficulties are bound to arise. (Senate hearings, pp. 22 to 25.)

One of these vitamines, known as vitamine A, is found associated with milk fat, and when this butter fat is removed from the milk, the skimmed milk is nearly devoid of vitamines, while vegetable oils contain none of these vitamines. Therefore this substitute—vegetable oil—for butter fat in milk means to deprive the individual of this particular vitamine, and unless it is furnished from some other source nutritional difficulties are bound to arise, as experiments have indicated and the child receiving only milk will be deprived of this vitamine, which seriously affects the normal development of the individual and is particularly characteristic of eye troubles.

Doctor McCollum showed experiments where two animals, rats, were fed identically the same, as far as diet was concerned, with the exception that one received 10 per cent of its diet of whole milk powder. This animal maintained a healthy condition, while the one deprived of the milk powder was abnormal and failed to develop.

Another experiment, identically the same, with the exception that one set received a portion of filled milk while the other received an equal portion of evaporated milk. The two receiving the filled milk containing coconut oil failed to develop, and one receiving the coconut oil died after a short time, while the others remained normal.

In 1920 there was produced in the United States 85,000,000 pounds of filled milk, sold mostly in 1-pound containers. From the milk that produces this filled milk there had been extracted from 7,000,000 to 8,000,000 pounds of butter fat, and substituted in place of the same from 7,000,000 to 8,000,000 pounds of a cheap oriental oil—coconut oil—costing from 8 to 10 cents per pound, and when manufactured not to exceed in the filled milk 12 cents per pound.

This product is sold in competition with condensed or evaporated milk, wherein butter fat is costing from 40 to 45 cents per pound. The production of this amount of butter fat would mean the replacing of approximately 40,000 cows from the American dairymen. (House hearings, p. 174.) The evidence showed that the price at which filled milk is retailed is usually the same as that charged for evaporated milk. Doctor Larson, of the Bureau of Chemistry, Department of Agriculture (House hearings, p. 113), stated that there were a series of chain stores in Washington, and that the manager of 156 of these stores stated that he sells filled milk at 10 cents per can for the large cans, the same as charged for evaporated milk.

(House hearings, p. 169.) It is stated that one of these filled milks in New Hampshire was retailing at 17 cents, and that those who purchased this product—Carolene—thought they were securing full evaporated milk, and were amazed when they found it was not evaporated milk.

It was claimed (House hearings, p. 127) that while the wholesale price in most cases of this filled milk was $3.50 a case, the price of standard brands of evaporated milk was $5 a case. This means, then, that the middlemen or retailers are receiving an undue profit, or as one of the witnesses stated: "If the retailers are selling it at the same price here in Washington they are profiteering."

In this country we produce approximately 1,500,000,000 pounds of evaporated milk, and in 1920 we were producing 85,000,000 pounds of this filled milk.

In the House hearings, page 88, it developed that the cost of production entering into the manufacture of 48 cans of filled milk was: For skimmed milk 36 cents, and 45 cents for coconut oil, or a total cost for the ingredients in the 48 cans of 81 cents. That is, the contents of these cans therefore cost a little less than 2 cents per can, while the can cost approximately 1 cent each, a gain by the substitution of coconut oil. In Chicago evaporated milk in carload lots sold at $5 per case—48 cans—while filled milk sold at $3.60.

Fanciful names are placed on the labels, and at times it is sold under a trade name so as not to come in conflict with the law, while in other places it is labeled and sold as condensed or evaporated milk.

Mr. FLETCHER. Is the coconut oil all imported?

Mr. LADD. The coconut oriental oil is all imported. It displaces an equal amount of our own products. It displaces the butter fat and is injuring the dairy interests very largely. Coconut oil is produced with cheap labor in oriental countries and brought in here at from 7 to 10 cents a pound to compete with butter fat costing around 40 cents a pound. There is no opportunity for competition; there is no opportunity for the dairyman to compete with it; and unless its manufacture is prohibited in this country, the dairy industry will be largely destroyed.

Mr. FLETCHER. May I ask the Senator if cottonseed oil or peanut oil are used in making so-called filled milk?

Mr. LADD. They are not. No oils of that character can be used, because their flavor and other properties make it impossible to use them satisfactorily. There must be used an oil that is entirely bland, so that it can not be detected in milk. Cottonseed oil would give a taste and flavor that would be objectionable.

Filled milk, therefore, is coming in competition with our dairy products. It is a cheap product that is sold just sufficiently below the price of the real milk article as to induce the public to buy it. It is not helping the people of this country, but is going to destroy the dairy interest.

Mr. STANLEY. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from North Dakota yield to the Senator from Kentucky?

Mr. LADD. I do.

Mr. STANLEY. If I correctly understand the Senator, the use of coconut oil in substitution for butter fat in the production of this commodity gives a product that is less nutritious than condensed milk made from the whole milk?

Mr. LADD. Yes; because the coconut oil has not the same food value.

Mr. STANLEY. Exactly; coconut oil has not the same nutritive qualities as has milk?

Mr. LADD. It has not the same nutritive qualities as has milk. In the skimmed milk used as a basis there is introduced a cheap oil that has not the same nutritious and food value and which can not take the place of milk for the young growing child who depends wholly on milk for its source of food and for the vitamines so necessary for growth and health. Therefore the filled product is injurious to the public health.

FILLED MILK CONDEMNED.

In a bulletin of the Wisconsin experiment station, appearing in the Senate hearings, page 244, it is stated that—

The use of "filled" milk for infant feeding is intolerable and should be prohibited by law, since many mothers of limited means do not know the dangers of filled milk they are bound to use it when available. In the interest of public welfare, it is desirable to entirely prevent its sale and manufacture.

Doctor Alsberg, formerly head of the Bureau of Chemistry, now of the Leland Stanford University, California, in a letter dated June 3, 1921 (Senate hearings, p. 225), said:

A milk product in which the natural butter fat has been substituted wholly or in part by vegetable oil or fat such as coconut oil does not have the same nutritive value as one in which no such substitution has been made in which there are valuable vitamines, while coconut oil contains little or none of this vitamine.

Doctor Goldberger, medical officer, United States Health Service (Senate hearings, p. 266), speaking with regard to filled milk, says:

The reason, or probably the principal reason, why it would not serve exactly the same purpose as natural milk is that the first step of preparation of skimmed milk in removing the butter removes a certain food essential, named a vitamine, vitamine A, and the addition of the vegetable fat does not replace this element, although it replaces the fat and the caloric value; and, secondly, food so constituted is, by comparison with an equivalent amount of milk, poorer in this dietary essential of vitatime A, and it is a dietary essential that is quite important, particularly important in young children and infants whose diet is naturally a restricted one and is likely to be restricted entirely to milk, and in such instances it would be necessary to add some other source of this vitamine in order to make the diet of a child complete. Without this other addition, the nutrition of the child would be likely to suffer.

Mr. STANLEY. Mr. President, will the Senator pardon a further interruption?

Mr. LADD. Certainly.

Mr. STANLEY. I thoroughly understand that filled milk, being made from coconut oil or containing coconut oil and other ingredients, is not as nutritious as if it contained butter fat; but what I was trying to get at was whether filled milk made by the use of coconut or other vegetable oils was possibly injurious as a food product.

Mr. LADD. Doctor McCollum, of Johns Hopkins University, formerly of Wisconsin University, whom I consider in his particular field one of the ablest nutrition investigators in America, states that it is positively injurious, especially to the child.

Mr. STANLEY. Is it positively injurious to people generally?

Mr. LADD. Not to grown people, for they can get the vitamines from some other source.

Mr. STANLEY. It is injurious, then, because it does not supply the food values that are essential to the child?

Mr. LADD. That is correct.

The evidence before the Senate—page 7—shows deception in labeling. On one of these filled milks it is stated:

Nutro is prepared in rich dairying sections of Indiana and Wisconsin; is made from fresh pure cow's milk with the butter fat extracted and refined coconut oil added.

Again, they say:

Nutro is a delicious and nutritious new milk product.

In one of their advertisements they state:

It is prepared in the rich dairying districts of Wisconsin and Indiana and made of pure rich cow's milk with the animal fats extracted.

They further add:

And essential food values replaced by a refined, rich, sweet, pure, vegetable coconut oil.

Thus giving the impression that there is something in milk—the animal fat—that has been removed that may be deleterious. They further claim:

Nutro is pure, delicious, wholesome. It is prepared in model dairies from pure cow's milk, evaporated to double strength.

In the Senate hearings, page 12, it is clearly set forth that dealers keep the product on the same shelves with condensed and evaporated milk, frequently sell it at the same price, although it costs considerably less, and, according to the testimony, claim that the product is equally as good. One dealer said:

It is good. We sell more Hebe than any other; better for puddings than fresh milk; just as good as the other.

Another said:

It was certified by the board of health.

Which it is not. Another said:

I sell very much, and people give it to children.

Another said:

Of course it is good for children.

Another:

It is as good as the other; it is good for children.

Another said:

It is as good as the other, and I recommend it for children.

In the House hearings, page 168, it was stated that—

Borden's condensed milk and Hebe they charge the same as for evaporated milk—10 cents. When asked the question, "Which is better for house use?" four stores stated, "One is just as good as the other."

I will name now some of the States that prohibit the manufacture or sale of this product within the State:

New Jersey prohibits the manufacture and sale of condensed or evaporated milk to which have been added, blended, or compounded any fats or oils other than milk fats.

New York prohibits the manufacture and sale of condensed evaporated milk, and so forth, to which have been added any fats or oils other than milk fats in semblance of milk or condensed milk.

Wisconsin, Florida, Maryland, Ohio, California, Oregon, and Utah prohibit it; and, as I have said, Washington has just passed a law prohibiting it; and Washington, I believe, is the second largest State for its manufacture.

STATE LAWS.

(Senate hearings, p. 253.)

New Jersey prohibits the manufacture and sale of condensed or evaporated milk to which has been added, blended, or compounded any fats or oils other than milk fats.

New York prohibits the manufacture and sale of condensed or evaporated milk, etc., to which has been added any fats or oils other than milk fats in semblance of milk or condensed milk.

Wisconsin prohibits the manufacture or sale of condensed or evaporated milk or any other derivatives of milk to which has been added any fat or oil other than milk fat.

Florida prohibits the manufacture or sale of condensed or evaporated milk which is not made of pure milk from which no part of the cream has been removed and which does not contain specified percentages of milk solids and butter fat.

Maryland laws prohibit the manufacture or sale of condensed, evaporated, or preserved milk which is not manufactured from pure milk from which no part of the cream has been removed and which does not have certain high specified percentages of milk solids and butter fat.

Ohio prohibits the manufacture or sale of condensed milk which is not made from whole milk and which does not have a solid content equivalent to 12 per cent in whole milk and a butter-fat content equivalent to 3 per cent.

California: Imitation milk is defined to be any mixture or compound made of milk, skimmed milk, or any semblance thereof to which has been added any edible oil or fat other than natural milk fat.

Oregon places substantially the same restrictions upon the manufacture and use of milk as California.

Utah essentially the same.

They recognize that while it is injurious, it is worse than that, in that it is destroying the dairy interests of the State of Washington, as it was destroying the dairy interests of the State of Wisconsin, and that in a few years they will be in the same condition as was this country with filled cheese when there was no foreign market for American cheese.

During the eighties and early nineties skimmed-milk cheese was largely made, and filled cheese came later to be a prominent feature, and these products exported abroad practically ruined the American cheese industry, so much so that American cheese of the best quality had to be shipped from Montreal as Canadian cheese in order to find a market abroad.

FILLED MILK EXPORTED.

The New York Globe of last fall stated that "there were persistent rumors of filled or adulterated milk being sold at down-town districts of that city. The food department prosecuted one of the largest wholesale-grocery houses in New York for selling that class of milk and they were fined $3,000. While innocent themselves, they had bought milk from the Rogers Milk Corporation, which also puts out a pure product, and food officials charged that the milk fat had been removed from the product and that in its place a vegetable oil had been substituted, so that the mixture consisted of a product fraudulently labeled compound or skimmed milk and foreign fat.

Another case was a shipment of 1,900 cases of condensed milk to Austria, under date of March 15, 1922, which was purchased from the Danish Pride Milk Products Co. by a company and it was labeled "This can contains pure cow's milk evaporated to a consistency of plain condensed milk and is guaranteed by the manufacturer." Examination in Austria showed it to be evaporated filled milk containing coconut oil in spite of the fact that it was labeled as "pure cow's milk evaporated." It bore the label of "Pantry Brand," but beneath these labels, in many cases, was to be found another label, "Enzo Brand."

This is not an innocent sale, for records would indicate that the product had been previously sold to another New York corporation and later rejected because it was misrepresented.

There are court records here of an instance where 1,000 cases of this milk were sold and shipped abroad to Germany, labeled as pure evaporated milk, and it was discovered after it reached Germany that it was this special product from which all the butter fat had been extracted and coconut oil had replaced it. It was then returned to this country, and those who shipped it from this country paid a heavy fine for the shipment.

In the same way, another firm in New York City was prosecuted for selling the product as pure evaporated milk when it was known to be skimmed milk to which vegetable fats had been added; and that firm paid a fine, I think, of $3,000. The commissioner of public health in New York, now elected as Senator from New York, Doctor COPELAND, has taken steps to prohibit the sale of filled milk within the cities of New York and Brooklyn, and is making war against it, and is determined that it shall not be sold.

I feel that it is our duty to enact this bill into law, so that the farmers and dairymen of this country shall be protected. If Senators will examine the report that accompanies this bill, I think they will find the facts pretty fully set forth; but at present I will not talk longer on the bill. The Senator from Ohio [Mr. WILLIS], I understand, desires to address the Senate in regard to it.

Mr. WILLIS. Mr. President, it is with very great regret that I have to say that I shall be compelled to vote against the motion made by the Senator from North Dakota.

As the Senator knows, I am very friendly to this bill. I have had a very humble part in bringing it to its present state. I believe it ought to be passed. I may say in passing that if the Senate had the rules that it ought to have to enable a majority of the Senate to transact business, there is ample time for the consideration of this bill as well as of the shipping bill and other measures that ought to be acted upon before adjournment; but here is the situation which confronts us:

The shipping bill has been before the country and before the Congress for a long time. The Senator from Washington in charge of the bill has been very generous in yielding to everybody—not too generous, I think, but he has not sought to shut out other legislation. Now, however, we are approaching the close of the session. I think the country expects that the Senate will vote on the shipping bill. There are some things in it that I do not like, and there are more things that somebody else may not like, and other features that other Senators may like. At all events, it is a matter upon which the Senate ought to vote. To me it is perfectly apparent that if this bill is taken up at this time we shall probably get into such a legislative jam that neither bill will be voted upon.

For that reason, Mr. President, without going into a detailed discussion of the bill, I wish to state that I am in favor of the bill which the Senator from North Dakota seeks to bring up. I believe it is justified on the same basis on which we have passed the pure food laws, and that we will, if we get to a vote, pass the truth in fabrics bill, that the people are entitled to know what it is that they are buying; but I very much fear that if we bring up the bill we will not get to a final vote on it, and certainly we will not get to a final vote on the shipping bill. For that reason I shall feel compelled to vote against the motion made by my friend from North Dakota.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. President, I am in favor of the bill that the Senator from North Dakota has moved to take up. I feel satisfied that we have an abundance of time to pass the bill after the shipping bill is disposed of. There is no reason in the world why the Senate at this session should not vote upon these various measures. If this motion prevails, those who are opposed to the filled milk bill—and I understand that there are quite a number of Senators who are opposed to it—will feel justified, of course, in taking up a great deal of time, not in a way to delay that bill, but, of course, to delay the shipping bill.

As the Senator from North Dakota says, I have tried to arrange matters so that this bill could be taken up. I had hoped that the morning hour last Saturday could have been given to this bill. I understood that that would be done, but it was not done.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President, is it not true that the Senator offered to give an hour and a half this morning to the consideration of this bill?

Mr. JONES of Washington. Yes; I offered to give an hour and a half to its consideration.

Now, Mr. President, I move to lay on the table the motion of the Senator from North Dakota; and pending that I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will call the roll.

The roll was called, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Ball	Frelinghuysen	McKellar	Sheppard
Bayard	George	McKinley	Shields
Borah	Glass	McLean	Shortridge

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Eighty-seven Senators having answered to their names, there is a quorum present.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. President, I ask for the yeas and nays on the motion.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is upon the motion of the Senator from Washington [Mr. JONES] to lay on the table the motion made by the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. LADD] to take up for consideration H. R. 8086, known as the filled milk bill. The yeas and nays have been ordered.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. Mr. President, I want to state my position——

Mr. JONES of Washington. The question is not debatable.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will call the roll.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator will state his inquiry.

Mr. HARRISON. Is it in order at this time to request the Senator from Washington not to object to Senators discussing the merits of these two bills?

Mr. JONES of Washington. I ask for the regular order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The regular order has been called for. The Secretary will call the roll.

The yeas and nays were taken.

Mr. CURTIS. I desire to announce that the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. ELKINS] is paired with the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. SIMMONS].

Mr. WATSON (after having voted in the affirmative). I transfer my pair with the senior Senator from Mississippi [Mr. WILLIAMS] to the senior Senator from Connecticut [Mr. BRANDEGEE] and permit my vote to stand.

Mr. WILLIS (after having voted in the affirmative). I am paired with my colleague [Mr. POMERENE], and not knowing how he would vote, in his absence I will be compelled to withdraw my vote.

The result was announced—yeas 42, nays 44, as follows:

YEAS—42.

So the Senate refused to lay Mr. LADD'S motion on the table.

Mr. OWEN obtained the floor.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. President, I ask the Senator from Oklahoma to yield to me for a moment or two to say something in regard to the motion just voted on.

Mr. OWEN. I yield.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. President, I want to make a statement in regard to the vote I have just cast. The question being on a motion to lay on the table, of course I had no opportunity to say a word before the vote was taken. I want to let the RECORD show what I know we already know, that the vote on the filled milk bill was merely an incident in connection with the action of the Senate. The real issue was the displacing of the shipping bill.

I am opposed to the shipping bill, and I am opposed to the filled milk bill. I think they are both bad bills, and both based on the same principle. The purpose of one is to give a subsidy out of the Treasury to develop industry, and I am opposed to that in principle. The object behind the other is to use the power of legislation to destroy one industry in order that another industry may have a larger field in which to operate its business.

So, of course, when I had two bad bills before me, it was somewhat difficult for me to determine what to do; but realizing, of course, that if the filled milk bill got the right of way it would pass, notwithstanding my objection, I voted in favor of the motion to lay on the table.

I think the line of legislation involved in this filled milk bill is bad. It is nothing new with me. From the beginning of my service in Congress—for 20 years—I have voted against oleomargarine bills, not that I did not want regulation, but because I believed such legislation was an effort to tax one food product out of existence in order that another food product might have a wider market. I believed that the tax and the impediments laid on oleomargarine were discriminations against the poor man's food in favor of those who could pay higher prices, and, oleomargarine being a pure-food product, I have never seen why the poor man, who has not the opportunity and the money to buy Elgin butter, should not be allowed to buy the next best thing he could get, untaxed and colored to suit his palate. I regard this pending filled milk bill as exactly in that category.

If it was deleterious to life or health, the laws which are now on the statute books would prevent its sale. Of course I know it is not as good a food product as butter, but a great many people can not buy butter and they can buy skimmed milk mixed with vegetable oil, which to some extent satisfies their palate. Apparently it is not deleterious to health and the proof of that is that it is not excluded. If it was deleterious to health, the present laws would exclude it. If it is not, I am not going to vote for a class of bills that would lay an embargo on what the very poor of the country have got to eat. That is the reason why I am opposed to the bill.

On the other hand, I want to say this about the shipping bill: I have never voted for a subsidy of any kind. I have never voted for a protective tariff on any article. I have never voted for any other subsidy in that class of legislation and I do not believe in it. I am opposed to the present shipping bill for that reason, although I should be very much delighted if the great shipping of the country could be developed and made to function along legislative lines for which I could afford to vote.

But I am opposed to the defeat of the shipping bill by indirection. There are certain great principles that may be involved in votes in the Senate where human rights and human liberty and fundamental principles of our Government are at stake when I would not hesitate for a moment to use any legislative power I possess to prevent the passage of a bill. But when it comes down merely to a question of dollars, when it is purely an economic question, I think the majority have a right to register their position. Last summer I was very much opposed to the tariff bill. I thought it was a radically bad bill, but after we had properly presented our position to the country and allowed the country to know our position in the matter, we allowed the majority party to pass the bill.

It could have been held here without any question until this good hour if we had desired to filibuster it to death, but it was an economic measure, and, in my opinion, the majority had the right to determine what the country should do.

Let me say to the majority now, however, that if you pass the shipping bill it will come back to your door within a week after you have passed it. I do not believe it will function. I do not believe it will produce the result you expect. I believe it will be a disappointment to the country. I believe it is fundamentally wrong. But being a purely economic question, so far as I am concerned, I am willing to let you vote on it. Of course, I represent nobody in this statement except myself, as is shown by the vote which has just been cast, but I want the RECORD to show my position. When the shipping bill has had a reasonable discussion I am willing to take a vote on it. I think it will be a mistake to pass it, but the majority have the right to register the result of their conclusions, because they are a majority of the Congress. I think you have had a reaction against your own measure by your own people to-day, and that you will have the same reaction if you pass the shipping bill, but I think the way to find out is to give an opportunity for a vote after reasonable debate, and if you can then command a majority you are entitled to have the will of the majority placed on the statute books. Therefore I voted as I did a moment ago.

I thank the Senator from Oklahoma for his courtesy in allowing me to make the statement.

BELLEAU WOOD MEMORIAL ASSOCIATION.

Mr. OVERMAN. Mr. President, will the Senator from Oklahoma yield to me to submit a report?

Mr. OWEN. I yield if it will take no time.

Mr. OVERMAN. I think it will take only a moment. From the Committee on the Judiciary I report back favorably with an amendment the bill (S. 4552) to incorporate the Belleau Wood Memorial Association, and I submit a report (No. 1166) thereon.

The bill provides for a charter for the good women of the country who have organized themselves together and raised the money to purchase Belleau Wood and to make permanent that battle field, consecrated by the lives of 3,000 brave American boys. They have secured an option on the property. The option expires in March. The charter which they have secured from one of the States is not sufficient to enable them to obtain a charter in France, as they are advised by attorneys.

I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of the bill granting them a charter in order that they may purchase the property. They have the money now on hand, and I hope the measure may be passed at once.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from North Carolina?

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

The amendment of the committee was to strike out lines 11 and 12, on page 1, and lines 1 to 11, inclusive, on page 2, and to insert:

SEC. 2. That the purposes of this corporation shall be: (a) To acquire and maintain the whole or any portion of Belleau Wood, Department of Aisne, France, for memorial purposes; (b) to erect such buildings and monuments and establish such institutions thereon as it may deem appropriate as a memorial to the men of the American Expeditionary Forces who participated in the Battle of Belleau Wood, France, and vicinity during the World War; (c) to solicit and obtain members; (d) to charge and collect membership dues and to solicit and receive contributions of money to be devoted to carrying out such purposes; and (e) to care for and maintain such memorial.

So as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That Ira E. Bennett, Tasker H. Bliss, Nathalie Boynton, Marie Moore Forrest, Elizabeth Van Rensselaer Frazer, James E. Freeman, Margaret Overman Gregory, Harry V. Haynes, John A. LeJeune, A. L. McClellan, Wendell C. Neville, Frank B. Noyes, John Barton Payne, Augusta Reath, Alice Hay Wadsworth, John Walsh, and their associates and successors, are hereby created a body corporate by the name of "Belleau Wood Memorial Association."

SEC. 2. That the purposes of this corporation shall be: (a) To acquire and maintain the whole or any portion of Belleau Wood, Department of Aisne, France, for memorial purposes; (b) to erect such buildings and monuments and establish such institutions thereon as it may deem appropriate as a memorial to the men of the American Expeditionary Forces who participated in the Battle of Belleau Wood, France, and vicinity during the World War; (c) to solicit and obtain members; (d) to charge and collect membership dues, and to solicit and receive contributions of money to be devoted to carrying out such purposes; and (e) to care for and maintain such memorial.

SEC. 3. That the corporation (a) shall have perpetual succession; (b) may sue and be sued; (c) may adopt a corporate seal and alter it at pleasure; (d) may adopt and alter by-laws not inconsistent with the Constitution and laws of the United States or of any State; (e) may establish and maintain offices for the conduct of its business; (f) may appoint officers and agents; (g) may choose a board of trustees consisting of not more than 15 persons nor less than 5 persons to conduct the business and exercise the powers of the corporation; (h) may acquire, by purchase, devise, bequest, gift, or otherwise, and hold, encumber, convey, or otherwise dispose of such real and personal property as may be necessary or appropriate for its corporate purposes, and especially the whole or any portion of Belleau Wood, Department of Aisne, France, to the extent that it may be or become consistent with or permitted by the laws of the French Republic; and (i) generally may do any and all lawful acts necessary or appropriate to carry out the purposes for which the corporation is created.

SEC. 4. That the Belleau Wood Memorial Association, a corporation heretofore incorporated under the laws of the District of Columbia, is authorized to transfer to the corporation created by this act all of its property, rights, and assets, and such corporation is authorized to receive all of such property, rights, and assets. Upon such transfer, such association shall thereby be dissolved, and such corporation shall be liable for all the obligations of and claims against such association, and all of such obligations and claims may be enforced against the corporation.

SEC. 5. That the corporation shall, on or before the 1st day of December in each year, transmit to Congress a report of its proceedings and activities for the preceding calendar year, including the full and complete statement of its receipts and expenditures. Such reports shall not be printed as public documents.

SEC. 6. That the right to alter, amend, or repeal this act at any time is hereby expressly reserved.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

PROPOSED INTERNATIONAL CONFERENCE.

Mr. OWEN. Mr. President, this morning I sent to the desk a Senate resolution, which I ask may be read.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will read as requested.

The reading clerk read the resolution (S. Res. 445), as follows:

Resolved, That the President of the United States is requested to invite all the nations of earth, whether they have adhered to the covenant of the league or not, to attend, in the city of Washington, United States of America, a three months' international economic conference for the promotion of international trade and understanding, and a conference for the establishment throughout the world of the territorial integrity and political independence of every nation, great and small, and the abolition of war.

Mr. OWEN. Mr. President, the time has come when the United States Senate should perform the duty of voicing throughout the world the doctrine of international justice, of international righteousness, and understanding, the doctrine upon which the peace of the world and the happiness of mankind must be based. If eventually, why not now?

The world is looking for the moral leadership of the one great disinterested, self-governing Nation.

The World War demonstrated the enormous physical power of the United States. It demonstrated its power to produce at high speed quantity and quality of munitions of war. It demonstrated the power of a peaceful democracy to organize for war. It demonstrated the power of our Republic financially, for without a quiver it raised forty thousand millions of dollars to finance the war and establish liberty and justice in the world. It demonstrated our unselfishness.

The statesmen of Europe are directly and indirectly appealing to America to point the path of peace and liberty. These appeals come from Great Britain, from Italy, from Belgium, from France, and from Germany.

From yesterday's press I clipped the following:

BRITISH LABORITES SEND APPEAL TO PRESIDENT—88 MEMBERS OF COMMONS ASK MR. HARDING TO SAVE EUROPE.

(By the Associated Press.)

LONDON, February 17.—Eighty-eight laborite members of the House of Commons have signed the following cablegram to President Harding:

"America, with Great Britain, unwittingly has made France's present destructive action possible. We appeal for American cooperation to-day as the one hope of saving Europe."

President Baltasar Brum, of Montevideo, Uruguay, on February 10, made public a plan for an association of American nations which the delegation of Uruguay is to lay before the Pan American Congress at Santiago, Chile, next month, an abstract of which I hereto attach as Exhibit A.

The substance of President Brum's proposal is that the American nations should have a Western Hemisphere association to encourage the idea that international relations are founded upon the principles of justice and solidarity, regardless of differences of race, customs, or religion, to intensify inter-American friendship and friendly relations with other countries of the world, and to solve by arbitration international conflicts and preserve the sovereignty and territorial integrity of every nation.

On Saturday, February 10, I submitted to the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD House Resolution No. 16 of the Legislature of Oklahoma, as follows:

Whereas it is made known by the American press that conditions in continental Europe grow daily worse; that nations, great and small, are tottering, unable to pay expenses; and

Whereas suffering among the people is increasing, famine threatens here and there, unemployment is growing, and a spirit of suicidal desperation has settled down over half the world; and

Whereas if step follows step and a new world war results this conflict by comparison will bleach the red horror of the last one, sweeping us along with the rest; and

Whereas the time to avert the European crisis is before it leads to a new conflict of nations: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the House of Representatives of the Ninth Legislature of the State of Oklahoma, That we memoralize the Congress of the United States to give its sympathetic consideration to the following basic plan for a return to world sanity:

First. That the United States must assume the leadership;

Second. That at the first possible opening President Harding should call a conference of the leading World War powers;

Third. That the program at this conference should be in two sections, economic problems and limitation of armaments;

Fourth. That instantly the conference is called to order America's spokesman should lay before the assembly some specific plan of world rehabilitation which might involve an international moratorium on war debts and an international loan to the worst stricken nations; and be it further

Resolved, That a copy of this resolution be sent to each Member of the Oklahoma delegation in Congress.

Adopted by the house of representatives this the 24th day of January, 1923.

CHAS. S. BRICE,
Speaker pro tempore of the House of Representatives.

This resolution from Oklahoma might be regarded as a motion in the assembly of nations and to all mankind calling for intelligent, concrete action, and a conference to promote commerce and end war. I ask the Senate of the United States to consider this proposal coming from the heart of America, from a legislature just elected by the people, a body of representatives who know and feel what the sentiment of the people is.

The proposal for action is timely. It is entitled to serious consideration and to a decision.

The Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH] on January 29 voiced from the State of Idaho in Senate Resolution 426 a conception similar to that which appeared in the Oklahoma Legislature. I am in accord with the Senator from Idaho, and would go still further concretely, directly, and simply. The time has come for action. The resolution of the Senator from Idaho represents the aspiration of the large majority of Americans.

On May 9, 1921, the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LA FOLLETTE] introduced Senate Resolution 74, protesting against the United States cooperating to carry into effect and enforce the terms of the treaty of Versailles, on the ground that the treaty of Versailles was influenced too largely by revenge; that it was a betrayal of the promises of the United States made to the world and formally accepted by the Allies as the basis of the peace terms; that the Senate of the United States had refused to ratify it; that the people of the United States had indorsed the action of the Senate in objecting to the Versailles treaty.

The Senator from Wisconsin was reelected and renominated after this declaration by an overwhelming vote in Wisconsin. He represents also a very considerable element of public opinion in the United States.

Mr. President, the peoples of the world should no longer permit themselves to be put in danger of world war by the ambition, vanity, or self-sufficiency, or by the mere patriotism and physical courage of national leaders who demand the invasion of the sovereignty and territorial integrity of other nations on any ground, real or fanciful.

The chief reason the invasion of Germany by French leaders is objectionable is because it is a denial of these fundamental international principles and because the remedy of French invasion is worse than the disease of German evasion. The Germans ought to be made to pay the reparations due, and the world ought to require it, but the French invasion of Germany by military force is building up hostilities so intense that it may again produce a world war without obtaining the justice to which the French people are undoubtedly entitled. Senators should not be deterred from expressing their honest opinions by the unthinking charge that they are taking sides with Germany against France. The principles of international justice must be declared without respecting persons or nations. It has been said that "God is no respecter of persons," and justice and liberty are the divine principles through which the peace and happiness of mankind must be secured, and these principles must not be twisted by either hate or love of any nation, whether French or German.

It is well to remember that there ought always to be made a broad distinction between the people and those who govern the people. The people can hardly be held morally responsible for things done against their will and without their consent by those who govern them without their consent, and this is why the subjects of the former Teutonic imperialists are entitled to some consideration because their consent was not asked. Their opinions were enslaved and the people were driven by a brute military force organized to the last degree, which meant a summary death to any individual who dared refuse obedience.

How could the President of the United States have made clearer the distinction between the people who were subject and the rulers who subjected them without their consent in the Central Empires than he did in his address to the joint session of the two Houses of Congress January 8, 1918?

The President's address of January 8, 1918, was in answer to the desire of the spokesman of the Central Empires "to discuss the objects of the war and the possible bases of a general peace," and he spoke for the Entente Allies and all of them. He spoke expressly for the United States and for all the governments and peoples associated together against the Imperialists.

The President said in regard to this:

We (the associated nations) can not be separated in interests or divided in purpose. We stand together until the end. For such arrangements and covenants (the 14 points) we are willing to fight and to continue to fight until they are achieved.

The President said:

We have no jealousy of German greatness, and there is nothing in this program that impairs it. We grudge her no achievement or distinction of learning or of pacific enterprise such as have made her record very bright and very enviable. We do not wish to injure her or to block in any way her legitimate influence or power. We do not wish to fight her either with arms or with hostile arrangements of trade if she is willing to associate herself with us and the other peace-loving nations of the world in covenants of justice and law and fair dealing. We wish her only to accept a place of equality among the peoples of the world—the new world in which we now live—instead of a place of mastery.

President Wilson said further in this address:

An evident principle runs through the whole program I have outlined. It is the principle of justice to all peoples and nationalities and their right to live on equal terms of liberty and safety with one another, whether they be strong or weak. Unless this principle be made its foundation no part of the structure of international justice can stand. The people of the United States could act upon no other principle; and to the vindication of this principle they are ready to devote their lives, their honor, and everything that they possess. The moral climax of this the culminating and final war for human liberty has come, and they are ready to put their own strength, their own highest purpose, their own integrity and devotion to the test.

Who did the President speak for? He spoke for France, for Great Britain, for Italy—for the Allies as well as for the people of America—and the Allies adopted these principles, and on this declared basis the German leaders and the German people surrendered. Have we forgotten these 14 points? They are express covenants with Germany and the world. Can they ever be forgotten in international affairs? The 14 points were 14 explicit, contracted obligations. What are they?

1. Open covenants of peace. No private international understandings.

2. Freedom of the sea.

3. Removal of economic barriers. Equality of trade conditions.

4. Adequate guaranties to reduce national armaments to the lowest point consistent with domestic safety.

5. Absolutely impartial adjustment of all colonial claims, recognizing of equal right the sovereignty of the populations concerned with the equitable claims of governments whose title is to be determined.

6. The treatment of the Russian people—political independence and welcome into the society of free nations under institutions of her own choosing.

7. The evacuation and complete freedom of Belgium.

8. The restoration of Alsace-Lorraine to France.

9. The readjustment of the frontiers of Italy along clearly recognizable lines of nationality.

10. The freest opportunity of autonomous development of Austria-Hungary.

11. The evacuation of Rumania, Serbia, and Montenegro. The political and economic independence and territorial integrity of the several Balkan States.

12. The sovereignty to the Turkish portions of the Ottoman Empire, security to nationalities under Turkish rule, their autonomous development, and the opening of the Dardanelles.

13. The political and economic independence and territorial integrity of Poland inhabited by indisputably Polish populations.

14. A general association of nations must be formed under specific covenants for the purpose of affording mutual guaranties of political independence and territorial integrity to great and small States alike.

These are the covenants that the President of the United States declared "we (the Allies) are willing to fight for." Human liberty, international justice—this was the moral climax of the war. These were the objects put in concrete form for which we fought.

The authorities of the British Empire, the leaders of France, of Italy, of Japan accepted the doctrine laid down by Woodrow Wilson. These are the things for which America sacrificed. These are the things for which our American soldiers died. They did not lay down their lives to establish the principles of injustice, of territorial aggrandizement, of military ambition, or to support the petty vanities of any human leadership.

These are the pledges on which as a solemn contract the Germans laid down their arms and the Prussian military dynasty forever.

Mr. President, it is said that all legislation is a matter of compromise, and the treaty of Versailles was a matter of compromise. It has been, however, demonstrated that Woodrow Wilson used every ounce of his energy—social, physical, and moral—to get these 14 contracted terms and points recognized. If he did not succeed absolutely and completely, it was not because he did not go to the utmost limit of his powers. Perhaps he might have succeeded if he had had the whole-hearted support and understanding of all the American leaders. Unhappily, party divisions, party ambitions, party prejudices, perhaps, seriously weakened his efforts and did the world great injury.

I am sure that he believed that time would correct the failure of the Versailles treaty to fully meet the obligations to the world under the 14 points, such as self-government to the people of Shantung, to the people of Ireland, to the people of Egypt, and the matter of reparations. The Shantung controversy has settled itself. The Irish people have been given self-government. Large concessions have already been made to the people of Egypt, and various concessions have been made in the reparations matter; so that his foresight and hope have not been entirely disappointed nor without reason.

The doctrine of the right to rule without the consent of the governed has been almost entirely abandoned throughout the world. The doctrine of democracy, the right of the people to govern themselves, the doctrine of liberty, of the sovereignty of the people, their right to political independence and territorial integrity, is now a generally accepted doctrine throughout the world. The military autocracies have been annihilated.

Woodrow Wilson made a gigantic effort to convince the American people of the importance of accepting the Versailles treaty and the covenant of the league. He pointed out in many speeches throughout the country how the entry of the United States into this treaty, into the league, would give stability to the nations of the world; would bring disarmament, international peace, and a rapid restoration of the productive powers of mankind under the happy influence of complete international peace terms; that the Senate of the United States had refused serious and prolonged illness, for he was not physically strong when he entered upon the duties of the Chief Executive, and only by the most careful daily effort had he been able to keep himself equal to his task. In the fall of 1919 he was no longer physically able to carry on this contest. He was as much a martyr to the public service as any soldier that ever fell in battle, and history will in due time accord him the high place which his very great services justify.

Mr. President, America owes a duty to the world and to its own future to take the invited initiative in organizing the world to recognize the principles of international justice, liberty, and good understanding, and of the right of every nation, great or small, to territorial integrity and political independence.

WHAT ARE THE OBJECTIONS?

Certainly, Mr. President, there can be no objection to the United States giving voice to these principles in which we all unanimously believe, and a formal declaration would go far to strengthen these political doctrines throughout the world.

Certainly our entry into the League of Nations, with such reservations as Congress might see fit, would wonderfully stimulate the great doctrines of liberty and international justice set forth in the covenant of the league.

THE ELECTION OF 1920.

Mr. President, there are those who imagine that the election of 1920, and there are those who have carried on a propaganda to the effect that the election of 1920, was a mandate from the American people not to enter the League of Nations. Nothing could be more absurd or so injurious to the world's interest as this pretension. If this grotesque notion that the American people voted against the League of Nations in the election of 1920 prevails it would mean the abandonment by America of the moral leadership of mankind.

The election of 1920 meant nothing of the kind. Both parties were committed to the covenant of the League of Nations. The Democrats voted for it without reservations and with reservations. The Republican Senators voted for it with reservations and some without reservations, and only a negligible number voted against it. The Democratic Party made it an issue in the campaign of 1920 and made the following declaration:

> The Democratic Party favors the League of Nations as the surest, if not the only, practicable means of maintaining the peace of the world and terminating the insufferable burden of great military and naval establishments.
> It was upon this basis that the President of the United States, in prearrangement with our allies, consented to a suspension of hostilities against the Imperial German Government; the armistice was granted and a treaty of peace negotiated upon the definite assurance to Germany, as well as to the powers pitted against Germany, that "a general association of nations must be formed, under specific covenants, for the purpose of affording mutual guaranties of political independence and territorial integrity to great and small States alike."

Upon this platform the Democratic candidate received 9,147,350 votes.

The Republican Party platform of 1920 made the following declaration with regard to the League of Nations:

> The Republican Party stands for agreement among the nations to preserve the peace of the world. We believe that such an international association must be based upon international justice and must provide methods which shall maintain the rule of public right by the development of law and the decision of impartial courts and which shall secure instant and general international conference whenever peace shall be threatened by political action, so that the nations pledged to do and insist upon what is just and fair may exercise their influence and power for the prevention of war.
> We believe that all this can be done without the compromise of national independence, without depriving the people of the United States in advance of the right to determine for themselves what is just and fair when the occasion arises, and without involving them as participants and not as peacemakers in a multitude of quarrels the merits of which they are unable to judge.

It criticizes the covenant of the league as drawn and the insistence of the President in favor of the covenant without amendment; and in regard to the Republican Senate which had voted to adopt the covenant of the league with reservations the Republican platform said:

> We approve their conduct and honor their courage and fidelity, and we pledge the coming Republican administration to such agreements with the other nations of the world as shall meet the full duty of America to civilization and humanity in accordance with American ideals and without surrendering the right of the American people to exercise its judgment and its power in favor of justice and peace.

As far as the public was concerned there was little or no difference between the attitude of this Republican platform and the Democratic platform, because the Democratic platform had no intention whatever to deprive the people of the United States "to determine for themselves what is just and fair" or to involve them in a multitude of quarrels, as stated in the Republican platform. The Democratic platform stated in terms, with regard to the League of Nations, that—

The President repeatedly has declared, and this convention reaffirms, that all our duties and obligations as a member of the league must be fulfilled in strict conformity with the Constitution of the United States, embodied in which is the fundamental requirement of declaratory action by the Congress before this Nation may become a participant in any war.

When on November 19, 1919 (CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, p. 8802), Mr. LODGE submitted the question of ratifying the covenant of the league with certain reservations, 41 Senators, including myself, voted for it, including nearly all the Republican Senators—

Ball	Frelinghuysen	McCumber	Spencer
Calder	Hale	McLean	Sterling
Capper	Harding	McNary	Sutherland
Colt	Jones, Wash.	New	Townsend
Cummins	Kellogg	Newberry	Wadsworth
Curtis	Kenyon	Page	Warren
Dillingham	Keyes	Penrose	Watson
Edge	Lenroot	Phipps
Elkins	Lodge	Smoot

and five Democrats. The following Republicans voted against the treaty with the reservations:

Borah	Gronna	McCumber	Sherman
Brandegee	Johnson	Moses
Fernald	Knox	Norris
France	La Follette	Poindexter

Some of these Republicans voted against it because they were opposed to the treaty on any ground whatever, such as Senators BORAH and JOHNSON of California, while others, including nearly all the Democrats, favored the treaty without these reservations, including all of the Democrats except five, and these Democrats were in favor of the treaty notwithstanding the reservations, so that the vote in the Senate of the United States was overwhelmingly in favor of the covenant of the league, with or without reservations.

Senator Harding, who was at that time a candidate for the Presidency, voted twice for the covenant of the league with reservations.

Nearly all the great Republican leaders were strenuously for the covenant of the League of Nations with or without reservations, for example:

Hon. William Howard Taft, formerly President, who was the president of the League to Enforce Peace, and now, by President Harding's appointment, Chief Justice of the United States.

Mr. Taft, in signed articles in the Public Ledger and in interviews and addresses, strongly advised the friends of the League of Nations to vote for Senator Harding as the best, if not the only hope, for our entry into the league, and in an article in the Public Ledger immediately following the election Mr. Chief Justice Taft said:

The enemies of the league will maintain that the general verdict is one completely adverse to any league, but this will not be the reasonable judgment of those who have followed Mr. Harding's promises in his speech of acceptance, in his speech of August 28, in his Des Moines speech, and in his Indianapolis speech.

Hon. Elihu Root, former member of the Cabinet, Secretary of State, stood for the league with the Lodge reservations.

Charles Evans Hughes, twice Governor of the State of New York and Justice of the Supreme Court, nominee for President, and at the present time Secretary of State under President Harding—the same.

Gen. Leonard Wood, who was a leading candidate for the Republican nomination for the Presidency, declared his—

Approval of the League of Nations with the Senate reservations—reservations which thoroughly Americanize it and leave America absolutely free and untrammeled to follow the only mandate she will ever accept—the mandate of American public opinion, the will of the American people.

Frank O. Lowden, twice Governor of Illinois, another leading candidate for the Republican nomination, stated in his primary campaign—

Another question is that of the League of Nations. I believe in the passage of the League of Nations covenant with reservations. I defend the action of Senators who insisted upon reservations to the charter submitted to them. * * * When the Republican Party is in power we shall, I hope, proceed to establish this machinery for adjusting international differences.

Herbert Hoover, whose friends were urging him for the Presidency, in the Public Ledger and the Chicago Daily News, said—

I stand earnestly for a League of Nations to minimize war, and, moreover, I stand for the league with alterations in the direction pointed by the Republican reservations.

And Herbert Hoover went so far as to say that—

The gravest peril to the cause of peace seems to me to be this, that JOHNSON and BORAH believe and are making the party and the country believe that they have made the issues and are dominating the campaign. If that false impression is allowed to go unchallenged, when they return to the Senate they will be able to draw to their side such Senate support as will enable them to block completely Senator Harding when, as President, he invites approval either of the existing league with reservations or—

And so forth. Vice President Coolidge on October 28 at Carnegie Hall, New York, said:

If the security of Europe is so intertwined with the Versailles treaty and the existing League of Nations that we can make the best progress by taking the good in that treaty and in that covenant and by excising or amending those things which are not consonant with American traditions and habits, surely the Republican platform permits of such a course; surely the public declarations of Senator Harding permit such a course.

And so many other of the Republican leaders, such as W. Murray Crane, of Massachusetts; William Allen White, of Kansas; Judge Nathan L. Miller, ex-Governor of New York; Lyman J. Gage, ex-Secretary of the Treasury; George W. Wickersham, ex-Attorney General; Charles D. Hilles, president of the National Republican Club; Oscar Straus, and so forth. It is perfectly notorious that the Republicans went before the people in 1920 with the assurance that Senator Harding was the best means by which to get effective favorable action on the League of Nations.

The Republican Party platform was framed in such a way as to prevent Senator JOHNSON, of California, or his supporters bringing about a party split, but the friends of the league believed in Harding and voted for him; and to say that the 7,000,000 plurality which he received was because President Harding was opposed to the League of Nations, for which he twice voted, is false and utterly preposterous.

There are other reasons which fully explain the 7,000,000 plurality which Harding received without the pretense that hostility to the league was the reason.

In the first place, the number of votes had been increased 50 per cent by the women's vote; and, therefore, whatever the plurality, it would be largely increased by this new vote.

In 1916 the voters in America were exceedingly opposed to the entry of the United States into the war. The Democrats had made the campaign on the slogan "He kept us out of war," and on that slogan Woodrow Wilson received 9,129,606 votes against 6,286,214 in 1912, a gain of nearly 3,000,000 votes. This included the people who by descent or affiliation were sympathetic with the German, Austrian, Bulgarian, or Turkish people, the pacifists, and many of the socialists, and all those who wanted to keep out of war.

When Woodrow Wilson led us into war, as he was compelled to do by public opinion, these citizens turned from the support of the Democratic ticket like a shoal of herring, and the Republicans carried both the House and Senate in 1918.

The preelection letter of Woodrow Wilson in 1918 alienated many progressive Republicans, energized the Republican Party, and laid the foundation for the solidarity of all Republicans in 1920.

Many independents and Democrats, as well as progressive Republicans and people of no particular party activity, were incensed by the unavoidable annoyances of war activities, for example:

(a) The selective draft act called 10,000,000 men of all political complexions on June 5, 1917, and left hundreds of thousands of grievances.

(b) The Council of National Defense, necessary as it was, was organized down to the crossroads and offended hundreds of thousands.

(c) The antisedition act, with its spies, and so forth, a necessary act, nevertheless laid the foundation for a number of grievances against the party in power—the Democratic Party.

(d) The suppression of free speech, necessary in war to prevent the foolish from demoralizing our war activities, nevertheless offended thousands.

(e) The War Trade Board interfered with trade and commerce in innumerable ways and left hundreds of thousands offended.

(f) The War Industries Board interfered in all sorts of ways with the industrial life of America—very necessary in time of war and commendable in the highest degree. Unnumbered grievances nevertheless were incited by the action of the War Industries Board.

(g) The food control under Hoover and fuel control under Garfield offended millions of the people. It mattered not if Hoover and Garfield were Republicans. The offense was committed by the Democratic administration and the grievance was against the Democratic Party.

(h) Priority orders on the railroads and embargoes on goods and gold offended hundreds of thousands of people.

(i) The Government control of railroads, the Government control of the telegraph and cable, the Government control of the telephones, the preferential treatment of military and naval business in men, materials, and transports over civilian business offended thousands.

(j) The commandeering of men and material and outbidding civilians for labor and goods required for war broke up peacetime commercial standards and offended thousands.

(k) The high taxes of war, the excess taxes, the surplus taxes, and the methods of revenue collection and administration annoyed and incensed many.

(l) Necessarily the administration of war is autocratic even in a democracy and thousands were offended by this cause.

On top of all these things there was a resolute and tremendous propaganda carried on against Woodrow Wilson and his administration, due, of course, in part to these causes which are enumerated.

Then followed Wilson's physical illness and more or less Democratic demoralization and a serious discontent within the ranks of the Democratic leadership.

It was all of these things combined that led to Harding's very great plurality, not because of American hostility to the League of Nations.

The campaign of 1920 was carried on on the Republican slogan of so-called "anti-Wilsonism" and "we want a change." The American people wanted to get a change from the autocratic bureaucracy of war to the usual and more democratic processes of peace, and the election of 1920 reflected this sentiment.

But the American people, the overwhelming majority of the American people, believed in the principles of progressive democracy. Nearly all the Democrats are progressive and over half of the Republican citizens are progressive and have been for years, as was shown in the election of 1912 when Roosevelt received 4,126,020 votes and the lovable, genial Taft only 3,483,922. The American people are progressive, and they wish to have a progressive Government. This was most clearly indicated in the election of 1922 when so many stand-pat, conservative Republicans were defeated and progressive Republicans and Democrats sent to the House of Representatives and the Senate by that election.

In Oklahoma not less than 75,000 Republicans voted the Democratic ticket in 1922.

The people of America are not altogether blind party followers, but to a large extent the people regard political parties as a means by which to make effective their will. The time has come when Congress and the Senate should voice the aspirations of America and of mankind for international liberty, international justice, international righteousness. If it did nothing more than express its opinion in an intelligible form it would probably suffice.

But, Mr. President, America should discharge its full responsibility before God and before man and call the leaders of the world together in Washington for an economic and political conference to complete the work of overthrowing militarism already so largely accomplished. It was a splendid thing, in pursuance of this great advance, which President Harding and Secretary of State Charles Evans Hughes accomplished in bringing about the four treaties limiting naval armament. It had my heartfelt approval because it was a fine step forward.

It is time to take another step forward.

It is time for President Harding to fulfill his promises to America.

It is time for the Republican Party to meet its promises of 1920 to America with regard to international peace.

Let us not be content to be silent and allow the days to pass by while another world war is being bred in Europe. It is our duty to Europe, as well as to our own people, to speak and to give the world a forum in which to speak, and the nations of the earth, when assembled in Washington City, in a favorable atmosphere, comparatively free from intrigue, will be able to give voice to the aspirations of the human heart, to the aspirations implanted in the soul of man by the Master Maker of men. It would be another Pentecost.

America will then be able to fulfill the high destiny for which she has through the last century been slowly and surely prepared.

Mr. President, our responsibility in this matter demands action.

America already has the financial and commercial leadership of the world and by equipment is the only great Nation capable of assuming the moral leadership of mankind and leading peacefully the way to international liberty, international understanding, international justice, international prosperity, and happiness.

That is all I desire to say on the resolution at this time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. PEPPER in the chair). The resolution will lie on the table and be printed.

POWER OF THE SUPREME COURT.

Mr. OWEN. Mr. President, on Saturday last I submitted some observations with regard to the duty of Congress, in connection with the merchant marine bill, to strike out or amend section 711. Section 711 declares that—

> If any provision of this act or the application thereof to any person or circumstance is held invalid, the validity of the remainder of the act and of the application thereof to other persons and circumstances, shall not be affected thereby.

I objected to that form, to that language, to that meaning, because I think that the Congress of the United States is charged with the duty, under the oath of office of Members, to ascertain the constitutionality of an act before passing it.

I will not vote for any bill on this floor which violates the Constitution of the United States in the slightest particular, if I know it, and I think I have sufficient intelligence, when matters are debated carefully and thoroughly in this body, to know when they are violative of the Constitution of the United States.

Gentlemen rose on the other side and thought they made a convincing argument because they said that at some time in the past Congress had passed some act which was held to be unconstitutional, and one case was cited of an act which I thought was obviously unconstitutional. But that argument is of no force whatever, because the people of the United States can hold Congress to account as a matter of policy. I demonstrated beyond the possibility of a doubt in the mind of a man whose brain is sound, who is willing to think, who is willing to examine the record, that Congress has the power, under the Constitution of the United States, to make such exceptions and such regulations on the appellate powers of the Supreme Court as to prevent the Supreme Court from nullifying acts of Congress, or assuming to declare questions of great national policy. The power exists.

The Senator from Minnesota [Mr. KELLOGG] said that he had not time to answer the address which I delivered, so he would content himself with making a protest. I confess he did not answer it. He made a protest, and in his protest he charged me with assaulting the Supreme Court. Because I stand here for the Constitution of the United States, I am to be branded as an enemy of the Supreme Court, a court to which I always pay the highest tribute of praise and respect.

He said that he listened with surprise and regret to an assault made upon the judiciary of the United States. There was no assault made. The Senator had no right to say that. He violated the amenities of debate in saying it. He violated the good order of the Senate in saying it. He has no right to impute to a Senator who has confined himself to legitimate debate that he is making any assault on the Supreme Court. Such a charge is to stigmatize the Senator against whom it is directed.

Let us analyze what the Senator from Minnesota said.

Mr. KING. Will the Senator yield?

Mr. OWEN. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. KING. I did not hear the debate to which the Senator refers, but may we not infer, from the language to which the Senator just called our attention, which came from the Senator from Minnesota, that he rather meant that the attitude of the Senator from Oklahoma was an assault upon the accepted view of lawyers particularly, and the American people generally, namely, that the Supreme Court has the exclusive power to determine the constitutionality of an act, and that the words "assault upon the Supreme Court" meant rather an assault upon the interpretation which has been placed heretofore by lawyers and by the people upon the tripartite division of powers? Does not the Senator think that is what the Senator from Minnesota had in mind, rather than any personal aspersion upon the Senator from Oklahoma?

Mr. OWEN. The Senator from Minnesota is a trained lawyer; he is a highly educated man, and I assume that when a gentleman with his learning and with his training uses language he knows what he is talking about in the use of language, if he does not know what he is talking about in the more important matter which I was discussing; and I think he did not know what he was talking about; in fact, I know that he does not know what he is talking about. The Senator from Minnesota said:

> Should we take from the Supreme Court the power to declare a law which was passed in violation of the fundamental law of the land to be unconstitutional, we should place all the liberties of the American people in the hands of one body, and there would be no Constitution of the United States left.

In other words, the people of the United States can not afford to trust the Senate of the United States, the House of Representatives of the United States, the President of the United States; nor can they afford to trust themselves, forgetting that if Congress makes a mistake the people can correct it by sending new servants here to represent them on the floors of the two Houses.

Such an argument as that is obviously without any force whatever. It ought not to come from the lips of a sophomore in a law school, much less from those of a lawyer who is trained in his profession.

I challenge the Senator from Minnesota to answer the argument I made. He can not answer it and stand before a forum of the American people, or at the bar of men with sound minds and sound judgment, and defend himself in it.

I showed at great length what the powers of Congress were. I showed that those powers had been passed on a number of times by the Supreme Court itself, sustaining the position which I took with regard to the power of Congress. It is not a question of power; it is a question of policy; it is a question of expediency. I can respect the mind of a man who says he thinks it is expedient. I can not have any logical respect for the mind of a man who says the power does not exist, when it is written into the Constitution as plainly as words can write it, when it has been interpreted by the Supreme Court itself in the same way that I have interpreted the language. I challenge the Senator from Minnesota to make an intellectual reply to the argument which I have made as to the power. He can not do it.

I do not care a particle about the instruction to the boys going to the little law schools all over the country, who have been taught a falsehood with regard to the powers of our Constitution. I know where that teaching comes from. I know in whose interest it is framed, and it is not framed for the best interests of this Republic, and I will not stand for it. I challenge the Senator from Minnesota to answer my argument as to the power, and I tell him now before the country and before the Senate that he can not make an intellectual reply to it.

Having said so much, I call attention to another lawyer, a Member of this body, the senior Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH], who wrote an article with regard to this question in a way which is of great interest. The Senator from Idaho is willing to compromise on this matter; I am not. Nevertheless, his views are of interest, and he cites many cases, which I did not take the trouble to cite. Without reading, I ask that his article may be inserted in the RECORD in 8-point type.

There being no objection, the article was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

(By WILLIAM E. BORAH, United States Senator from Idaho.)

"The five-to-four decisions of our Supreme Court upon great constitutional questions are always a matter of deep regret—regret I suspect upon the part of the court and certainly upon the part of the public generally. These decisions seem to justify a want of respect for the decisions of that great tribunal and seem to breed an atmosphere of distrust in the solidity and worth of our Federal judicial system. They have given rise to more criticism of the court than any other one thing which I am able to recall. When a measure has passed the Congress and received the approval of the President it seems unreasonable that such a measure should be rejected by a decision in which no more than five out of nine judges concur in its unconstitutionality. In the last analysis it comes down to the proposition where one justice has the power to uphold or defeat the law; and in a celebrated case a change of view upon the part of the one judge resulted in holding the law constitutional upon one occasion and unconstitutional upon another. It gives to the whole proceeding an element of chance. Nothing outside of actual misconduct could be more calculated, in my opinion, to detract from the dignity and prestige of the court or more likely to undermine it in the opinion of the American people.

LAMENTABLE LACK OF HARMONY.

"A late Federal judge who had seen long service, speaking of these five-to-four decisions, said: 'It is unfortunate that recently there has been a lamentable lack of harmony in the decisions rendered in many important cases, the opinions of five members prevailing over the adverse opinions of four. Judgments so rendered can not command the universal respect which should be accorded to judgments of the highest court in the Nation; and it is worth while for the lawyers of the United States to consider whether a practicable remedy for such discord may not be discovered and recommended to Congress. Where the consequences are of such grave importance, the final determination of the court of last resort ought to be rendered with such an assurance that the right of the matter has been ascertained and declared, that all fair-minded people may accept the result with good will and without any impairment of confidence in the court.'

"During the last 30 years there have been some forty-odd exceedingly important cases determined in the Supreme Court by decisions of five to four. Not all of them, of course, were cases involving constitutional questions, but some of the most important turned upon the constitutionality of either State or national statutes.

"It may be of interest to recall some of the five-to-four decisions. The first to which I make reference is that of the 'slaughterhouse case (16 Wall.), involving a construction of the thirteenth, fourteenth, and fifteenth amendments. Chief Justice Chase and Justices Field, Bradley, and Swayne earnestly dissented from the decision of the court upholding the State law, claiming that the decision was radically wrong and would be fruitful of great evil.

UNDERMINING RESPECT FOR THE COURT.

"In 1895, after five days' argument by the most noted lawyers of the country, there was submitted for the decision of the court the income tax law. The court in the first instance declared the law constitutional. Upon reargument and a change of view upon the part of one justice the law was held unconstitutional by a vote of five to four (157 U. S. 429). The decision aroused discussion throughout the country and more pronounced criticisms of the court were heard than at any time since the Dred Scott decision. The ultimate result was the adoption of an amendment to the Constitution of the United States.

"Next we may recall the decision in the case of Lochner v. New York (177 U. S. 145). This was a State law (and if it is deemed wise to legislate upon this subject at all, the proposed measure should be broadened to include the constitutionality of State statutes) known as the '10-hour-day' law. The law was held void by a five-to-four decision. It again aroused a storm of protest, and the greater portion of the criticism went to this specific vice of pronouncing a State law unconstitutional by a bare majority.

"Next came the child-labor law, another five-to-four decision (247 U. S. 277).

"There can be no doubt that these decisions have in a measure undermined the great respect which our people should entertain for the Supreme Court. As said by the Federal judge quoted, judgments so rendered can not command the universal respect which should be accorded to the highest court in the Nation. I entertain no doubt, therefore, as to the wisdom of the policy disclosed in the bill which I have offered. When the law of a sovereign State is called in question or an act of Congress declared to be repugnant to the Constitution, neither the will of the people of the State nor the will of the people of the United States should be thwarted upon a decision rendered by a bare majority of the court, if there is any practicable and orderly way to avoid such result.

"This, of course, is not a new proposition. It is a subject which has had consideration from almost the beginning of our Government and at the hands of some of our most distinguished lawyers and statesmen. In 1823 a resolution was introduced in Congress proposing to require the concurrence of seven judges in any opinion concerning the validity of State or Federal legislation. In 1824 there were several similar proposals. A bill was reported by Martin Van Buren requiring the concurrence of seven judges out of ten and requiring each judge to record a separate opinion. In 1824 a Member from Kentucky introduced a resolution requiring that a certain number should concur before the court should hold a State statute unconstitutional. Henry Clay and Daniel Webster took part in the debate, but neither, so far as I have been able to ascertain, raised any question as to the constitutionality of the proposal. The debate seemed to indicate that both acknowledged the subject to be within the power of Congress and dealt with it solely as a question of policy.

AN ISSUE IN 1868.

"In January, 1868, a bill was reported to the House of Representatives and passed requiring two-thirds of the Supreme Court to invalidate a statute. There was an extended debate upon the subject. I do not myself regard this precedent as of very great moment. The bill was confessedly a bill to meet a political exigency, and was designated to protect specific questionable legislation. It was one of the unfortunate incidents of the reconstruction period. There were many things done in those days that, standing alone, I should not regard as of very much moment in the way of precedent. There is any amount of literature on the subject in law journals.

HAS CONGRESS THE POWER?

"The Constitution of the United States provides: 'In all cases affecting ambassadors, other public ministers and consuls, and those in which a State should be a party, the Supreme Court shall have original jurisdiction. In all other cases before mentioned the Supreme Court shall have appellate jurisdiction, both as to law and fact, with such exceptions and under such regulations as the Congress shall make.'

"Has the Congress under this provision of the Constitution the power to prescribe the number of judges which shall concur before a statute shall be declared unconstitutional? From the earliest days of the Republic Congress has determined not only the number of justices but also the number which shall constitute a quorum. The act of 1789 contains such a provision, and that provision is still in the law, providing that six justices shall constitute a quorum. Congress has also provided for the court's adjournment in case of no quorum. It has given to less than a quorum the power to make necessary orders touching a pending case.

"The 'judicial power' of the United States is vested in one Supreme Court and such inferior courts as the Congress may create. That 'judicial power,' it will be readily conceded, can not be invaded by the legislative branch of the Government. But the line which separates the appellate jurisdiction of the court under proper 'regulations' from an unwarranted invasion of the 'judicial power' is not at all times clear and distinct. Is the Congress invading the 'judicial power' when it declares the number of justices required to constitute a quorum? I think not. Is it derogating from the 'judicial power' when it provides by law that less than a quorum shall be authorized to do certain things? It would seem not. Is the power to grant certain writs, as provided by statute, by one justice an invasion of the 'judicial power'?

"In other words, may we not provide under the scope of 'regulations' touching the appellate jurisdiction that before an act of Congress shall be declared void at least seven judges shall concur? It seems to me that we have that power. If we have the power, it is perfectly clear that we should use it. Unless we do make provision of this nature we shall have to meet the situation after it becomes more serious. We have already amended the Constitution once because of a five-to-four decision. There is another amendment now under consideration being urged by reason of a five-to-four decision. It is certainly wiser, if we are authorized by the Constitution to do so, to deal with the subject by statute rather than to be meeting it by constitutional amendments.

"The regret is often expressed in these days that there seems to be growing up in this country a bitter and settled antagonism to our supreme judicial tribunal—not merely criticism of its decisions but antagonism to it as an institution. I do not believe there is any pronounced antagonism upon the part of the people generally—few, very few, comparatively speaking, hold any such feeling. I entertain the belief that American institutions are safe in the keeping and securely imbedded in the respect of the great mass of the American people. The disregard of the fundamental principles of constitutional government during the last few years has been the disregard of those in political place, whose peculiar and sworn duty it is to preserve the great charter rather than that of the people.

"One of the most gratifying things in these days of change and experiments is the really deep-seated and quite general confidence and pride which the great majority of the American people have in our Government. Ninety per cent of the people believe in and respect our form of government, and I venture the opinion that they will be the last to surrender or destroy it. I would rather trust all changes in our Government to a plebiscite of 110,000,000 people than to the unsteady nerves of those in official life who mistake so often organized propaganda for the voice of the people.

"But to these institutions of ours the people generally are wont to apply, and have been told that they should apply, the simple, practical rules of common sense—that it is a Government of the people, by the people, and for the people.

"They would have difficulty in preserving their respect for this Government if they should continue to feel that there is no remedy for a situation wherein statutes and laws may be declared unconstitutional after receiving the approval of the lawmaking body, the Executive department, and four members of the Supreme Court itself. A method more commensurate with reason and the solidity and the worth of our institutions should be devised. While I would not seek to invade the 'judicial power,' I would be pleased to know some way had been devised to throw about the judgments of this court the fullest respect and the highest confidence, both as to their wisdom and their permanency.

"One can not be justly charged with undue national pride when he declares that the Supreme Court of the United States is the most exalted judicial tribunal in the world, not a court beyond the possibility of error, not a court whose opinions are deemed above the reach of fair and honest criticism, but a court which, whether viewed as to the reach and scope and power of its jurisdiction or as to its influence and standing, its ability and learning, its dedication and consecration to the service of mankind, is the greatest tribunal for order and justice yet created among men. If, therefore, the machinery of the court can be geared to a higher plane and greater accuracy, thereby insuring its judgments greater support and approval, that should be our willing task.

FIVE-TO-FOUR RULINGS.

"Some of the typical five-to-four decisions of the United States Supreme Court have been as follows:

"Northern Securities Co. v. United States (193 U. S. 197), in which stockholders of the Great Northern and Northern Pacific Railway Cos. combined to organize a holding company under the laws of New Jersey, by which the holding corporation held nine-tenths of the stock of the Great Northern and more than three-fourths of the stock of the Northern Pacific. These were competing lines between the Mississippi and the Pacific coast. The court held that under this arrangement the lines ceased to be in active competition for trade and commerce and became a consolidated corporation, an illegal combination in restraint of interstate commerce.

"In a child-labor case (247 U. S. 251), Hammer v. Dagenhart, the act prohibited transportation of goods made in factories employing child labor. It was held unconstitutional as exceeding the commerce power of Congress, the necessary effect being a regulation of the hours of labor of children. The majority of the court held this to be a matter solely within the jurisdiction of the States.

"An income-tax decision involved Pollock v. The Farmers' Loan and Trust Co. (157 U. S. 429, 1895, and 158 U. S. 601, 1895). The act laid taxes upon rents or incomes derived from real estate or from the interest on municipal bonds. It was held that the tax on income from real estate was a direct tax within the meaning of section 9, Article I, of the Constitution, and that the tax on interest of municipal bonds was a tax on the power of the State, etc., to borrow money, and therefore repugnant to the Constitution.

"Another case was under the workmen's compensation act of October 5, 1917, between the Knickerbocker Ice Co. and Stewart (253 U. S. 149, 1920). The act amended the Judicial Code relating to admiralty jurisdiction by saying 'to claimants the rights and remedies under the workmen's compensation law of any State.' It was held unconstitutional, as an attempt to delegate the powers of Congress under section 8 of Article I and section 2 of Article III of the Constitution.

"The Lochner case (177 U. S. 145; Statutes of New York) took up the question of prohibiting bakers to work more than 10 hours a day. The court held that a man had a right to work longer hours if he wanted to do so."

Mr. OWEN. In dealing with the question of policy, the Senator from Minnesota said, "Suppose Congress should pass an unconstitutional act; then what? Are we to allow an unconstitutional act to be passed, and have no place of review?"

There are plenty of ways to review it. The Congress of the United States has not yet come to a point where it refuses a remedy when a man is injured through any act of Congress. If there is a liberal body in the world, it is the Congress of the United States. Our committees are full of claims of all sorts, where citizens have been hurt by the operations of Government. We are giving people remedies day by day, continually. It is an everlasting grinding of the mills giving relief to small men who are hurt by Government operations. The Government is generous and kind. It is not autocratic; it is not monarchical; it is not tyrannical. It deals justly and kindly with its people, and if Congress makes a mistake on some matter of great consequence, there is a forum in this country to give relief, and that is the forum of the people of this country. They will express themselves with regard to whether or not their servants on this floor have discharged their duty with fidelity and with intelligence, and at last, under our Constitution, the sovereign power is vested in the people. That is where the sovereignty is, and that is where it ought to be left. It ought not to be transferred to any commission, or to any court appointed for life, and not responsible to the people for their decisions.

Mr. President, the time has come when I must close. I am compelled to leave the floor.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Mr. President, before the Senator departs from a consideration of this question, I should like to address his attention to that amendment of the Constitution which provides that no person shall be deprived of life, liberty, or property without due process of law, and I want him to assume an act of the Congress of the United States which does, indeed, deprive one of life without due process of law, or to assume the case of a statute which deprives one of his liberty without due process of law, or, for the matter of that, a statute which deprives one of his property without due process of law. A subsequent Congress, of course, could restore the property or the equivalent, but how can Congress restore to a man his liberty or his life?

Mr. OWEN. Mr. President, the Senator can very easily make suggestions of that kind. I will ask him what remedy I have if, when I am passing across Pennsylvania Avenue, an infuriated taxi driver runs over me and breaks my neck? None. There are cases in which we may suppose irreparable injuries, but that does not justify an interpretation of the Constitution of the United States under which Congress shall abdicate its power to declare its own acts constitutional.

I have spoken of the power, and I invite the Senator from Minnesota, who is here now, to make a reply to the argument which I submitted to-day, and to take the time to study what I have said. I asked him to do that because he can not otherwise make an intellectual reply. I want him to study what I have said, and then answer in the Senate, if he will, and show that Congress has not the power which I say it has.

Now, Mr. President, I am compelled to leave.

Mr. KELLOGG. Will the Senator yield?

Mr. OWEN. I am yielding the floor.

Mr. KELLOGG. I have not heard what the Senator has said, but I will read it, and reply, if it needs any reply, which I very much doubt.

Mr. BROOKHART. Mr. President, on Saturday last I gave notice that to-day I would speak upon the question of the power of the Supreme Court to set aside acts of Congress. Since then the Senate has refused to lay upon the table the motion to proceed to the consideration of the filled milk bill. I believe this is a very important matter to the country and one that should be immediately considered. I therefore wish to state that I shall not at this time discuss the matter in reference to the Congress and the Supreme Court, and I shall speak only briefly in favor of the motion to proceed to the consideration of the filled milk bill.

So far as the question of the ship subsidy bill is concerned I think I have made my position clear heretofore. My position is that it should not be voted upon by this Congress. It is fastening upon the country a policy by contract for 15 years when this Congress will now live less than two weeks. If it is such an important proposition to the people of the whole country, it should be considered by an extra session of the Congress elected largely upon that issue. I therefore feel that it is wrong for a Congress which is dying to fix a future policy of that kind upon the people of the United States.

In that judgment I am supported by the Senate in its vote taken but a few days ago upon the submission of a constitutional amendment providing for changing the date of the convening of Congress. Most of the Senators who are supporting the ship-subsidy measure voted at that time to submit a constitutional amendment to the legislatures of the States which will prevent the situation under which we are now laboring. I call upon those Senators to practice a little bit what they preach. Let us postpone the vote upon the ship subsidy and take up and consider and dispose of important matters which the people of the country are demanding. The question of filled milk is one of them. It is a question of pure food. It is a question of the lives of children. It is a question of advancing our civilization.

I realize that whenever we attempt that sort of thing we always find somebody opposed. There is always some vested interest that is opposed, but nevertheless that is no reason why the Senate or the Congress should halt in carrying out and doing those things. Therefore, I feel keenly that we should proceed to the consideration of the filled milk bill and dispose of it. While I feel just as keenly that it is my duty to do everything I can by preventing a vote or otherwise to block the passage of the ship subsidy bill, I am just as strongly in favor of disposing of these other matters of interest to the whole people of the United States. I am glad to say that the Senate has voted against tabling the motion, and I hope upon a full consideration of the matter they will vote to proceed to consider the filled milk bill and that it will be disposed of in regular order. It certainly will be done without any filibuster or delay upon my part, as I believe will be the case upon the part of any of those opposed to the ship subsidy measure. I believe any other legislation of immediate importance would receive the same consideration. Therefore, I desire to say that I shall support the motion of the Senator from North Dakota to proceed to the consideration of the filled milk bill.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, before the Senator resumes his seat I would like to ask him a question, if he will yield for that purpose.

Mr. BROOKHART. I yield.

Mr. KING. If he will permit me to make a very brief statement preliminary to it, I shall be very glad. I think his answer to the question which I am about to propound may influence some Senators in their votes upon the proposition to take up the filled-milk measure for consideration.

The Senator is a lawyer and a student of public questions. He knows our Constitution and the dual form of government which prevails. He knows the rights of the States, and under the Constitution he knows they have certain police powers and certain rights which a sovereign State has the right to exercise.

There is a grave feeling upon the part of some who are profoundly in sympathy with the purpose and object of the bill that it is an infringement upon the rights of the States and will be a direct assault upon their police powers, upon the authority of the States to regulate matters which are essentially domestic in character and, under the usually accepted theory of the rights of the States, matters which pertinently and properly belong to the States.

I want to ask the Senator if he interprets the bill in the way that it would, if enacted into law, be a serious or any restriction upon the rights of the States? Does he interpret it as a precedent that might be invoked when assaults may be made upon the States to restrict their power and in the interest of some particular business? To illustrate what I mean, there are some farmers, perhaps, and some people engaged in the dairy business who would like to see the use of cottonseed oil, as an illustration, interdicted as a food product. Let it be used for the making of soap or for any nonedible purpose. Doubtless there are some who would be willing to support a measure that would prevent the use of cottonseed oil or coconut oil in the manufacture of butter or products for use as food.

Does the Senator distinguish this bill from a measure which would have in view the object which I have just indicated? Does the Senator think that the Federal Government has the power to say that skimmed milk shall not be used for food purposes; and if he thinks that they have the power, where does he draw the line as to the authority of the States and the authority of the Federal Government to determine questions which heretofore have generally been conceded at least to be within the province of the States themselves?

Mr. BROOKHART. At this time, of course, I was not discussing the merits of the bill itself. There is no doubt that Congress can not invade the rights of the States even if they wanted to do so. Under the present method of deciding these matters their act would be held unconstitutional if they did so. I am not in favor, as a matter of policy, of invading any of the rights of the States, and if, upon consideration of the bill, it appeared to do that, of course, it should be amended in those particulars. I am interested in it as a matter of policy, of pure food, of protecting especially the lives of the children of the country. Incidentally everybody in every business has a right to know whether a thing is truthful and what it purports to be, and I, of course, stand strongly for that general principle which will make milk milk, and coconuts coconuts.

Mr. STANLEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BROOKHART. Certainly.

Mr. STANLEY. The able Senator was on the point of discussing the propriety of legislation limiting the rights and powers of the Supreme Court of the United States to declare unconstitutional or void an act of Congress. In that question I am vitally interested. Without expressing any opinion pro or con as to the merits of the proposed method of curtailing the power of the Supreme Court, there is no doubt in my mind that the framers of the Constitution never contemplated this veto power on the part of the court as now exercised.

Thomas Jefferson would turn over in his grave at the thought of the Supreme Court nullifying an act of Congress upon the grounds which have sometimes justified that court in so doing. This is the only legislative body on earth of which I have any knowledge, in a measure, controlling the destines of a free and enlightened people where the judiciary exercises that plenary and unprecedented power. It is not in the power of the English courts to set aside an act of Parliament or of the French courts to set aside an act of the Chamber of Deputies or of the German courts to set aside an act of the Reichstag; or assuming that the Senator is correct and that we are going to say to the Supreme Court, "Hereafter we shall be the judge of the constitutionality of our own acts," if and when we take that position, one of two things must happen: Shall we look simply at the purposes of a pending bill, adopt, as the causists say, the position that "the end justifies the means," that if the purpose of a bill is laudable, and if the end sought is desirable, then we will not cavil about the means or consider the technical question of its consonance with the Constitution of the United States? Having curtailed the right of the Supreme Court to review its constitutionality, and having failed on our oaths first to ask, Is it within our power to do this thing before we determine whether it is right or wrong, what will become of what is left of the Constitution of the United States if both those things happen?

Mr. BROOKHART. I think both those things never can happen, but, as I have said, I expected to discuss that question to-day. I desire, however, to postpone the discussion of that question in case the filled-milk bill is taken up, so it may be considered upon its merits. Then, more at length, I shall discuss the proposition presented by the Senator from Kentucky.

Mr. STANLEY. Mr. President, I hesitate to take up so much of the Senator's time, but I will say to him, as illustrating this very proposition, elaborately discussed by Mr. Justice Marshall in the great case of Gibbons against Ogden, two things induced the convention called together for the purpose of curing certain defects in the Articles of Confederation in a way to write their own instructions and to depart upon a venture not contemplated by those who sent them as delegates to that convention, for I think it will be universally conceded that when the delegates went to the so-called Constitutional Convention there was no thought in the minds of those who selected them that they would write an instrument new and entirely different, infinitely beyond the old Articles of Confederation in the form and character and power and genius of the Government they created. The two things above all others that induced them to this radical departure were, first, the inability under the Articles of Confederation to levy an effective tax in order to maintain the Government, and the other the utter chaos that would necessarily have resulted by a failure to vest in the Federal Government the regulation of interstate commerce. So that two compelling and convincing reasons for the conduct of the whole convention were to settle the method of taxation and to limit and definitely to define the power of Congress over commerce between the States. An impost duty levied in one State against another meant that the industrial progress of the Nation as a whole was impossible. If there is one power above all others that that convention was inclined to vest in its entirety in Congress, it was the power over interstate commerce.

How far did they go? They gave to the Federal Government and denied to the States control over commerce among the States and with foreign nations, and subsequently in Territories under the control of the Federal Government. Had they attempted to give to the Federal Government control over traffic between two points in the same State, the Constitution would never have been adopted, in my opinion, and should not have been adopted with that sort of provision in it.

I am at this time utterly opposed to an insidious propaganda on the part of the great carriers of the country, with which I am sure the Senator from Iowa is familiar, because he has added much to the literature and to the light upon that subject. I am opposed to taking away from State railroad commissions the control over strictly intrastate commerce, and I think the Senator from Iowa agrees with me on that proposition.

Mr. BROOKHART. I am in the most perfect accord with that idea.

Mr. STANLEY. This bill, as I read it, does that. If it does that, the Senator must concur that it is unconstitutional. The definition of interstate commerce as contained in the bill is not the definition of the Constitution; it is not the definition of the Sherman Act. It is either a reckless and inadvertent or an utterly indefensible method insidiously to extend the power of the Federal Government to commerce in the commodity covered by the bill between two adjoining hamlets not a mile apart.

Mr. BROOKHART. If that be true, as the Senator says, I should say that the bill should be amended at this time. However, again I call the Senator's attention to the fact that it was not my purpose to discuss the merits of the bill, but merely to discuss the question whether we should proceed to its consideration.

Mr. STANLEY. Mr. President, for instance, the bill defines the term "person," and then on the first page of the bill, beginning in line 6, defines interstate commerce as follows:

(b) The term "interstate or foreign commerce" means commerce (1) between any State, Territory, or possession, or the District of Columbia, and any place outside thereof.

There is no particular objection to that. Then this provision follows:

(2) Between points with the same State, Territory, or possession, or within the District of Columbia, but through any place outside thereof.

Whenever we attempt to define the term "interstate commerce" to mean commerce between points within the same State, then we are clearly beyond the province of the Constitution.

Mr. BROOKHART. The provision as read seems to contemplate a movement into some other State and then back into the original State of shipment. That might make a difference. I think, however, the Senator and I would not have any serious quarrel or trouble in regard to that proposition. That is a minor matter, I think, in the bill, and, so far as I am personally concerned, I should not object to an amendment that would entirely clarify its meaning in that respect.

Mr. STANLEY. Mr. President, I will ask the Senator another question. Does the Senator believe—and when the oleomargarine bill was under consideration we had this question under discussion—in a matter of this vital importance, unless we are clearly convinced that the bill is within the purview of the Constitution and that it is properly and carefully drawn, and it is not only designed for a good purpose but is the proper method of attaining a desirable end, that it ought to be taken up for consideration in the closing days of the session?

Mr. BROOKHART. I think that the action of the committee is quite a good guaranty that all matters in connection with the bill have been considered, and therefore I am ready to act upon it. In matters of this kind we will always have to rely to a great extent upon the action of the Members of the Senate, including the committee which considered the measure. Each Senator can not investigate every question in all its details to the very bottom.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, may I suggest to the Senator that I have before me here what are called Filled Milk Hearings Before the Committee on Agriculture of the House, June 13, July 6, 7, 19, and 20, 1921. So the matter has been before Congress for some time and the hearings are quite extensive.

Mr. BROOKHART. The Senator, of course, is more familiar with that than I. I think we could well enough proceed to the consideration of the bill at this time.

THE MERCHANT MARINE.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 12817) to amend and supplement the merchant marine act, 1920, and for other purposes.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the motion of the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. LADD] to proceed to the consideration of House bill 8086.

Mr. JONES of Washington and Mr. UNDERWOOD called for the yeas and nays, and they were ordered.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry. Is the question on the motion to take up the bill?

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the motion to take up the so-called milk bill.

Mr. LADD. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will call the roll.

The reading clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Bayard	Gerry	McKellar	Robinson
Brookhart	Glass	McKinley	Sheppard
Broussard	Gooding	McNary	Smith
Bursum	Hale	Moses	Smoot
Calder	Harris	Nelson	Spencer
Cameron	Harrison	New	Stanfield
Capper	Heflin	Nicholson	Stanley
Caraway	Hitchcock	Norris	Sterling
Colt	Johnson	Oddie	Sutherland
Couzens	Jones, N. Mex.	Overman	Townsend
Curtis	Jones, Wash.	Page	Trammell
Dial	Kellogg	Pepper	Underwood
Dillingham	King	Phipps	Wadsworth
Edge	Ladd	Poindexter	Walsh, Mont.
Ernst	La Follette	Pomerene	Warren
Fletcher	Lenroot	Ransdell	Watson
George	Lodge	Reed, Pa.	Weller

The VICE PRESIDENT. Sixty-eight Senators have answered to their names. There is a quorum present.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Mr. President, I was a good deal surprised, a little earlier in the day, to hear the Senator from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD] state that he was opposed to the defeat of the shipping bill by indirection. I was all the more surprised at this deliberate statement of his because on a rather recent occasion he had led, openly and courageously, a filibuster against a piece of legislation to which he was opposed and to which many of us were opposed. On that occasion he was not content to make his fight upon the legislation in question, but he fought practically everything that came before the Senate, and sought to bring legislative proceedings to a standstill until those who were proposing the legislation to which he objected, and to which the minority objected, should abandon it. He succeeded. The legislation was dropped, although unquestionably a majority of the Senate were in favor of its passage.

I realize that the Senator sought to give an explanation, sought to show wherein he distinguished between the two forms of legislation, sought to show what it was that in his opinion justified a filibuster upon the antilynching bill, whereas, in his opinion, there was no justification for a filibuster against this proposed legislation, the shipping bill; and I shall do him the justice to quote what he said in that regard. He said:

> There are certain great principles that may be involved in votes in the Senate where human rights and human liberty and fundamental principles of our Government are at stake when I would not hesitate for a moment to use any legislative power I possess to prevent the passage of a bill.

Frankly speaking, the premises which he assumes were not conceded by a majority of the Senate. It was a mere matter of opinion—his opinion—that great principles of human liberty were at stake on that occasion and that fundamental principles of government were at stake; but conceding that he was correct, conceding that human liberty was at stake and fundamental principles of government were at stake, what shall we say about the question now before the Senate?

The Senate is here as a representative body. We do not rule the country. We only represent the people that rule the country; and the reason why this shipping bill is now brought before Congress and pressed to passage by all the power of the administration is because the administration knows that after the 4th of March, in the next Congress of the United States, its passage is impossible. In other words, it is a direct Executive attempt to convert into legislative action by a Congress which is to die within two weeks a piece of legislation that the next Congress would refuse to enact.

Mr. President, I think a great principle of government is at stake here. What right has the Executive to undertake to force upon the American people legislation which they at the polls last November repudiated? It was before the people.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. And to perpetuate that legislation for 15 years.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Yes; as the Senator from Wisconsin says, not only to enact it but by a contractual provision to perpetuate it so that the representatives of the people are not allowed to shake it off when they get into control.

Mr. STANLEY. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Nebraska yield to the Senator from Kentucky?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. STANLEY. I may be mistaken, but I have heard a persistent rumor that the President of the United States has stated, and that the chairman of the Commerce Committee has stated, that if this bill is passed in such a way as to give Congress control over the appropriations carried under it similar to its control over those made for the maintenance of the Army and of the Navy and the maintenance of fortifications and the conduct of the Post Office and other departments, the usual appropriations, they will regard the bill as comparatively worthless, and there is talk that the President has threatened to veto it. In other words, unless a discredited measure can be enacted by men who are no longer competent to represent the people further, unless they can use not the power they now have but the power they once had, before the wisdom of the people or of God or of both lessened that power—unless they can use that power, and unless they can bind and gag the next Congress by a provision in this bill so far as undoing their nefarious work is concerned, they are not interested in the bill at all.

Whether that be true or not, I do not know; but if it is true, the insolence of the assertion, the audacity of it, ought to justify any means that God or nature has put in our hands to kill this bill.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I have heard the same report, and I know not whether it is true or not, and I do not care very much. I say this is an occasion on which a great governmental principle is at stake. The Senate is not simply to vote "yes" or "no" upon a ship subsidy bill. The Senate is going to say by its vote whether it thinks it is right to fasten on the American people for a number of years in advance, so that a subsequent Congress can not remove it, a piece of legislation that the people at the ballot box repudiated only a few months ago by electing a Congress that is known to be adverse to it.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I yield.

Mr. FLETCHER. In reference to the observation of the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. STANLEY], there is no need to guess at the position of the Executive or the administration with regard to that provision in the bill which provided for annual appropriations, and the proposal of the committee to strike that provision out of the bill as it came from the House, and to insert, in lieu of authorization, permanent appropriations. The President stated to the committee, in a communication to the chairman of the Commerce Committee, and I think it is in the record—nobody has ever questioned it, and there is no secret at all about it—that unless there were provision for the permanent appropriation of the fund, which the committee by amendment limits to $30,000,000 a year, he would not want the bill at all; so that that is a vital point in connection with the whole measure. Unless Congress is to be bound by a permanent appropriation for 10 years, and probably 15, the bill is not wanted at all. I may suggest this to the Senator, also, if he will allow me just a moment further, with regard to the charge of delay, and some talk about impotency of the Senate, and that sort of thing; the President, when a member of this body, in 1915, joined in filibustering to death the shipping bill at the close of that session.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Mr. President, we regard filibustering very much in line with our point of view on the question under discussion. I have been reluctant at all times to join in a filibuster, and I think the Senate will bear me out in the statement that I have occupied very little time upon the floor in participating in a filibuster at any time, but if ever there was an occasion when a great fundamental principle of Government justified a minority in restraining a majority by a filibuster, it is at a time when it is notorious that within two weeks the complexion of this representative Government will so change that on the ship subsidy question the majority will be the minority and the minority will be the majority. It is not altogether a party question.

In the House of Representatives, where there is a Republican majority of 150, I think, although I do not know exactly what the majority is, the ship subsidy bill secured a majority of only 24 votes, showing very well that a great section of the Republican Party itself was opposed to the ship subsidy bill. Not only that, but there never has been an election in the United States when the people have put the stamp of their approval upon the ship-subsidy idea, which proposes to take a great sum of money annually from the people of the United States and pay it to a preferred interest.

I feel that I can speak on this matter with unusual freedom. I am a "lame duck." I am not to be in the next Senate; and one reason why I am not to be in the next Senate is that the Republican candidate who ran against me repudiated his administration upon this question, and in order to secure his election had to come out and declare himself opposed to the ship subsidy bill and opposed to the administration headed by the President of the United States, to whom he owed allegiance. So I feel that I am perfectly justified in standing here, as I do, without any interest in the matter, not to be a Member of the next Senate, and saying that in my opinion the question of the passage of this bill at this session involves a great fundamental principle of representative government, and if a filibuster was ever justified it is justified in defense of the principle that we are here in a representative capacity, and it is doing violence to our representative capacity to pass, by a small majority, a bill against which the people have already rendered a negative verdict.

Mr. FLETCHER subsequently said: Mr. President, I wish to make a correction.

I stated in my interruption of the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. HITCHCOCK] that President Harding as a Member of this body had joined in the filibuster against the original shipping bill. I was mistaken as to that. He came into the Senate in March of 1915. That is, he was elected to the Senate in November, 1914. He was, however, opposed to the shipping bill of 1916, as the RECORD will show, spoke against it, and voted against it; but I was in error when I said that he joined in the filibuster on the first shipping bill that was proposed. I wish to correct that in the RECORD, and shall be glad to strike it out of the RECORD.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Mr. President, there is no question, is there, that the shipping bill of 1915 was defeated by a filibuster on the floor of the Senate?

Mr. FLETCHER. Absolutely none. There is no question about that. I suppose very likely the then-elected Senator was in hearty accord with it, but he did not actually participate in it.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. President, I do not like to differ with my good friend from Nebraska, for whom I have the highest respect, when I can help it, and we do not differ on many questions; but I think right here we have met a fundamental difference. I think that one of the great issues before the American people, one of the great problems confronting the country to-day, is the question of human rights and human liberties. I think if the freedom of government under which we live now means anything, it means that the guaranties of the Constitution of the United States, as provided by the fathers, should live, and they are being torn down every hour and every day for special interests. The great mass of the American people are having their Government taken away from them because somebody wants something; and I can see a very grave distinction between the mere appropriation and spending of money, bad as the object may be, and a trespass on the fundamental rights of the States of this Union.

I did filibuster the antilynching bill, but not because I stood for lynching. I have always in the open protested against lynching, and I am glad to say that the sentiment against lynching is trespassed against but very seldom in my own State. I think it is an outrage that any man should assume that he can take the authority vested in the law of the land and exercise it himself. But that was not the question involved in that bill. It was whether the Federal Government should enter the States of the Union and exercise a police jurisdiction that has been vested in the States of America from the beginning. If the Congress of the United States continues to trespass upon the liberties, personal rights, and freedom of the people of the several States of this Union, they will build up a sentiment in disregard of law which will shake the whole fabric of our Government.

I only filibustered against that bill because the rules of the Senate allowed me to do so. I did not filibuster behind a screen. I did not attempt to do something concealed from the view of the American people; and when I said that I was opposed to that bill and would filibuster it I announced the fact from my place here in the Senate, and every man in the Senate and every man in the country knew what I was doing. There was no attempt behind closed doors to do something that was not disclosed on the floor of the Senate.

I said in that debate, and I say it again, that I believe a time will be reached when the United States Senate will be discredited by the American people unless it learns how to do business. The country has a right to expect that its chosen representatives will perform the functions which they are elected to perform in a legislative way. I am not responsible for the rules of the Senate. The rule in contention was adopted over a hundred years ago, as well as were most of the others.

Mr. FLETCHER. May I interrupt the Senator at that point just to inquire whether it is not just as much a function of a legislative body to defeat improper and unjustified measures as it is to pass other measures?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Undoubtedly; if they command a majority of the American people. This is a Government of majorities, not a Government of minorities.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. REED of Pennsylvania in the chair). Does the Senator from Alabama yield to the Senator from Tennessee?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I yield.

Mr. McKELLAR. Does not the Senator believe that a majority of the American people are opposed to the ship subsidy bill, as shown at the last election?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I hope so. I am in thorough accord with the Senator's views against the ship subsidy bill; but it is not the majority in the country that can control legislation; it is the majority on this floor.

Of course, I know that my view of doing business does not meet with the approval of most of my colleagues and never has. I am proud to say, however, that since I have been a Member of the Senate I have had reported to the Senate a resolution which I offered, providing a real cloture rule for this body, and not a sham and a mockery. On a vote in the Senate it came within 7 votes of becoming a rule of the Senate, the closest vote the Senate has ever cast on an attempt to provide a rule under which it could do business.

I am not reflecting on my colleagues; they have a right to their own opinions about these matters, and I know they do not agree with me. In a legislative way I was raised in the other branch of the Congress, where they do business, where a majority can write on the statute books its proposals to the American people, and go to the country for their final verdict. When the Republican Party was in control I accepted the results, and when I had the power of control myself, and my party had announced its program, we proceeded to put our conclusions on the statute books. That is government. That is functioning as a vital Government.

I would not have the Senate adopt a cloture rule in the midst of a party contest, because it would be foolish to ask us to do it, but whenever the time comes in the Senate of the United States when it is devoid of partisan issues and partisan prejudice, as far as I am concerned, I would vote for a rule that would enable the United States Senate to attend to the business of the country.

I do not say this in criticism of the Senator from Nebraska, who thinks he is justified in filibustering this bill to death. I do not intend it at all as a personal criticism. It is merely a point of difference between us. But I see a very grave distinction between a filibuster where the fundamental rights of my State were involved and one where the issue is merely one of appropriating dollars out of the Treasury.

I do not think the shipping bill is any worse in fact or in principle than the tariff bill the Congress passed last summer. I think the tariff bill will cost the American people vastly more money than the shipping bill would cost them, and I think the theory that you may levy taxes for the benefit of special interests is far more derogatory to the great principles of equal rights to every citizen of the United States and special privileges granted to none than anything that is involved in the shipping bill.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I yield.

Mr. McKELLAR. I want to suggest to the Senator that the difference between the tariff bill and the ship subsidy bill is that next year Congress can repeal the former, whereas, if the ship subsidy bill shall be passed, the power of Congress to repeal the law will be taken out of Congress for a term of years—I believe from 10 to 15 years.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. President, the Senator from Tennessee is not coming at the question directly; but I want to say to the Senator from Tennessee that, so far as the subsidy bill itself is concerned, as it stands before the Senate to-day, an annual appropriation is required before it can be put into effect. It came from the House in that form. It is true that the Senate committee has proposed an amendment which would enable the contracts to be made for a period of years, but that amendment has not yet been adopted and is not in the bill.

Mr. McKELLAR. Does the Senator doubt that it will be adopted?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Yes; I doubt it. I do not say that it will not be adopted, but it seems to me if I were running the proposition I would stop long enough to let them vote on that amendment and find out where we stand. No one would foreclose anything by allowing the other side to vote on that proposed amendment. If Senators on this side of the Chamber insist on a filibuster, they could still go on with the filibuster, but why not let the majority determine the issue as to whether the proposed amendment is in the bill or out of it? At present it is out of it.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Of course that is hardly in harmony with the style the Senator followed when he led the filibuster.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Oh, that is true.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. He would not let us vote on anything, hardly even on a motion to adjourn.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. That is true, because, as I said, that was an issue where the rights of the great constituency which we represented, the fundamental rights of government, were involved. I say there is nothing involved in the shipping bill but an expenditure of money.

Mr. McKELLAR. The trouble is that there are a lot of us who have a very different view about it. There are some of us who think this is just as important as the other bill, perhaps, on a question of principle.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I hope my friend from Tennessee will not think I am criticizing him.

Mr. McKELLAR. Oh, I do not.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I know that the Senator from Tennessee differs with me in what I am expressing, but has the Senator from Tennessee any objection to my expressing my own view in the RECORD?

Mr. McKELLAR. None whatever.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. That is all I am trying to do. It is not with any intention on my part to criticize the Senator's position.

Now, Mr. President, I will come back to where I left off when I was interrupted. I said that I believe that the fundamental principles in the tariff law were more detrimental to the American people than anything that is in the shipping bill. I believe it is more so now than it was a decade ago, because it was then only a question as to whether we would play favorites to special interests. Now, it is a question of closing our doors to foreign shippers, preventing from coming into the country the only means of payment for agricultural products which we ship to Europe.

I believe the principles that are involved in the tariff law go to the very prosperity and future industrial life of the American people. We can estimate with our pens how many dollars may be thrown away as a result of the passage of the shipping bill, but no man can estimate the disaster or danger, measured in dollars, that may come from the tariff law. And yet when Senators on this side of the Chamber consented last September that the majority party might come to a vote on the tariff bill, there were 1,500 amendments undisposed of that were passed en bloc. My colleagues on this side of the Chamber, if they had desired to do so, could have had the tariff bill on the floor of the Senate to-day. It would not have been a wise thing to do.

This is a government of majorities. The people of the country send their representatives to the House and to the Senate. The majority have a right to rule so long as they are not invading the Constitution of the United States and the fundamental principles of our Government that have come down to us from the fathers. No man on the floor of the Senate is more opposed to the methods involved in the shipping bill than I am, and yet there is no man on the floor of the Senate who is more in favor of upbuilding a merchant marine in this country than I am. More than a decade ago I made a legislative proposal and it became the law. I shall not go into the details of why it was defeated, but it was not defeated by the American people. I realize that one of the greatest disasters that happened to the people I represent occurred in 1914, when that great agricultural crop, cotton, fell from 14 cents to 5 cents a pound for no reason in the world except that there were no ships to carry the exportable portion of the crop to the ultimate market of consumption.

I do not think the pending shipping bill will accomplish the expected result. I think it is wrong in principle. I am entirely opposed to it, but I belive that the country must be governed by responsible majorities.

Mr. CARAWAY. Mr. President, may I interrupt the Senator?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Certainly.

Mr. CARAWAY. I want to say just a word of explanation, that I perfectly agree with the Senator in that I am willing the majority should have a vote. But this is a party Government, as the Senator calls it. The Senator is the leader of the minority. He rises in his place and prefaces his statement by saying "The doctrine I am announcing is not agreed to here by my colleagues." I wonder if that same rule of majority then would not restrain the leader of the minority from announcing a principle against which a great majority of his colleagues were opposed?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I will say to my friend that I think that is a very just criticism, a very fair one, and I shall answer it in the same spirit in which the Senator asked it. I did not regard the question of the filled milk bill this morning as a party question.

Mr. CARAWAY. I did not have that in mind. I thought the Senator was talking about the shipping bill, and that is the measure which I said I was perfectly willing the majority should vote on. I had thought and at one time expressed the hope that the majority would let those who are to continue in the majority express their view and not insist that those who are hoping for favors that do not come from the people direct should determine the policies of the country. They do not seem willing to accept that view, because they know that the majority of those who are to be in the Sixty-eighth Congress are against the bill. However, that has nothing to do with it. I was merely showing that they will not take the responsibility. I am willing they should take it.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I thank the Senator and I agree with him. Of course, we have not come to a vote, but I have talked to my colleagues about the shipping bill. I think I have spoken to every Senator on this side of the Chamber about it. So far as I know, the votes on this side of the Chamber will be absolutely against the shipping bill, except two. We have 37 votes in the Senate, and 35 will be against the bill. I have also talked to my colleagues, and I am satisfied after talking with them that a majority of the Democratic Senators feel that after proper debate the majority have a right to cast their votes and express their views. The opposition to that course on this side of the Chamber, if I am to judge from what I have heard from my brother Senators, comes from a minority on the Democratic side.

Mr. CARAWAY. May I interrupt the Senator again to say that I certainly misunderstood the Senator a moment ago? I thought he said he realized the views he was expressing were in opposition to those of a majority of his colleagues.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I was merely speaking of the vote I cast this morning on the filled milk bill proposition.

Mr. CARAWAY. Oh, everybody had forgotten that, because the filled milk bill was just one of these talking bills.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I will say to my friends on this side of the Chamber that the only reason why I have said anything in this connection was that I found myself in a very embarrassing position, but many times we all vote without knowing much about the legislation. Some of it comes from some other committee than those with which we are directly connected, and somebody else knows about it, and I follow my side under circumstances of that kind. But ever since I have been in public life, when I have had a conviction of my own on a legislative subject, I have expressed it, whether I stood with the united column or stood alone, and I do not know how to do business otherwise.

The only reason why I became involved in this debate at all——

Mr. CARAWAY. May I interrupt the Senator again? The Senator realizes that if each individual would take that view party government would be at an end.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Oh, undoubtedly.

Mr. CARAWAY. And yet I thought the Senator said this was a party government?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Yes. Of course, I was speaking about the filled milk bill. If the Democratic Party in the United States would ever meet in caucus and not in conference and would let the united wisdom of the party determine the questions, I would do then as I have always done—accept the conclusions of the majority. I think that is the way to do business, and that is the way I was educated to do business in the House of Representatives. But that is not what we do in the Senate.

I think that the practical thing to do in the condition which now confronts us is not to filibuster the shipping bill to death but let this important amendment as to how long the bill shall be operative come to a vote in the Senate and come to that vote now. When that amendment is voted on the question may be settled. The difficulty in the situation is that we have on the calendar many important bills, some good and some bad. They are entitled to be disposed of. But everything must go down under the rules of the Senate because there is one particular bill that is objected to.

The only reason why I have become involved in the debate was that on the vote on the filled milk bill this morning I felt that it was necessary for me to explain my vote and let the RECORD show why I voted to lay that bill on the table. That was not a party question. That would have been the end of it so far as I was concerned, until my friend from Nebraska criticized my course, to which I am not objecting at all. It was perfectly legitimate for the Senator to do it, and it was equally perfectly legitimate for me to make a reply.

Mr. CARAWAY. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator a question?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Yes.

Mr. CARAWAY. I wonder if there is not a little inconsistency in saying that the Senate ought to do business and then for the Senator to vote to table a bill without discussion?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. No.

Mr. CARAWAY. I do not see how we can consider legislation by tabling a measure without having it read.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Of course, my friend from Arkansas, who is a splendid Senator, one of the best debaters in the Senate and an excellent parliamentarian, is simply overlooking the fact that these parliamentary motions have come down with the wisdom of ages. There is nothing new in them; there is nothing wrong about them. There are times which come in a parliamentary body, when it is moving toward a conclusion, and the delays caused by those who are fighting on the outskirts and harassing the column become so troublesome that there must be some parliamentary way out. Therefore parliamentary bodies, long before this Nation was born, adopted the course of laying on the table those things which were in the way of the direct issue; and that determined where the direct issue was. Of course, this morning the determination was adverse, but there was no way of ascertaining that until the vote was cast. It was sidetracking something that was in the way of the direct issue. Of course, so far as my vote was concerned, I was merely opposed, as I always have been opposed in principle——

Mr. CARAWAY. Mr. President, let me ask the Senator just one more question. If a motion shall be made to lay upon the table the ship subsidy bill will the Senator vote for it?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Undoubtedly.

Mr. CARAWAY. Evidently, then, that is no way to legislate. We do not get any real intelligent consideration of the shipping bill by tabling it, do we?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Of course, I think the shipping bill has been debated fully and freely, and I am opposed to it, and laying the bill on the table would be a way of finally disposing of it and allowing the Senate to attend to the remainder of its business. If the Senator from Arkansas, when the opportune time comes, desires to make the motion to lay the shipping bill on the table, he will undoubtedly receive my vote most cheerfully.

Mr. CARAWAY. But, Mr. President, I am still curious to know how that would be an intelligent disposition of an important piece of legislation. The motion prevents debate; it prevents the offering of amendments; it prevents reading of the bill or any consideration. If agreed to, it would simply set it aside, but it would not dispose of it. I thought the Senator from Alabama was arguing for an intelligent disposition of the bill.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Undoubtedly; and I think if we could command a majority to lay the shipping bill on the table after months of debate it would be a very intelligent disposition of it. That is my view point. I do not favor motions to lay on the table when Senators have not had an opportunity to express their views, but in this case, as a rule, they have had that opportunity. I, therefore, think it would be proper to move to lay a bill on the table when the vote is going to raise the question, as it did this morning, as to the right of way between two bills.

I have gone into this question further than I intended to, but I wanted the RECORD to disclose my viewpoint of the matter. I respect the opinion of the Senator from Nebraska; I am not falling out with it; he has got just as much right to his opinion as I have to mine, and I think his criticism was very proper if he thought that I had erred.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Mr. President, I think the Senator from Alabama has misconstrued what I said. My remarks were not by way of criticizing his attitude on the motion to lay upon the table. My remarks were in defense of the present filibuster, if there be a filibuster, and I thought the Senator was really criticizing the attitude of those who are filibustering against the pending bill. I took his remarks to be a criticism of our attitude.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I wish to assure the Senator from Nebraska they were not a criticism, because that would be personal, but there was a difference in the viewpoint.

What I say is when we come to purely economic questions—and, of course, all economic questions have behind them some principle, because the mere taking the money out of the Treasury involves a principle—when we come to questions that do not involve fundamental principles of government, I say in the last analysis the majority must govern.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. There the Senator is drawing a comparison between the merits of the shipping bill and the merits of the other proposed legislation. I am not talking about the merits of the shipping bill. I am talking about the right of the American people to have their wishes which they expressed at the ballot box carried out; that is the issue in this case. It is not the fact that we are opposed to the shipping bill which justifies the filibuster. The thing which justifies the filibuster is that the Executive is trying to force through this Congress legislation which the people repudiated last November, and that involves the integrity of representative government. If we can enact legislation which the people have already repudiated at the ballot box, then we are doing violence to one of the principles which involve the very foundation of representative government.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I hope the Senator is right that the members of the next Congress do not believe in this class of legislation. So far as I am concerned, I have not polled that Congress and I do not know. It will still be Republican in both branches of Congress. I wish it were Democratic, and then I should know; but as to whether there will be enough Republicans in the next Congress who will join with the Democrats against this class of legislation I do not know. That is not the issue; that is not the thing in which I am interested; and it is not this bill. I think if the Senators on the other side of the Chamber make a fundamental proposal and it works out all right, it is for the good of the country; and if it works out all wrong, and they have made a mistake, the country will hold them responsible, and it will be a liability instead of an asset for them.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, if the Senator will yield there, if that principle of legislation should be adopted, why the necessity of any members of the minority party being here at all? Why not just turn over all the responsibility to the majority and let them pass such legislation as they desire?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I am afraid my friend from Tennessee has not thought out that proposition. This morning the majority party had a proposal pending, but what was supposed to be a minority turned out to be the majority. If the question of majority were determined in advance, what the Senator says might be true, but the Senator from Tennessee overlooks a very useful function that is always performed by the minority.

Mr. McKELLAR. If the Senator will permit me again, he made the illustration; he pointed to the other side of the Chamber, which means the Republican side of the Chamber.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Of course, the Republican side of the Chamber has the shipping bill before the Senate, but there were enough Republicans converted to a different policy, this morning at least, to carry a preliminary vote to lay their measure aside. The minority has a very useful function to perform in a legislative body, even if it does not carry its view. It has the right of criticism; it has the right of presenting to the country the errors that it believes the majority party has made; and it is a great salvation to the country and to the people that a critic does stand here.

Mr. McKELLAR. I agree entirely with the Senator about that.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Certainly.

Mr. McKELLAR. But I was just telling him where, in my judgment, his argument would lead.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I respect the position of my friend from Tennessee, and I know always he is earnest in his viewpoint. I am not saying this in opposition to him. I started out a moment ago merely to say what my viewpoint was, and I have gone further into the question than I intended to go. The only reason I said anything further about the matter was that my friend from Nebraska referred to my position this morning, and I felt I had better state what my position was in the RECORD.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Alabama yield to the Senator from Montana?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I yield.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. I am quite in accord with the views expressed by the Senator from Alabama concerning the right of the people of the United States to expect that the Senate is going to do business, and I am in entire accord with the desire expressed by him that the rules of the Senate might be amended so that after a subject is legitimately debated a vote might be forced; in fact, I have argued in favor of that principle ever since I came here. But I am a little afraid that the remarks of the Senator now will be interpreted to mean that those of us who choose to vote for the pending motion are engaged in a filibuster.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Oh, no.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Does the Senator regard the motion of the Senator from Montana as a part of a filibuster against the shipping bill?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. No; I do not. I think the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. LADD] is perfectly honest in his proposal. He has made a motion with respect to a bill in which he believes.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. That is the point.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. The Senator from North Dakota is a man whom we all respect and we know that always he works by direct methods. He has proposed this bill because he believes it is right; I have no doubt of that whatever, but I differ with him. That, however, was not the issue. My friend from Nebraska criticized me for saying something about a filibuster, and he justified the filibuster; so that it was a question between the Senator from Nebraska and myself. I am not saying this in criticism of Members of this side of the Chamber. Many of them may believe that the filled milk bill is a very good bill and that it is a better bill than the shipping bill. If they do, they ought to vote to take it up. Of course, I believe both bills are bad.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. But I was afraid that the remarks of the Senator would give color to the suggestion that those of us who choose to vote to take up the bill proposed by the Senator from North Dakota would be participating in a filibuster against the shipping bill.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Not at all.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Our vote in favor of taking up the bill of the Senator from North Dakota will be, first, because we believe we are in favor of the bill, and, in the second place, because we do not think it so evil as the shipping bill.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Undoubtedly.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Now, I assume that those, including the Senator from Alabama, if he votes that way, who will vote against taking up the bill proposed by the Senator from North Dakota will deem the passage of the shipping bill less of a public calamity than the passage of the filled milk bill.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I can not say that I would go that far; but I will tell the Senator candidly what I think. I think that the amendment to the shipping bill which provides for a limitation of the expenditures under it to one year, thus leaving the question in the power of Congress, ought to be voted on before anything else is done. If that amendment should be adopted, as I think it properly may be, there is no great danger in this bill to the American people that can not be avoided in any Congress; and I should like to see the shipping bill go that far, because I know that if the filled milk bill, to which I am opposed, is taken up to-morrow it will be passed, and then there will be some other bill, and then we will continue this filibuster until the 4th of March—that is, we will continue this fight—I will not call it a filibuster.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. The Senator means that we would continue to take up bills that we think more important than the shipping bill?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Certainly; but we will not do business. Now, Mr. President——

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President——

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I will ask the Senator to allow me to answer the Senator from Montana. In what I said awhile ago to the Senator I think I am correct. Thirty-five out of the thirty-seven Democrats on this floor are opposed to the shipping bill in their hearts. They believe it is a bad bill; but a majority of Members on this side, as I said awhile ago, do not believe that the bill ought to be filibustered—and I think the Senator from Montana agrees with me about that—but that, after a reasonable date, it is entitled to be voted on.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. The Senator states my position exactly, but at the same time I am in favor of taking up some other measures.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Of course I realize that, and I am not critical of that position and have not been at all. I am taking more of the time of the Senate now than I intended to take; but I happened to be voting pretty nearly by myself awhile ago—there were one or two friends on this side with me—and I thought I was justified in putting into the RECORD a few remarks to explain why I voted as I did on a bill that neither I nor anybody else regard as a partisan measure.

Mr. DIAL. Mr. President, when the motion to table the filled milk bill was called up I was pretty busily engaged at my lunch, and came up, and was told that it was a preliminary fight between the filled milk bill and the shipping bill, so I voted without thinking or caring very much about it.

I was reminded of a remark that was made by a hard-shell Baptist preacher in my State many years ago. Some 35 years ago there was a good deal of antipathy in the country against lawyers running for office. In my county there were two lawyer candidates for the State senate. A hard-shell Baptist preacher went to the booth, picked up a ballot, looked at it, saw these two names on it, marked across both, and wrote at the bottom: "Neither one fits."

Mr. CARAWAY. Mr. President, does the Senator think he was right about it?

Mr. DIAL. Perhaps so, but I doubt it. So, Mr. President, I did not see any choice between these two bills, and I voted and returned to my lunch.

So far as filibustering is concerned, Mr. President, I think probably the best thing Congress could do would be to wind up some matters of importance and adjourn without passing the shipping bill, the filled milk bill, or any other of these abominations that we have on the calendar here. I think it would do the country a great service.

Mr. President, I do not know how the Senate is going to vote on taking up the filled milk bill; but, to my mind, there is about as little excuse for that kind of legislation as there can possibly be. It seems to me that the Congress has lost its sense of proportion, and that we are dabbling in all kinds of affairs to discourage business, to increase officials, to multiply expenses, and to put burdens upon the people of this country. I was informed that this bill was on the wrong lines, and I took a little time to look into it. It is unconstitutional. It is simply a fight between some big milk concerns and undertakes to outlaw some legal enterprises.

Anyone who reads the bill itself can see that there is no necessity whatever for it. Then if he will read the statement of the author of the bill, on page 5 of the hearings, he will see that there is no fraud practiced. The compounds are not labeled "milk" but they are called by different names, and the contents of those compounds are perfectly healthful and nutritious, and there is no occasion for passing this bill. The pure food law covers everything that is necessary along this line. This makes a cheaper compound than regular milk preparations for the use of poor people who want to use it, and there is no deception whatever about it. The packages are not marked "milk." They are marked "Hebe" and "Nutro" and different names.

Mr. President, under this bill it is intended to arrest citizens of this country, try them in court, and impose on them a fine of $1,000, I believe, for endeavoring to make a perfectly legitimate compound to be sold to the people of this country. If it were sold under some deceptive name or a misleading label, then there would be some excuse for it; but these people do not do that at all. They simply make a compound that can be sold cheaper than milk.

People come here and talk about passing laws for the protection of the health of babies and ignorant people. That argument has been worn threadbare. They say that some of these compounds are not good for infants. I do not suppose beefsteak is good for an infant. Many other things are not good for it until it gets to the proper age to digest them; and if Senators will go to the trouble to read the statement of the author of the bill in the House they will see that he says there is no deception, that the label on this product does not mislead, but, for fear that ignorant people will buy it when they ought to buy something else, he thinks this bill ought to pass. There is no virtue in an argument of that sort, and no logic in it.

I was very much impressed with the various telegrams received by the Senator from Illinois [Mr. McKINLEY], which will be found, beginning on page 62 of the hearings. I will read just a few of those telegrams. As I said before, this seems to be a fight between different manufacturers, and it is not the part of a legislature to take sides in such a matter. We should legislate on general principles.

The first telegram, on page 62, is as follows:

CHAUTAUQUA, N. Y., July 1, 1922.

Senator WM. McKINLEY,
Senate Chamber, Washington, D. C.:

The manufacture of milk compounds assures the conservation for human consumption of millions of pounds of skimmed milk used for feeding animals or thrown away. Adroit appeals to the mother love of women in an effort to secure their support of the Voigt bill should be discountenanced.

KATE WOOD RAY,
Chicago, Member Women's Allied Drug Club.

This lady says that this skimmed milk is either fed to animals or thrown away, and yet these people manufacture it and put it in shape to be sold more ecomomically than some other compounds of milk, and it is truly labeled. I am, of course, against fraud in any form, but this does not undertake to perpetrate a fraud. In fact, it refutes any idea of perpetrating a fraud upon the people.

The next telegram is as follows:

CHAUTAUQUA, N. Y., June 30, 1922—5.20 p. m.

Senator McKINLEY,
Senate Chamber, Washington, D. C.:

The trade war against skim-milk compounds has been carried into Congress. I object to such legislation as will permit our Representatives at Washington to be used in furthering such a war; therefore I ask that you use your influence to defeat the Voigt bill.

Mrs. JOHN MILLOY, Elmhurst, Ill.

The next telegram reads:

CHAUTAUQUA, N. Y., June 30, 1922—8.23 p. m.

Senator WM. McKINLEY,
Senate Chamber, Washington, D. C.:

The Voigt bill is an unwarranted interference with business, and if enacted into law would deprive hundreds of families of a nutritious, wholesome, and economical food product.

GRACE VIALL GRAY,
President University of Chicago Cooperative Nursery.

Another telegram:

CHAUTAUQUA, N. Y., June 30, 1922.

Senator McKINLEY,
Senate Chamber, Washington, D. C.:

As a home economic teacher I am opposed to the Voigt bill. A vote for the Voigt bill is a vote against the home. It would drive from the market a wholesome and nutritious food and deprive housewives of an excellent cooking medium.

RHODA VIALL, Manteno, Ill.

Mr. President, I presume the women of this country know about as well what is good to cook as these advocates who come here and try to outlaw this product—people who have a selfish purpose to serve.

On page 63 there is another telegram from Chautauqua, N. Y.:

CHAUTAUQUA, N. Y., June 30, 1922.

Senator MCKINLEY,
Senate Chamber, Washington, D. C.:

Bakers and candy makers can buy skimmed milk, so why deprive the housewife of the use of this economical and valuable food? Skimmed milk with vegetable fat has the approval of health authorities. The Voigt bill would legislate these preparations off the markets. Defeat the Voigt bill.

Mrs. OLTO HEPER, Elmhurst, Ill.

Another telegram from Chicago, Ill.:

CHICAGO, ILL., July 3, 1922.

Hon. WM. MCKINLEY,
Senate Chamber, Washington, D. C.:

After a meeting here to-day in which the Voigt bill was discussed I am convinced that this legislation is inspired by wholly selfish motives and should not be permitted to become a law. As my Senator I urge you to use your influence for its defeat.

Mrs. THERESA BURCHY, Chicago.

Mr. President, there are various other telegrams here which I ask to have inserted in the RECORD as a part of my remarks, without reading.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. ODDIE in the chair). Without objection, it is so ordered.

The telegrams are as follows:

CHAUTAUQUA, N. Y., June 30, 1922.

Senator MCKINLEY,
Senate Chamber, Washington, D. C.:

I am opposed to the Voigt bill, because I believe it to be a trick to eliminate competition. Scientific and medical men of highest repute have stated such foods to be wholesome and nutritious and an important addition to the food supply of the United States. Housewives are vitally interested in any wholesome food product that tends to lower the cost of living. As my representative I urge you to defeat the Voigt bill.

MARION H. BIEL,
Legislative Chairman Chicago Federation Woman's Club.

CHAUTAUQUA, N. Y., July 1, 1922.

Senator MCKINLEY,
Senate Chamber, Washington, D. C.:

With the trade war so plainly evident behind the Voigt bill public health has nothing to do, but when they use public health as a smoke screen it should be repudiated. An edible fat added to skimmed milk and properly labeled is an economical addition to our food supply and not deleterious to health.

EVA M. WILSON,
Chairman Public Health Illinois Federation of Women's Clubs.

CHICAGO, ILL., July 3, 1922.

Hon. WM. MCKINLEY,
Senate Chamber, Washington, D. C.:

Knowing you desire in legislative matters to get the angle of the people back home, I wish to enter my protest against the passage of the Voigt bill. Economy in the household demands a place on the market for the milk compounds.

Mrs. BLANCH R. TAYBS, Chicago, Ill.

CHAUTAUQUA, N. Y., June 30, 1922.

Senator MEDILL MCCORMICK,
Senate Chamber, Washington, D. C.:

The passage of the Voigt bill would establish a far-reaching and insidious precedent that would interfere with business and be to the disadvantage of the home maker. As one of your constituents, devoted to assisting the housewife in solving her problems in selection of foods and expenditure of income, I respectfully urge you to vote against the Voigt bill.

JEAN PRESCOTT ADAMS,
Delegate, National Convention General Federation of Women's Clubs.

CHICAGO, ILL., July 5, 1922.

Senator WILLIAM MCKINLEY,
Senate Chamber, Washington, D. C.:

Chicago housewives favor milk compound for cooking and baking. Would consider it a calamity to have this economical product debarred from trade by passage of Voigt filled milk bill. Urge you report it unfavorably and use your influence for its defeat.

DORA EARLE, Chicago, Ill.

CHICAGO, ILL., July 3, 1922.

Hon. WM. MCKINLEY,
Senate Chamber, Washington, D. C.:

In the interests of the poor we should not force legislation which would debar from the market economical foods like milk compounds which are not injurious to health. Therefore I ask you to use your influence to defeat the Voigt bill.

MINNIE STARR GOODWIN,
Past President Illinois Federation of Women's Clubs.

CHAUTAUQUA, N. Y., June 30, 1922.

Senator MEDILL MCCORMICK,
Senate Chamber, Washington, D. C.:

Present legislation against milk compounds is without justification from public health standpoint. I urge you to vote against the Voigt bill.

EVA M. WILSON,
Chairman Public Health, Illinois Federation of Women's Clubs.

CHAUTAUQUA, N. Y., June 30, 1922.

Senator MEDILL MCCORMICK,
Senate Chamber, Washington, D. C.:

The combination of skim milk and vegetable fat can be put upon the market at a much lower cost than can whole milk properly labeled. It is a useful and highly nutritious food. I am opposed to the present trade war which would legislate such combinations off the market. For these reasons I ask you as my representative at Washington to oppose the Voigt bill.

Mrs. JOHN MILLOY, Elmhurst, Ill.

CHAUTAUQUA, N. Y., June 30, 1922.

Senator MEDILL MCCORMICK,
Senate Chamber, Washington, D. C.:

I am opposed to the Voigt bill. If the interests back of the Voigt bill are truly concerned about the health of infants why not substitute a bill making it a penal offense for anyone to manufacture anything that would be deleterious to the health of infants and children and not try to eliminate competition by hiding behind the guise of public health?

MARION H. BIEL,
Legislative Chairman Chicago Federation Woman's Clubs.

CHAUTAUQUA, N. Y., June 30, 1922.

Senator MCCORMICK,
Senate Chamber, Washington, D. C.:

Milk compounds have never been proved and never can be proved deleterious to health, so I urge you to use all the influence possible to defeat the Voigt bill. It is an interference with business that should not be tolerated.

RHODA VIALL,
Home Economics Teachers, Manteno, Ill.

Senator MEDILL MCCORMICK,
Senate Chamber, Washington, D. C.:

Urge defeat of Voigt bill. Am convinced its proponents are actuated by purely selfish motives. The elimination of competition pseudo and not real philanthropy is behind their contention that skimmed-milk compounds are fed to babies and constitutes a menace to health; no cases substantiate this claim.

Senator MEDILL MCCORMICK,
Washington, D. C.:

Skim milk with vegetable fat put upon the market in properly labeled containers has the approval of our home economics people and of the best medical authorities. The Voigt bill would legislate these products off the market; therefore I urge you to use your influence to defeat it.

Senator MEDILL MCCORMICK,
Senate Chamber, Washington, D. C.:

The waste of wholesome, nutritious food material is economically unsound and keeps the cost of living higher than necessary. As Voigt bill is aimed at an industry which conserves over a million pounds of skimmed milk a year, I urge you as my Representative to work actively against it.

LEONA A. KRAG,
Member Illinois Women's Athletic Club.

Mr. DIAL. Mr. President, I notice that a great many of these telegrams, perhaps all of them, are from ladies, and they speak in about the same terms as the telegrams that I have already read. It was surprising to me to see the great unanimity of opinion of these ladies.

Then, Mr. President, on page 72 of the hearings, I find a statement from Doctor Goehle, of Cleveland:

Senator MCKINLEY—

Who was the chairman of the subcommittee—

Will you give your name to the reporter?

Doctor GOEHLE. O. L. Goehle. Mr. Chairman, I am attendant at the Cleveland City Hospital and the Lakewood Hospital and the St. Johns Hospital, and I am also attending director of the Lakewood Dispensary, and these positions give me ample opportunity to have many feeding cases under my charge. I have for the last seven and one-half years been using S. M. A., five years with Doctor Gerstenberger at the Babies' Dispensary and then two and one-half years since it has been put out for public use in Cleveland—in other words, two and one-half years in private practice and also at the dispensaries where I am officiating.

I have used it for children, infants, premature infants, even from the first day, and I have used it over long periods, a good many times longer than 10 months and quite often as long as a year. So I have been able to watch the growth and development of these children under this food, and there are, I think, all told about 700 children that I have fed it to, and within the last two and one-half years I think I have had about 500 private children and about 120 of those are on my list right now. These children stand out among other children on artificial foods as especially finely developed, sturdy, well-fed children, coming close to and in a good many instances, I believe, equaling breast-fed children.

Their average of weight progress is well above the normal; their skin is soft and smooth, the tissues are firm, muscles are well developed, and their bony framework is particularly fine. I do not know of any children that have any better teeth than they, and I have been able to follow those children two or three years later, and I do not find any evidence of early decay, so that all in all the effect has been very gratifying from the medical point of view. And judging from the demand as it is made by my mothers who have either seen other mothers' babies on S. M. A. or who have had one or two children in their family on other foodstuffs, and have had one youngster on S. M. A.

and who then have a new body come in, they are very much impressed with the results obtained with S. M. A.

They come in and make the demand for S. M. A. for two reasons, either because they want a baby as good as Mrs. So-and-so's, or because they wish this baby to be as good as the S. M. A. baby they have had. And then one of the biggest reasons is that they know they can not get it except on a doctor's prescription.

I have had no deleterious effects at all in the many cases I have seen, and absolutely no rickets, and this very dreaded condition which grows panic in the mother's heart, this tendency toward convulsions that so many children get on artificial feedings—I have not met this in these children I have fed S. M. A.

From the point of view of infant feeding I think it is really a God-send. It is foolproof against the attempts of mothers to meddle with the food. The universally general result has been excellent.

Mr. President, that is what a physician in charge of a hospital has to say on the subject. So it does seem to me that Congress is drifting around and going very far to hunt up subjects on which to legislate.

It will not be long before the citizens of this country will not know which way to turn. Congress will prescribe what they shall eat, what they shall wear, how they shall become heated, what they shall drink, and how they shall conduct their business, and before starting in life people will have to come to Washington and go through a universal training. Otherwise the people of this country will serve in the penitentiaries, I am afraid, for the Government will find them and confiscate all their wealth.

I very much wish Senators would look into this bill and call a halt on this kind of legislation. There are some kindred bills a little farther down on the calendar along the same line, and I think we have adopted enough bad legislation in the last couple of years, since the Republicans have been in power. The Republicans are getting terribly discouraged now, and if they keep on they will lose all hope and the next election will not have enough "pep" in it to make it amusing. We do not want to kill them off all at once, and I want to warn them that the people will not stand much of this kind of legislation.

I believe this bill possesses somewhat fewer iniquities than does the shipping bill, possibly, in that it does not deal in such large amounts; but I would hesitate a good while before I would vote to take up either one of these bills. I might vote to take up the filled milk bill, as I would have to choose between them, but I would be doing great violence to my conscience, and I wish somebody would talk from now to the end of the session so that we would not have to go through that ordeal.

With this warning to our friends on the other side, I believe I will let them go along now, as far as I am concerned, and take a vote if they want to, but I hope legislation along the line of this filled milk bill and a few of the kindred bills which follow it on the calendar will never be put upon our statute books.

CONFIRMATION OF MILES POINDEXTER AS AMBASSADOR TO PERU.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, I ask that the Senate in open executive session consider the nomination of ambassador to Peru, which has just been received from the President.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. ODDIE in the chair). Without objection, the Chair, in open executive session, lays before the Senate the nomination by the President, which will be read:

The Assistant Secretary read as follows:

THE WHITE HOUSE, February 19, 1923.

To the Senate of the United States:

I nominate MILES POINDEXTER, of Washington, to be Ambassador Extraordinary and Plenipotentiary of the United States of America to Peru, effective March 5, 1923.

WARREN G. HARDING.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, unanimous consent is always granted for consideration in such cases where a member of the body has been nominated to office by the President, and I ask unanimous consent for the consideration of the nomination.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection? The Chair hears none.

Mr. LODGE. I ask for the confirmation of the nomination in open executive session.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is, Will the Senate advise and consent to this nomination? [Putting the question.] It is unanimously agreed to.

Mr. LODGE. I ask that the President may be notified.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The President will be notified of the confirmation.

Mr. LODGE. I ask that the Senate return to legislative session.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It is so ordered, and the Senate resumes legislative session.

THE MERCHANT MARINE—FILLED MILK.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 12817) to amend and supplement the merchant marine act, 1920, and for other purposes, the pending question being on the motion of Mr. LADD that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill (H. R. 8086) to prohibit the shipment of filled milk in interstate or foreign commerce.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, I rise merely to try to clear up what may appear to some to be a wide difference of opinion on this side as to the wisdom of taking up the so-called Ladd bill or to allow the ship subsidy bill to be proceeded with.

I do not understand how anyone got it into his head that there was a filibuster on. It must have been a slip of the tongue when some one said there was a filibuster. I for one do not admit that there is any filibuster, and if there were a real filibuster on, Senators and the country would know it. How anyone can imagine that there is a filibuster on, under the circumstances, is beyond my comprehension.

In a short session of Congress, within two and one-half months, this side of the Chamber has cooperated with the other side in passing every appropriation bill for the support of the Government. I do not know whether we have passed 12 or not; it used to be 12 before we adopted our new-fangled rules, but, anyway, every appropriation bill for running the Government has been passed, and I think all except two are now laws, those two being the Army appropriation bill and one other bill.

Mr. LODGE. The District of Columbia appropriation bill.

Mr. HARRISON. Yes; the District appropriation bill; and there may be a deficiency bill yet. We know there will be more deficiencies. I shall be surprised if there are not two or three deficiency bills within the 10 days yet remaining, because the appropriations have been cut so much under the estimates that we may be assured that before we adjourn on the 4th of March we will have a deficiency appropriation bill in this body which will carry around $75,000,000 or maybe $100,000,000.

May I ask the Senator from North Carolina if he has any hint of another deficiency appropriation bill and how much it will be? I just wager—not being a betting man, I wager—that the Appropriations Committee has some hint of some large amount to be carried in a deficiency appropriation bill between now and the 4th of March.

Mr. OVERMAN. I think it will carry $56,000,000.

Mr. HARRISON. Fifty-six million dollars. The Senator from Massachusetts knew that, but I, not being on the inside, did not know what the amount of the deficiency appropriation would be.

Mr. LODGE. The Senator might have guessed it by thinking of the amount added to the Army appropriation bill for rivers and harbors.

Mr. HARRISON. Rivers and harbors! That is a matter about which the administration was very unwise. The engineers of the Government said that in order to promote commerce we needed about $57,000,000 to provide for channels and harbors and their maintenance, and the Budget Bureau, without rhyme or reason, not having any knowledge of engineering, knowing nothing about the condition of the rivers and harbors of the country, fooled the President, so that the President allowed the Budget Bureau to cut the estimate down to about $27,000,000.

You could not expect Senators of individual views to accept such a proposition as that, because from the time the engineers were made a part of the Government the Senate has accepted their views over those of civilians, so far as appropriations to take care of rivers and harbors were concerned, and I can not understand how the President could ever imagine that the Congress of the United States could accept an estimate of the Budget Bureau for river and harbor improvements to the extent of $27,000,000 when the engineers said $57,000,000 was needed, and, of course, the Congress approved the estimate of the engineers.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Mississippi yield to the Senator from Nebraska?

Mr. HARRISON. I yield.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I will state to the Senator that if the Government of the United States had required Great Britain, in the bill passed Friday, to pay the same amount of interest we will be compelled to pay on our bonds this deficiency would not be necessary. Fifty-seven million dollars is exactly the amount of money we will pay in interest more than we will receive from Great Britain upon the deferred debt.

Mr. HARRISON. The Senator is exactly right in that. Of course, under the Democratic administration—though I do not want to talk politics—the Treasury Department said that the interest rate on those bonds would be 5 per cent, I believe, but the five distinguished Republicans now representing this Government on the Debt Funding Commission said that a lower rate of interest was sufficient, so that went through. That is the way they are running things. But I did not want to get off on that. I wanted to remove this impression about a filibuster.

We have passed all these appropriation bills. We have helped the Republicans. We helped them to pass, forced them to pass, the Capper and the Lenroot agricultural credits bills. Talk about a filibuster; the distinguished Senator from Arkansas [Mr. ROBINSON] was the one who proposed the unanimous-consent agreement to stop the debate upon the Lenroot agricultural credits bill. If he had not done that, perhaps the debate would have been going on until now. It was the distinguished Senator from Virginia [Mr. SWANSON] who proposed the unanimous-consent request to close the debate and vote upon the British debt proposition. So we Democrats have been helping the Republicans along, but they do not seem to appreciate it. When a Democrat on this side even hints that there is a filibuster on, Senators on the other side sit in their places and do not come to the rescue of those of us who are trying to help them push legislation through.

Now, what is the picture? Here is the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. LADD], not a Democrat, but a Democrat in his belief and in his votes, who continues over on the other side of the Chamber when he should be sitting over here. He has proposed consideration of the skimmed milk or filled milk bill. He has said that the great dairy interests of the country need it. He has said that it would preserve the health of the children; that it is wholesome and reasonable and needful legislation. He has sat in his seat here for days and, under your leadership of the majority, has seen things go from bad to worse. He has seen the moments flitting by and the 4th of March coming on, and he knows that unless he makes an effort the dairy interests of the country will, in his opinion, suffer by virtue of the failure of the passage of the skimmed or filled milk bill.

So he rose in his place and made a motion to take up that bill for consideration, and the Senator from Washington [Mr. JONES], I suppose frightened and afraid to discuss the motion on its merits, moved to table that motion, which meant that no discussion upon the merits of the motion of the Senator from North Dakota could ensue. Of course, the majority of the Senate are not going to strangle the dairy industry of the country. They believe that every reasonable bill should have some time for discussion upon the floor of the Senate, and so they voted down the motion to table. Now, the important question is before the Senate whether we shall take up the skimmed or filled milk bill or continue consideration of the ship subsidy bill, and drag and drag along, when we know and you know and everybody knows that, outside of Lasker and the President and my friend from Washington, the ship subsidy bill has no friends.

With the country needing legislation, with committees having placed bills upon the calendar, are we to sit here and allow the ship subsidy bill to drag its weary way along and not turn our hands in order to get up legislation that will really benefit, in our various opinions, certain interests of the country? If we stay here, this same old debate would go on and on. Nobody seems to want to help the ship subsidy bill on to passage.

I have watched my friend from Oregon [Mr. MCNARY], who has had a bill on the calendar, I will say, for a year at least, known as the McNary reclamation irrigation bill. The steering committee of your party met and named it as one of the first bills to be considered at this session of Congress. The President has been talked to about it. He has given it his O. K. The press has said that the McNary reclamation bill would be one of the bills this Congress would pass, and yet the ship subsidy bill is kept here when everybody knows it can not pass, and is permitted to drag itself along and block the McNary reclamation bill. If some Senator from the West on the other side of the Chamber, who has promised his people to stand for and advocate the passage of the McNary reclamation bill, does not make the motion to take it up, the motion will be made and it will not be made to carry out a plan of filibuster. It will be made in order to show to the country that the great West and the South, needing this legislation, wish to have it enacted.

That is not the only motion that will be made. Here is the truth in fabrics bill. How many Senators over on the other side of the Chamber have promised their constituents that they are going to pass the truth in fabrics bill? And yet whenever the motion shall be made some one will say it is a filibuster upon the part of those on this side of the Chamber, when we have done little more than discuss bills as they have come up and voted to help Senators on the other side of the Chamber carry their motions when made for the consideration of their bills.

I realize that there are two viewpoints with respect to the ship subsidy bill. The Senator from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD] believes that the wise course for his party to pursue is to get a vote on the ship subsidy bill. For my part, I have no objection in the world to a vote on the ship subsidy bill. I know that its passage would benefit the Democratic Party, if there were sufficient votes to pass it and it could be brought to a vote. I do not believe there is a Senator who would vote for the bill who could go back to his people immediately and be returned to the Senate after having voted for it. I think it is monstrous, but with all the bills on the calendar that various Senators are trying to have considered, the ship subsidy bill has little chance to pass.

Why should we be strangled on such an important measure? Why insist upon meeting at 10 o'clock in the morning, taking no recess for dinner, and staying here until 10 or 11 o'clock at night to consider the ship subsidy bill, when Senators on the other side of the Chamber are constantly making motions to supplant it and getting enough votes to supplant it? We all know that we would accomplish more by proceeding in an orderly way, and that a majority of the Senate are opposed to the ship subsidy bill. I do not mean a majority of the Senate would vote against the ship subsidy bill when the vote comes, because I know there are certain Senators on the other side of the aisle who are like frightened birds upon a rotten twig. They are trembling and ready to fly at the first crack of the twig. I suppose some of those faint-hearted gentlemen will, in the end, when the roll is called vote for the bill, but in their hearts they do not believe in it. I will not say they are praying, but they are hoping that the vote will not come.

The Senator from Alabama realized that. He has analyzed the situation with his keen intellect, and he knows that it will put the majority in trouble. He believes the best way to do it is to come to a vote, but as for myself I am taking a broader view of the proposition than the Senator from Alabama does.

While I am perfectly willing to have a vote, I really want to help protect Senators from their own folly. I want to help fix a pallet, so to speak, on which some of them may rest easy, so they may get away from the influences of the Executive power that are demanding of them to vote for the ship subsidy legislation. I do not think any of them are going to get mad with us for delaying the ship subsidy bill a little bit.

I submit, Mr. President, that as yet there is not a real filibuster on, and it can not be laid at our door that there is a real filibuster going on. Things are going along in a very nice way. We are trying to consider some legislation. When that shall have been finished, then we want to consider the truth-in-fabrics bill, and then we ought to consider a piece of legislation which the President came down here and had sent back to the committee because, he said, there were no funds with which to meet it, and which now, after the passage of the British debt bill, might be met with those funds. Anyway, the condition has been met; and we might take up, if you want to, the soldiers' bonus legislation and pass that.

There is much to be done. Here is the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. NORBECK], who has a bill reported out of the committee having relation to the standardization of prices or guarantee of the price of wheat, I believe it is. He thinks that is an important piece of legislation. The wheat people out West think it is an important piece of legislation. I do not know that I shall vote for it, but I am in favor of giving it a day in court, letting us discuss the bill and present the merits of it, and then vote upon it. Every day that we prolong the discussion on the ship subsidy bill and let it drag its weary way along, as it has been allowed to drag along, means just that much more delay in the consideration of the Norbeck wheat proposition.

This morning we tried to procure some time to take up the calendar on to-morrow and because we could not agree upon 11 o'clock as the hour of meeting, objection was interposed by the distinguished Senator from Washington [Mr. JONES]. Here are 100 bills in which various Senators are interested and in which people from various sections are interested. If we do not consider them now and the Senate does not pass them now, they will not be considered by the House before adjournment. In other words, in just a few days the wheels will be clogged and we will not be able to pass any more legislation. Why not allow us to have four hours to-morrow to consider the calendar and take up unobjected bills, and then consider the motion made by the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. LADD] to consider the skimmed or filled milk bill, and go along without trying to force through at this time the ship subsidy bill?

Mr. President, I do not know whether anyone else wants to talk on the motion or not. I am going to vote for the motion to take up the bill. In doing so, I do not believe I am filibustering. I am merely presenting an opportunity for the consideration of what certain Senators believe to be an important bill. I hope that a majority will vote to take up the measure. If that motion fails, there will be another motion made to-morrow to take up another bill. For instance, I filed this morning a motion to discharge a certain committee from further consideration of a bill. I will say that unless a reasonable explanation is made by the committee that has had and now has in charge the codification of the laws, I shall insist upon a vote to discharge the committee and take up that bill for consideration. That bill passed the House about 20 months ago, if I am not mistaken in my dates; at any rate a long time ago. The chairman of the House committee and those on the committee with him worked for nearly two years to codify the laws and the bill passed the House and yet in all the time it has been in the Senate it has slept in the committee room and no report has been made on it.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Mississippi yield to the Senator from Kansas?

Mr. HARRISON. I yield.

Mr. CURTIS. The Senator's statement is hardly fair. The first bill that came over was referred to a subcommittee of three appointed to take charge of the measure. The distinguished former Senator from Delaware, Mr. Wolcott, who was then a Member of the Senate——

Mr. HARRISON. Let me ask the Senator a question right there. When was it that the first bill came over to the Senate?

Mr. CURTIS. During the last Congress.

Mr. HARRISON. It was in the last Congress?

Mr. CURTIS. Yes. That bill was carefully considered by every member of the subcommittee, and upon the suggestion of Senator Wolcott alone, because he had discovered several errors, one of which was very material in the part referred to him, your committee did not feel that they would be justified in reporting it out. We were told that that error alone would cost the Government $30,000,000 a year.

Mr. HARRISON. That was in the Sixty-sixth Congress, as the Senator from Kansas has stated. During the Sixty-seventh Congress, which has been in session for practically two years, the same bill was passed by the House as passed during the Sixty-sixth Congress, with some suggested changes.

Mr. CURTIS. I understood the Senator to say that since the bill passed the House it has been sleeping in committee in the Senate. I say that the committee which had charge of it in the last Congress did consider and examine the bill, and that over 57 errors were brought to the attention of the committee by one department.

Mr. HARRISON. I understand that; there is no difference between the Senator from Kansas and myself about that proposition. I think the House of Representatives in the Sixty-sixth Congress, as I recall, under the leadership of Mr. LITTLE, of Kansas, passed the bill. It came here and was referred to the committee, and the circumstances to which the Senator has called attention occurred. Then, in the present Congress, which has been in existence for practically two years, the same bill was passed by the House of Representatives some 20 months ago. It has been in the committee of the Senate since that time. I will ask the Senator from Kansas if that is not a fair statement of the fact?

Mr. CURTIS. I am not on the subcommittee at this time, and I do not know what has been done by the committee, except what the acting chairman of the committee told me. He is not now present, and I would rather he would explain what has been done in reference to the bill. I would like to see the bill carefully considered by the committee, and have it reported to the Senate with such amendments as the committee may find should be made.

Mr. HARRISON. So the bill has been in the Senate for a long time. I do not know what effort has been made to consider it in the committee. I do not know whether any mistakes have been detected or not. Naturally, there would be some mistakes in a great bill like that, but the Senate is entitled and the House is entitled to some explanation about the bill. To-day I filed a motion to discharge the committee from further consideration of the bill, and unless there is some explanation made upon the floor of the Senate and some progress is shown and some reason given why a vote should not be taken upon the motion to discharge, I shall press the motion.

There is much legislation that should be enacted before the present Congress shall finally adjourn. I am not unmindful of the few things that we have already done during this session. Outside of the passage of the appropriation bills and the withdrawal of the Liberian loan measure, which was done during the extraordinary session, as I recall, and the ultimate withdrawal of the Dyer antilynching bill, so called, the only thing that has been done has been the passage of the Capper and Lenroot agricultural credits bills and the measure providing for the settlement of the British debt.

The Capper and the Lenroot bills are now in the other House, and we read in the newspapers every morning that it is, indeed, doubtful whether those bills will pass the House before the 4th of March; indeed, a statement emanating from one high in Republican councils hinted that the agricultural credits bills would not pass the other House unless the Senate passed the ship subsidy bill. So it seems that we are playing both ends against the middle. We over here who made the fight for agricultural credits legislation are told, if not indirectly, by insinuation, that unless we allow a vote to be taken upon the ship subsidy bill the agricultural credits bills will die in the other House. I hope there are enough friends of the farmers in the House of Representatives to compel action before the 4th of March, so that those pieces of wholesome legislation in behalf of the great agricultural interests will be enacted into law.

I wish that the administration, realizing the iniquitous provisions of the ship subsidy bill and the strong opposition there is to it, and appreciating that if the Senate as it will be composed in the Sixty-eighth Congress should be given an opportunity to vote upon the measure it would be overwhelmingly defeated, would withdraw the bill and take the people into their confidence and tell them why the bill was withdrawn.

Mr. TRAMMELL. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will call the roll.

The reading clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Ashurst	George	McKinley	Shortridge
Ball	Gerry	McLean	Smith
Bayard	Glass	McNary	Smoot
Borah	Gooding	Moses	Spencer
Brandegee	Hale	Nelson	Stanley
Brookhart	Harreld	New	Sterling
Broussard	Harris	Nicholson	Sutherland
Calder	Harrison	Norbeck	Swanson
Cameron	Heflin	Norris	Townsend
Capper	Hitchcock	Oddie	Trammell
Colt	Johnson	Overman	Underwood
Couzens	Jones, Wash.	Pepper	Wadsworth
Curtis	Kellogg	Phipps	Walsh, Mass.
Dial	Keyes	Pittman	Walsh, Mont.
Dillingham	King	Pomerene	Warren
Edge	Ladd	Ransdell	Weller
Ernst	La Follette	Reed, Mo.	Williams
Fernald	Lenroot	Reed, Pa.
Fletcher	Lodge	Robinson
Frelinghuysen	McKellar	Sheppard

The VICE PRESIDENT. Seventy-seven Senators have answered to their names. A quorum of the Senate is present. The question is on the motion of the Senator from North Dakota that the Senate proceed to the consideration of House bill 8086. Upon that question the yeas and nays have been ordered.

Mr. STANLEY. Mr. President, during many years service in the House and Senate I have listened with rapt attention to the weighty words of my valued friend and honored colleague. I concur always with pleasure and differ seldom, and then with a sense of profound regret and with a suspicion that after all he may be right and that I may be wrong, for I have seen his judgment tried in the school of long experience. In expressing a difference on this occasion, it will not, I am sure, be construed in any sense as a condemnation or even as an implied criticism. I am impelled, however, to say what I say now out of deference for the great leader of the minority [Mr. UNDERWOOD] upon this floor. By virtue of his exalted and well-deserved position his words have a weight those of the average Senator have not; they have a significance that the expressions of no other Senator upon this side can have.

With much that he said I do most heartily concur. I was delighted to hear him remind the Senate and remind the country that we are going headlong into a course of Federal aggression; that bills presented here, almost without exception, nibble at least at what is left of the sovereignty of the States and of the institution of local self-government. Sane and conservative men in Congress and out of it, ministers of the gospel, learned educators, thoughtful patriots everywhere are beginning to ask themselves and to ask us the question, "Whither are we tending, and where will this thing end?"

I was delighted to hear the Senator make that observation. I can not agree, however, not with what he said, but with what might be inferred from his statement. He left me under the impression that Congress is busy and deserves the commendation of the country only when this legislative mill is grinding. As long as committees are reporting bills and this side of the Chamber, like the other, is passing them, then we are a good

Congress; but when we put on the brakes, when we say, "Stop, look, and listen!" then we are a bad Congress; and he referred to the conduct of the lower House as an illustration of the proper method of legislation.

Mr. President, the worst thing the Senate does, the worst thing Congress does, for the country and for humanity and for whichever party is responsible for its conduct is the passage of a multiplicity of half-baked, undigested measures—not measures that are demanded by a majority of the people, not measures that are responsive to the call of the intelligent mass of the people, but measures hatched often by sinister interests or interests backed by organized propaganda posing as the voice of the people. Members of Congress pass bills not because a majority approves or requires them, but because those who make the most noise and are the best organized demand them.

Mr. DIAL. Mr. President——

Mr. STANLEY. I yield to the Senator from South Carolina.

Mr. DIAL. I call the Senator's attention at this point to the fact that in the filled milk bill, subdivision (2), line 9, it says "between points within the same State." That certainly invades State rights. The Congress can not legislate about commerce between points within the same State. That is intrastate commerce, not interstate commerce.

Mr. STANLEY. I called the attention of the Senator from Iowa [Mr. BROOKHART] to that very point in the discussion of the measure.

Mr. DIAL. I beg the Senator's pardon. I did not hear it.

Mr. STANLEY. I am glad the Senator called attention to it again.

Mr. President, the Congress of the United States, when it is in good health and operating normally, when no stubborn minority member administers some kind of costive remedy, will pass more bills in one week than are passed in an entire legislative session by any other parliamentary body on earth. We pass more bills, we enact more laws, in one year than the British Parliament enacts in twenty. There is no deliberative body on earth as poorly attended as this one. The Senate of the United States is the most deserted legislative chamber on the face of the earth that deserves the name of a legislative chamber; and the reason why it is deserted is because we understand that more or less here it is stage play; that the work is done in committees; that we have ceased to weigh and consider, or, as Lord Bacon says, "to chew and digest" anything.

Last night I happened to be reading, in my opinion, one of the greatest speeches ever made by the greatest orator who ever adorned this floor. Taking him all in all, in his knowledge of the law, his marvelous command of sonorous and comprehensive English, his incisive power of deduction and debate, Webster stands unique in the history of forensic oratory; and, with the sole exception of his great answer to Hayne, in my opinion the greatest speech he ever made is his discussion of the tariff act of 1824. At that time, nearly 100 years ago, he rose in his place and complained that they had brought a great tariff bill into the Congress of the United States weighed and trammeled by rules and regulations to such an extent that its sane consideration was impossible, and that he, perforce, must vote for many things in it that he regarded pernicious if there happened to be in it more things that he regarded as salutary, or he must vote against many things that he thought necessary to the welfare of his country if those good things happened to be associated with others that he thought more deleterious; that it was unworthy, even in that day, of debate in a legislative body thus to tie its hands and gag its mouth and stultify its reason for the sake of political expediency.

Mr. President, were we to borrow the policy of the House of Representatives, which has at times ceased to be a deliberative body on important matters, and install—and I am sure the Senator from Alabama upon sober consideration does not approve of such a thing—adopt a rule providing that two hours after a bill comes in it must go out, without any amendment or modification or intervening motion whatsoever; in such a case it would not be long before the Congress of the United States would be the subject of jest and of deserved contempt, and would be and should be spewed out of the mouth of a brave and intelligent people. If we are not here to consider legislation, if we are not here to weigh it, if the only consideration that bills are to receive must be had by a few more or less interested Representatives behind closed doors in a committee, then this whole system of government is a mockery and a sham, and our assembling here an empty and hollow ceremony.

Mr. President, just the other day I went before a committee, the Judiciary Committee, to protest against the passage of a bill that had passed the House of Representatives by an overwhelming majority. One provision of that bill would send a boy in his teens to the penitentiary for five years and subject him to a $5,000 fine for giving his mother an account of a game of football if he happened to mention the odds. If he said, "The chances are 2 to 1, according to the judgment of the boys here, that he will win," it made him a felon; and there were 50 or 60 learned and reverend gentlemen there to advocate the passage of that bill. It would have excluded from the mails, it would have excluded from the news stands of the United States, the Manchester Guardian, the London Times, every great newspaper in the world; and yet we are told that we must stand here at the mouth of that cloaca of federalistic compounds as they are poured in here upon us, with our hands tied, deaf and dumb, because somebody will say we are not at work unless we are grinding out legislation.

The multiplicity of our laws to-day is the curse of our civilization. We are told of a tyrant who wrote the statutes of his country upon pillars so high that none could read. What is the difference between writing them where none can read and writing so many that none will ever be able to review or to understand them?

Fifty years ago, or thereabouts, Mark Twain on one occasion was walking down the streets of Boston. That was before the spirit of Cotton Mather moved South, more is the pity. A policeman stepped up and touched him on the shoulder and said, "Mr. Clemens, I see you are chewing tobacco. You must not chew and expectorate on the street. That is an offense." He said, "You must not spit on the street. There is a $5 fine." And he spat out his beloved quid, and walked a little farther and lit a cigar. When he got through he threw the stub in the street, and another policeman said, "Hold on. You must not litter up the pavements, Mr. Clemens. That is against the laws of Boston. There is a $5 fine, but if you will just pay me the $5 for your appearance I will not make an arrest"; and he handed over another $5. Then he crossed the street the wrong way, and he caught it for $5 more; and he went home, and deliberately wrote that "he who has been born in Boston and has kept all its laws and ordinances need never be born again."

He who is born in these United States, and keeps the greater part of all the laws and ordinances that are made for our guidance, need never be born again. Yes, more than that: We are told, Mr. President, in Holy Writ, that above the cherubim and the seraphim, above angels and archangels, in the cerulean blue and in the white light of an endless elysium, there will be spirits loftier still, the spirits of just men made perfect those who came up through great trials and tribulations; but above the martyrs and the early Christians, above cherubim and seraphim, will be that creature who, from a federally conducted birth to a federally controlled burial, kept all the laws and ordinances now enacted for our Government by the Congress of the United States.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President, I think that when the milk bill comes up on its merits I shall vote for it, unless some reason is urged against it which does not occur to me now. I am profoundly of the opinion that man, woman, and child have a right to pure milk when they buy milk. If any reason has been urged, or can be urged, why they should not have that right, and shall not have it, I shall be glad to hear it.

I do not believe the so-called filled milk bill should be taken up now, to displace the ship subsidy bill, and when I say that, I want it distinctly understood that I can not vote for the ship subsidy bill. I feel that it will prove a snare and a delusion, and if I needed any reason to convince me of it more than another, I find the reason in the speeches which are being made on the floor of the Senate in favor of a ship subsidy. At some later day in the session, if the opportunity presents itself, I shall try to discuss that question upon its merits, but I want very briefly to-night to give my reasons for my vote against displacing it.

I recall that in the early days of this country we had the greatest merchant marine on the face of the globe, except for the British merchant marine. There was a time in the early history of our country when 90 per cent of the imports and exports came and went in American bottoms, and notwithstanding our tremendous growth during the last century only about 10 per cent of our transoceanic commerce came and went in American bottoms.

Then the war came on and we were drawn into it, and out of the womb of necessity was born a merchant marine consisting of 1,442 steel ships. I pass by those made of wood and concrete. Now, with this great fleet of 1,442 ships, only 421 of them are in commission, and many of them are returning, not with cargoes, but with ballast. That fleet cost the American people $3,000,000,000, paid out of the American Treasury.

The Democratic administration was succeeded by the Republican administration, and we still have this merchant-marine fleet, without any well-defined policy with respect to it. The question is, What shall we do with it? On one side of this Chamber one view is entertained, and another view is entertained by other Senators.

Mr. DIAL. Mr. President, I want to suggest to the Senator that Congress inserted a provision in the tariff bill putting a tariff on the ballast, sand, and gravel shipped back in those ships.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President, as I said before, I shall expect to take up that subject, and I shall discuss it more at length at some other time, but I am now trying to address myself to a discussion of the duty of Senators.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, may I interrupt the Senator?

Mr. POMERENE. Certainly.

Mr. KING. The Senator has challenged attention to the fact that we have more than 1,400 ships. I am sure the Senator will not take offense if I observe that Mr. Lasker stated in his testimony that approximately one-half of the ships now owned by the Shipping Board or the Emergency Fleet Corporation are good, bad, or indifferent, mostly bad. I think the majority of the evidence establishes the fact that perhaps not more than from 400 to 600 of the ships are suitable either for cargo purposes or for the transportation of passengers. So that we have spent about $3,400,000,000, and we have in the neighborhood of 400 or 500 ships.

Mr. POMERENE. In the main, the Senator is right. The total tonnage of the steel ships is about 7,000,000. As I recall Mr. Lasker's testimony, it is to the effect that about one-half of that tonnage can be sold and can be developed. As to the balance of it there is considerable doubt. But let me proceed a little further.

In December, I believe, 71 per cent of our exports were carried in foreign bottoms, only 29 per cent in American bottoms, and of that amount, 19 per cent was carried in ships belonging to the United States Shipping Board, the balance in privately owned ships.

Now, the President tells us—and I have no doubt he is right—that under Government operation of these ships during the last year we have lost $50,000,000, and that does not take into account interest on investment, depreciation of the fleet, or insurance. So that probably we are confronted with an annual loss, if we are to take into consideration interest, depreciation, and insurance, amounting to about $150,000,000.

I am not calling attention to this fact because I favor a ship subsidy. On the contrary, I am against it. But I call the Senate's attention to this fact because it must come with appealing force that it is necessary for the Congress to determine what course we shall pursue.

I think the remedy lies along the lines laid down in the Jones Act, passed in 1920. It may be that certain Senators have not made up their minds as to what course they should pursue, but I am convinced that we should not displace this bill, but should discuss it, to the end that the country can come to an enlightened conclusion as to what ought to be done, and whether there shall ultimately be a vote or not, the discussion is going to bring forth fruit. For that reason, if for no other, I shall not vote to displace the ship subsidy bill now. I think we ought to discuss it. I think we ought to discuss it upon its merits, and then come to a conclusion.

I might go on and discuss at some length the plan which is proposed in the bill and the plan which I have in mind, but I shall not do that this evening.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, will the Senator yield before resuming his seat?

Mr. POMERENE. Certainly.

Mr. KING. If I may recur to the first part of the Senator's observation, in which he discussed very briefly, indeed, only by inference, the filled milk bill, which it is proposed to place before the Senate for consideration, he observed that he believed that people were entitled to pure milk. Of course no one can take issue with the learned Senator on that proposition. I was wondering if the Senator felt that it was the duty and was within the constitutional power of the Federal Government to take over that subject of legislation or whether he believed that the States were impotent to deal with the question of pure milk and whether he believed that the States should not be trusted with that responsibility. I express no opinion one way or the other, but I should be glad to get the Senator's views if he cares to submit them.

Mr. POMERENE. The Senator has made a very pertinent suggestion. I do not think the States are impotent, but I do think that the Congress may aid the States by regulating the commerce in milk between the States.

Mr. KING. If the Senator will pardon me, as I understand the filled milk bill, the manufacture of filled milk is made a Federal offense. It does not content itself with the regulation of interstate commerce, which we concede is within the power of the Federal Government.

The question would naturally address itself to a lawyer as to the power of the Federal Government to deal with the matter, which it would seem, at first blush at least, was within the cognizance of the State. If the Federal Government may take up the question of dealing with milk under the guise of regulating commerce, is there any commodity with which it may not deal? I express no opinion, as I said, and I am very much in sympathy with the purposes of the bill. If I can convince myself of its constitutionality and of the wisdom of it, I shall very gladly vote for it.

Mr. POMERENE. The Senator will recall that I made the statement that I was for the bill in principle unless something developed during the course of the discussion which would persuade me that I ought not to vote for it. The point which the Senator has suggested is one that I had in mind that gave me some little concern about it.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Mr. President, I have not had an opportunity to read carefully the hearings and so am not thoroughly familiar with what they disclose. Is there not some testimony in the record to the effect that the product is an unwholesome article of diet?

Mr. KING. I have not read the testimony and know nothing about the reasons other than would appear upon the face of the bill in favor of its enactment or its presentation.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. I observe by the report of the committee that the committee stated that it is an unwholesome article of diet. Are we to understand that there is no evidence at all in the hearings to sustain that action? I wanted to inquire what reason there is in that case to doubt the constitutionality of the measure which seems to have been raised.

Mr. KING. It is quite likely, if the article be placed in the same category as, for instance, narcotics, which it is conceded are injurious, that Congress would have the power.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Or all the articles covered by the pure food law, which has been adjudged to be constitutional.

Mr. KING. The Senator, I think, will distinguish between regulation and forbidding the manufacture absolutely.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. It is not a proposition of forbidding the manufacture at all. It is forbidding the transportation.

Mr. KING. I understand the bill forbids the manufacture. I am so advised, and that is the point to which I was addressing my inquiry.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. I was curious to know upon what ground anyone could question the constitutionality of it so far as it affected the transportation of the article from one State to another.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, may I suggest that I have heard it stated that scientists who have investigated the matter have reported that filled milk, while of less value as food than ordinary milk, is not deleterious, is not poisonous, and is not harmful, and some of them at least assert that it has a food value.

It has been stated that the question of the constitutionality of the bill arises out of the contemplated exercise by Congress of its power to regulate commerce in an effort to deny to an alleged harmless article movement in commerce.

The question is whether Congress can arbitrarily say that an article is deleterious when, as a matter of fact, scientific investigation does not disclose it to be deleterious. Could Congress, for instance, say that pure milk is deleterious and therefore shall be denied the privilege of interstate commerce? I think perhaps it would be agreed that it could not do so. So that the question arises as to whether the Congress has the power to characterize an article as deleterious which is in fact wholesome, and that question presents a good many difficulties. I think the question of fact may be important in determining the validity of legislation; that is, the question as to whether the article is in fact deleterious or is in fact wholesome.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. I find that, so far as the question of manufacture is concerned, the prohibition is in the Territorial possessions and the District of Columbia.

Mr. KING. Not within the States?

Mr. WALSH of Montana. So far as the States are concerned, it is simply where interstate shipments are concerned.

Mr. KING. Then it is more narrow than I supposed.

Mr. DIAL. Mr. President, the testimony that I have read shows that the compound is wholesome, that it has absolutely nothing wrong about it, that it is not falsely labeled, that it is nutritious. The only objection to it is that it is claimed that ignorant people use it for purposes for which it ought not to be used.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. I was aware of the fact that it is contended upon one side that it is a perfectly wholesome and nutritious article of food.

Mr. DIAL. It is so contended on both sides, as the Senator will find if he will read the testimony of the author of the bill.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. If it is admitted upon both sides, that is a different matter. I admit the question of the constitutionality of the legislation might be raised in that event; but I am referring to the report of the committee on the matter, which would indicate that it is an unwholesome article of food.

Mr. DIAL. I do not think that is borne out by the testimony. If the Senator would read the testimony of the author of the bill and of the first witness who was called, he would see that it is shown to be perfectly wholesome and its nature not misrepresented.

Mr. HEFLIN (at 6 o'clock and 5 minutes p. m.). Mr. President, there are so few Republicans here, and those who are here look so tired and worn, that I think we ought to adjourn. I move that the Senate do now adjourn.

Mr. JONES of Washington. On that I demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. MOSES and Mr. WATSON suggested the absence of a quorum.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will call the roll to ascertain the presence of a quorum.

The reading clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Ball	Gerry	McKellar	Smith
Bayard	Glass	McLean	Smoot
Borah	Gooding	McNary	Spencer
Brookhart	Hale	Moses	Stanfield
Broussard	Harreld	New	Stanley
Bursum	Harris	Nicholson	Sterling
Calder	Harrison	Norbeck	Sutherland
Cameron	Heflin	Norris	Swanson
Capper	Hitchcock	Oddie	Townsend
Colt	Johnson	Pepper	Trammell
Couzens	Jones, N. Mex.	Phipps	Underwood
Curtis	Jones, Wash.	Pittman	Wadsworth
Dial	Kellogg	Poindexter	Walsh, Mass.
Dillingham	Keyes	Pomerene	Walsh, Mont.
Edge	King	Ransdell	Warren
Ernst	Ladd	Reed, Mo.	Watson
Fernald	La Follette	Reed, Pa.	Weller
Fletcher	Lenroot	Robinson	Williams
France	Lodge	Sheppard
Frelinghuysen	McCormick	Shields
George	McCumber	Shortridge

The VICE PRESIDENT. Eighty-one Senators have answered to their names. A quorum is present. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Alabama to adjourn, on which the yeas and nays have been ordered. The Secretary will call the roll.

The reading clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. POMERENE. I have a pair with my colleague, the junior Senator from Ohio [Mr. WILLIS], but I understand there has been some other arrangement made in reference to that pair. In view of that fact, I feel free to vote. I vote "yea."

Mr. EDGE (after having voted in the negative). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. OWEN]. I transfer that pair to the senior Senator from Minnesota [Mr. NELSON] and allow my vote to stand.

Mr. COLT (after having voted in the negative). I transfer my general pair with the Senator from Florida [Mr. TRAMMELL] to the senior Senator from Connecticut [Mr. BRANDEGEE] and allow my vote to stand.

Mr. CURTIS. I am requested to announce the following pairs:

The Senator from West Virginia [Mr. ELKINS] with the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. SIMMONS];

The junior Senator from Ohio [Mr. WILLIS] with the Senator from Colorado [Mr. NICHOLSON]; and

The senior Senator from Iowa [Mr. CUMMINS] with the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. OVERMAN].

The result was announced—yeas 33, nays 45, as follows:

YEAS—33.

Bayard	Glass	McNary	Stanley
Borah	Harris	Norris	Swanson
Brookhart	Harrison	Pittman	Underwood
Capper	Heflin	Pomerene	Walsh, Mass.
Couzens	Hitchcock	Reed, Mo.	Walsh, Mont.
Dial	Jones, N. Mex.	Robinson	Williams
Fletcher	King	Sheppard
France	La Follette	Shields
George	McKellar	Smith

NAYS—45.

Ball	Gooding	McLean	Spencer
Broussard	Hale	Moses	Stanfield
Bursum	Harreld	New	Sterling
Calder	Johnson	Norbeck	Sutherland
Cameron	Jones, Wash.	Oddie	Townsend
Colt	Kellogg	Pepper	Wadsworth
Curtis	Keyes	Phipps	Warren
Dillingham	Ladd	Poindexter	Watson
Edge	Lenroot	Ransdell	Weller
Ernst	Lodge	Reed, Pa.
Fernald	McCormick	Shortridge
Frelinghuysen	McCumber	Smoot

NOT VOTING—18.

Ashurst	Elkins	Nelson	Simmons
Brandegee	Gerry	Nicholson	Trammell
Caraway	Kendrick	Overman	Willis
Culberson	McKinley	Owen
Cummins	Myers	Page

So the Senate refused to adjourn.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the motion of the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. LADD].

Mr. CURTIS. Question!

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will call the roll.

The reading clerk proceeded to call the roll, and called the name of Mr. ASHURST.

Mr. SHEPPARD. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Texas.

Mr. SHEPPARD. Mr. President, Thursday, February 15, 1923, was the first anniversary——

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Texas yield to the Senator from Massachusetts?

Mr. SHEPPARD. I shall yield when I finish the sentence.

Mr. LODGE. I rise to a question of order. I understood that the call of the roll had begun.

Mr. SHEPPARD. I was on the floor and addressing the Chair.

Mr. MCKELLAR. No answer had been made on the call of the roll. The name of the Senator from Arizona [Mr. ASHURST] had been called, but he was not here.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The first name on the roll had been called, but there was no response.

WORK OF THE LEAGUE OF NATIONS.

Mr. SHEPPARD addressed the Senate. After having spoken for some time,

Mr. WADSWORTH. Will the gentleman from Texas yield to me that I may submit a conference report?

Mr. SHEPPARD. I yield on condition that I do not lose the floor.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I think I can assure the Senator that that point will not be raised.

Mr. SHEPPARD. Very well.

WAR DEPARTMENT APPROPRIATIONS—CONFERENCE REPORT.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. President, I submit the following conference report.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The report will be read.

The report was read as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 13793) making appropriations for the military and nonmilitary activities of the War Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1924, and for other purposes, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its amendments numbered 4, 8, 11, 12, 13, 14, 16, 20, 22, 25, 32, 33, 39, 40, 41, 44, 46, 57, 58, 59, 61, 66, 75, 80, 93, 94, 96, 97, 102, 103, 104, 107, 108, 110, 112, 113, 114, 117, 118, 124, and 126.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 7, 9, 24, 26, 28, 29, 37, 43, 45, 50, 51, 52, 53, 54, 55, 56, 60, 62, 64, 65, 68, 70, 71, 72, 73, 74, 76, 77, 78, 79, 83, 84, 85, 86, 87, 88, 98, 99, 105, 109, 111, 116, 120, and 121, and agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 1: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 1, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$75,000"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 2: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 2, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$70,480"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 3: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 3, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$42,480"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 5: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 5, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$149,000"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 6: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 6, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$75,000"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 10: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 10, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$60,540"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 17: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 17, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$250,000"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 19: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 19, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$1,400,000"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 23: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 23, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$3,500,000"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 27: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 27, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment insert the following: "except those who have received training in either of the training camps held during the calendar years 1921 and 1922"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 35: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 35, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$660,000"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 42: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 42, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$14,350,000"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 47: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 47, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Restore the matter stricken out by said amendment, amended to read as follows: ", enlisted men of the Enlisted Reserve Corps,"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 48: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 48, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert: "$15,850,000"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 81: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 81, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In line 16 of the matter inserted by said amendment strike out "$120,000" and insert in lieu thereof "$89,900"; and in line 17 of the matter inserted by said amendment strike out "$120,000" and insert in lieu thereof "$89,900"; and in line 21 of the matter inserted by said amendment strike out "$100,000" and insert in lieu thereof "$80,000"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 82: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 82, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$7,500"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 89: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 89, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$1,400,000"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 90: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 90, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$2,100,000"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 91: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 91, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$10,200,000"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 92: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 92, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$325,000"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 95: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 95, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$2,500,000"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 100: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 100, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$82,450"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 115: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 115, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$650,000"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 123: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 123, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$575,000"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 125: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 125, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$6,584,683"; and the Senate agree to the same.

The committee of conference have not agreed on amendments numbered 18, 21, 30, 34, 36, 38, 49, 101, 106, 119, and 122.

WM. J. HARRIS,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

D. R. ANTHONY, Jr.,

T. U. SISSON,
Managers on the part of the House.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. President, I will state what is the actual situation. The amendments which are reported as being in disagreement are all but one of them tentatively agreed to by the conferees, but under the rules of the House they must go back to the House for a separate vote. One amendment is still in disagreement and the House conferees insist that the House membership shall have the right to vote on it.

Mr. FLETCHER. May I inquire of the Senator if the matter in disagreement refers to the reserve officers' training corps headquarters and the items in the bill?

Mr. WADSWORTH. It refers to the headquarters, divisional and regimental, of the Organized Reserve. The Senate conferees believe it vital to maintain those headquarters.

Mr. FLETCHER. The Senate conferees are insisting upon the position of the Senate

Mr. WADSWORTH. They are. That is the only amendment in actual disagreement. I ask for the adoption of the conference report.

The report was agreed to.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, in this connection I desire to have inserted in the RECORD a letter from Maj. H. C. Culbreath, a reserve officer in Florida, bearing on the importance of the position taken by the Senate in connection with the reserve officers' training corps.

There being no objection, the letter was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

TAMPA INTEROCEAN STEAMSHIP CO.,
Tampa, Fla., U. S. A., February 13, 1923.

Hon. DUNCAN U. FLETCHER,
Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR SENATOR FLETCHER: I notice from the Associated Press dispatches and from the Army and Navy Journal that Congressman ANTHONY, of Kansas, is still on the warpath in his apparent attempt to eliminate the Army.

In my mind the most serious possible result will be the elimination of the appropriations providing for the continuation of the headquarters of the organized reserves under the present plans of the War Department. The elimination of these headquarters will turn the organized reserves into disorganized reserves by breaking up the framework of the units and leaving instead merely a number of Army reserve officers with no particular responsibility to anyone and no place in which they definitely belong.

All of us who are paying some attention to this matter are in accord with the allowance made by the Director of the Budget in providing for a fund for the maintenance of the C. M. T. C. and the R. O. T. C. You must consider that we have reserve officers who have held their commissions some two, three, and four years, but who have had no opportunity for field experience. If Congress finds it expedient in their wisdom to not make appropriations for these two branches of the service, I wish to most respectfully bring to your attention the vital necessity that the appropriation be made, amounting to less than $500,000, for the maintenance of divisional and regimental headquarters of the reserves.

It will be possible for the time being to continue our reserve work without the annual training camps of the R. O. T. C. and the C. M. T. C., but it will be next to impossible to hold our own and utterly impossible to make any progress if our regimental and divisional reserve headquarters are to be discontinued. For instance, I am in command of the Three hundred and twenty-eighth Regiment of Infantry and have an excess of officers in our organization scattered over the State of Florida. I devote considerable time to this work, but it would be simply out of the question for me to get results and keep this organization intact were it not for the fact that a Regular Army captain is detailed as an executive officer and attached to my headquarters here. This Regular Army officer, of course, is able to function because of the divisional headquarters of the Eighty-second Division at Columbia. These two headquarters are the only headquarters maintained in connection with Reserve Corps work, inasmuch as the next higher headquarters—corps headquarters at Atlanta—have to do with the Regular Army and supervise the reserves in connection with their regular duty.

Please pardon this intrusion on your valuable time, but, knowing that you have always taken an active and serious interest in this character of legislation, I feel that it is proper that I should bring this matter to your attention and give you my views in connection therewith.

With kindest personal regards, I am, yours sincerely,

H. C. CULBREATH.

WORK OF LEAGUE OF NATIONS.

Mr. SHEPPARD resumed his speech. After having spoken for some time,

Mr. CALDER. I have on my desk several bridge bills which Members of the Senate are very anxious to have passed. With the understanding that it will not take the Senator from Texas off the floor, I ask unanimous consent to report them and to ask for their present consideration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN in the chair). Is there objection?

Mr. SHEPPARD. With the understanding that I will not yield the floor, I yield for that purpose.

FLORAL WREATH FOR SILENT TRIBUTE TO WASHINGTON.

Mr. CALDER. First, from the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate I report back favorably without amendment the concurrent resolution (S. Con. Res. 39) and ask for its immediate consideration.

There being no objection, the concurrent resolution was considered by unanimous consent and agreed to, as follows:

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That the Sergeant at Arms of the Senate and the Sergeant at Arms of the House of Representatives are hereby authorized and directed to purchase a floral wreath to be placed at the base of the Washington Monument on Washington's Birthday, February 22, 1923, on the occasion of the ceremonies attending upon the silent tribute, the expense of such wreath to be paid in equal proportions from the contingent funds of the Senate and House of Representatives.

ALLEGHENY RIVER BRIDGE, PENNSYLVANIA.

Mr. CALDER. From the Committee on Commerce I report back favorably without amendment the bill (H. R. 13808) granting the consent of Congress to the commissioners of Venango County, their successors and assigns, to construct a bridge across the Allegheny River, in the State of Pennsylvania, and I submit a report (No. 1167) thereon. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill, and it was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the consent of Congress is hereby granted to the commissioners of Venango County, Pa., and their successors and assigns, to construct, maintain, and operate a bridge and approaches thereto across the Allegheny River, at a point suitable to the interests of navigation, at Oil City, Pa., connecting Petroleum Street, on the south side of the river, with North Petroleum Street, on the north side of the river, in the county of Venango, in the State of Pennsylvania, in accordance with the provisions of the act entitled "An act to regulate the construction of bridges over navigable waters," approved March 23, 1906.

SEC. 2. That the right to alter, amend, or repeal this act is hereby expressly reserved.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

POTOMAC RIVER DAM.

Mr. CALDER. From the Committee on Commerce I report back favorably without amendment the bill (S. 4526) authorizing the construction, maintenance, and operation of a dam and appurtenant intake and outlet structures across or in the Potomac River at or near Williamsport, Washington County, Md. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill.

Mr. JONES of Washington. The bill seems to be for the construction of a dam and not a mere bridge bill.

Mr. CALDER. That is true. It has the approval of the War Department.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I think it had better go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Objection is made, and the bill will go to the calendar.

Mr. JONES of Washington subsequently said:

I desire to withdraw my objection to the present consideration of Senate bill 4526.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill, and it was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Williamsport Power Co., a corporation organized and existing under the laws of the State of Maryland, its successors and assigns, is hereby authorized to construct, maintain, and operate, at a point suitable to the interests of navigation, a dam and appurtenant intake and outlet structures across or in the Potomac River at or near Williamsport, Washington County, Md.: Provided, That the work shall not be commenced until the plans therefor have been submitted to and approved by the Chief of Engineers, United States Army, and by the Secretary of War: Provided further, That this act shall not be construed to authorize the use of such dam and/or other structures to develop water power or generate hydroelectric energy.

SEC. 2. That the authority granted by this act shall cease and be null and void unless the actual construction of the dam and other structures hereby authorized is commenced within one year and completed within three years from the date of the approval of this act: Provided, That from and after 30 days' notice from the Federal Power Commission, or other authorized agency of the United States, to said company or its successors, that desirable water-power development will be interfered with by the existence of such dam and/or other structures, as the case may be, the authority hereby granted to construct, maintain, and operate such dam and/or other structures designated in such notice shall terminate and be at an end; and any grantee or licensee of the United States proposing to develop a power project at or near such dam and/or other structures shall have authority to remove, submerge, or utilize such dam and/or other structures under such conditions as said commission or other agency may determine, but such conditions shall not include compensation for the removal, submergence, or utilization of such dam.

SEC. 3. That the right to alter, amend, or repeal this act is hereby expressly reserved.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ST. FRANCIS RIVER BRIDGE, ARK.

Mr. CALDER. From the Committee on Commerce I report back favorably without amendment the bill (S. 4579) to authorize the Lee County bridge district No. 2, in the State of Arkansas, to construct a bridge over the St. Francis River, and I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration thereof.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill, and it was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the consent of Congress is hereby granted to the Lee County bridge district No. 2, State of Arkansas, to construct, maintain, and operate a bridge and approaches thereto across the St. Francis River, at a point suitable to the interests of navigation, at or near Cody, in the county of Lee, in the State of Arkansas, in accordance with the provisions of the act entitled "An act to regulate the construction of bridges over navigable waters," approved March 23, 1906.

SEC. 2. That the right to alter, amend, or repeal this act is hereby expressly reserved.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

MISSOURI RIVER BRIDGE, S. DAK.

Mr. CALDER. From the Committee on Commerce I report back favorably, without amendment, the bill (S. 4583) granting the consent of Congress to the State of South Dakota for the construction of a bridge across the Missouri River between Charles Mix County and Gregory County, S. Dak., and I ask unanimous consent for its present consideration.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill, and it was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the consent of Congress is hereby granted to the State of South Dakota to construct, maintain, and operate a bridge and approaches thereto across the Missouri River at a point suitable to the interests of navigation between Charles Mix County and Gregory County, S. Dak., in accordance with the provisions of an act entitled "An act to regulate the construction of bridges over navigable waters," approved March 23, 1906.

SEC. 2. That the right to alter, amend, or repeal this act is hereby expressly reserved.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

SOUTH FORK OF SOUTH BRANCH OF CHICAGO RIVER.

Mr. CALDER. From the Committee on Commerce I report back favorably without amendment the bill (H. R. 9049) declaring the act of September 19, 1890 (26 Stats., ch. 907, sec. 7), and the act of March 3, 1899 (30 Stats., ch. 425, sec. 9), and all acts amendatory of either thereof, shall not hereafter apply to a portion of the west arm of the south fork of the South Branch of the Chicago River, and for other purposes. I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of the bill.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill, which was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the act of September 19, 1890, making appropriations for the construction, repair, and preservation of certain public works on rivers and harbors, and for other purposes (26 Stats., ch. 907, sec. 7, p. 454), and the act of March 3, 1899, making appropriations for the construction, repair, and preservation of certain public works on rivers and harbors, and for other purposes (30 Stats., ch. 425, sec. 9, p. 1151), and all acts amendatory of either thereof shall not, after the passage of this act, apply to that portion of the west arm of the south fork of the South Branch of the Chicago River, lying between the east line of Ashland Avenue and the north line of Thirty-ninth Street, in the city of Chicago, Ill., as the same now exists or may hereafter be extended.

All rights, authority, or control over that part of the Chicago River now possessed or assumed by the United States under said acts, or either of them, or any amendments thereof are hereby relinquished and abandoned, and all rights, authority, or control over the same that were possessed by the State of Illinois before said acts were passed are hereby fully restored to said State.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

WORK OF LEAGUE OF NATIONS.

Mr. SHEPPARD resumed his speech. After having spoken for some time,

Mr. CALDER. Mr. President, will the Senator permit me to inquire if he expects to conclude his remarks this evening?

Mr. SHEPPARD. I do not know. If the interest continues to be so intense, I may continue indefinitely.

Mr. CALDER. If the Senator will permit me, I desire, without taking the Senator off his feet, to make reference to a newspaper article printed in this morning's New York Herald about a matter in which I am interested. It will take me perhaps five minutes, and I ask the Senator from Texas to yield to me with the understanding that it does not take the Senator off the floor.

Mr. SHEPPARD. With that understanding, I yield.

MAJ. GEN. ADELBERT CRONKHITE.

Mr. CALDER. Mr. President, there appeared in the New York Herald this morning an article entitled:

Cronkhite attacks CALDER once more. Major general reports Senator helped release murder suspect.

Then the article, which I shall later ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD, goes on to state in minute detail how Senator CALDER appealed to the Department of Justice to grant a confidential hearing in the case of the Government against Captain Rosenbluth to the end that a speedy decision of the subject might be obtained. A careful reading of the statement made by Major General Cronkhite would not indicate that I have in any way interfered with the work of the Department of Justice, but the headlines of the article would tend to convince one that I had. I desire to make just a short statement on the subject, if the Senate will bear with me for a moment.

This case was called to my attention in March, 1921. It appears that Major Cronkhite, a son of Major General Cronkhite, had been killed at Camp Lewis, Wash., in October, 1918. Major General Cronkhite was at that time in command of a division of the American troops in France. No man in America has sympathized more with General Cronkhite than I have in the great bereavement which came to him and his wife. He was away, as I said, fighting on the other side, and his son, also a brave soldier, was at Camp Lewis, Wash.

Captain Rosenbluth and his friends, when they called upon me, insisted that the charge that he was in any way responsible for the death of Major Cronkhite was not true. They submitted to me affidavits seeking to demonstrate the correctness of their contention, and several officers who had served with Major Cronkhite and Captain Rosenbluth called upon me and told me they were sure Captain Rosenbluth was innocent. I was anxious, both for the sake of the memory of Major Cronkhite, son of the gallant general, and for the good name of Captain Rosenbluth, a citizen of my State, who had always borne an excellent reputation, that the matter should be cleared up. Captain Rosenbluth was at that time under arrest on the charge that he had aided in the murder. He was out on bail. The matter was before the Department of Justice. I wanted the Department of Justice to prosecute the case speedily and clear it up. For that reason I insisted that something should be done.

In the article published to-day General Cronkhite suggests that my activity in the matter resulted in a dismissal of the complaint. In that, of course, he is mistaken. It did result, however, in the charges against Captain Rosenbluth, in New York, being dismissed on the ground that there was no jurisdiction. It did not result, however, in a statement from the department that he was innocent of the charge, the thing that Captain Rosenbluth desired.

Subsequently the matter was referred to the county attorney of Pierce County, Wash., Mr. Selden, where Camp Lewis is located. He made an exhaustive study of the subject. I have here a newspaper published in Tacoma, December 18 last, and another one December 25, which shows the result of District Attorney Selden's investigation. He insisted, in the story published here, that there was no evidence submitted to him that warranted the indictment or prosecution of Rosenbluth.

My attention has been called to a number of affidavits appearing in this Tacoma publication, one by Robert S. Thomas, the colonel in command of the regiment in which both Major Cronkhite and Captain Rosenbluth served; of the regimental surgeon, Henry Tucker; of the chaplain, Rev. Thomas J. Harron; of Capt. Eugene M. Caffey; of Arthur L. Miller, an officer of the regiment, and other members of the command. All of these men had been intimately associated with Captain Rosenbluth and with Major Cronkhite. They told the story of their intimate knowledge of both of them before and at the time of the unfortunate affair.

I ask unanimous consent that these affidavits from these officers may be printed in the RECORD, together with the newspaper article to which I have referred.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. SPENCER in the chair). Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

The matter referred to is as follows:

[From the New York Herald, February 19, 1923.]

CRONKHITE ATTACKS CALDER ONCE MORE—MAJOR GENERAL REITERATES SENATOR HELPED RELEASE MURDER SUSPECTS—SEES GLASS AND REED—CALLS CONFERENCE ON KILLING OF SON AND OUSTING OF SELF ENCOURAGING.

WASHINGTON, February 18.—Conferences yesterday with Senator GLASS (Democrat, Virginia) and REED (Republican, Pennsylvania) were said by Maj. Gen. Adelbert Cronkhite to-day to have been "most encouraging" in the efforts being made to obtain a congressional inquiry into the recent enforced retirement of the officer and into the mysterious killing of his son, Maj. Alexander P. Cronkhite, in 1918, at Camp Lewis, Wash.

"Heretofore the difficulties I have had in persuading anyone to go into the facts have been very great," said General Cronkhite in a formal statement. "No one would go into them thoroughly. It is apparent, however, that Senator GLASS and Senator REED propose to take no ill-considered action and I certainly do not wish nor expect them to act until they are thoroughly prepared."

Both Senators were noncommittal to-day as to whether there will be a public inquiry, but Senator REED expects to announce a decision in a day or two. Such an inquiry would cover the retirement of the general, the circumstances surrounding the killing of Major Cronkhite, and the prosecution of Robert Rosenbluth and Roland Pothier in connection with the killing.

General Cronkhite replied to-day to the statement several days ago by Senator CALDER (Republican, New York), in which the Senator denied he had caused delay in the prosecution of the alleged murderers of Major Cronkhite. General Cronkhite had said the Senator wrote to Attorney General Daugherty, April 13, 1921, after the arrest of Rosenbluth and Pothier, saying he "had gone into the case very thoroughly with Rosenbluth and others, including two of Mr. Daugherty's associates, namely, Mr. Gibbs and Mr. Steward, and that he was convinced that there were such extraordinary features in this case as to warrant his making a recommendation that an entirely new, confidential, and thorough investigation be made."

This, according to General Cronkhite, was followed three days later by a letter from Mr. Gibbs to Senator CALDER saying no further action was to be taken in the case pending a personal investigation by the Attorney General. Then, in May, Senator CALDER, the statement continued, again wrote Mr. Daugherty, this time urging that Rosenbluth be given an early hearing, and about two weeks later the Attorney General assented to this request.

"Rosenbluth with his attorneys appeared before one of Mr. Daugherty's associates June 18," the statement further said, "and stated reasons why the pending proceedings against Rosenbluth should be quashed. At this 'entirely new, confidential, and thorough' investigation, which was in fact a mere ex parte hearing of Rosenbluth at which no one appeared against Rosenbluth, it was stated by counsel for Rosenbluth that the hearing had been granted at the request of Senator CALDER, and on July 16, without further investigation, Mr. Daugherty ordered that pending proceedings against Rosenbluth be dismissed.

"From the foregoing it is seen that while the interposition of Senator CALDER undoubtedly did have the effect of expediting the proceedings it secured the release of the accused and blocked the prosecution which was in process."

SPEAK FOR ROSENBLUTH.

EASTERN, MD., August 16, 1921.

I, Major Robert S. Thomas, Corps of Engineers, United States Army, now residing at Fort Leavenworth, Kans., do hereby solemnly swear:

That in the fall of 1918 I was colonel of Engineers in command of the Two hundred and thirteenth Regiment of Engineers stationed at Camp Lewis, American Lake, Wash. That Major Cronkhite, Capt. Robert Rosenbluth, and Serg. Roland Pothier were members of the Two hundred and thirteenth Regiment of Engineers.

That at the time of the death of Major Cronkhite nor since then did I have, nor have I had, any knowledge of suspicion or any feeling of ill-will, malice, or enmity of Capt. Robert Rosenbluth toward Major Cronkhite nor of any cause for the same.

That I did not have at the time of the death of Major Cronkhite nor since then have I had any knowledge or suspicion of any motive on the part of Captain Rosenbluth for the alleged killing of Major Cronkhite.

That I have not been interviewed nor questioned by any agent of the Department of Justice concerning the death of Major Cronkhite nor any action of Captain Rosenbluth's.

That Captain Rosenbluth served under my command and under my close personal observation for a period of nearly five months, and I found him to be a conscientious officer, earnest and honest in the performance of his duty.

Similarly, Sergt. Roland Pothier was under my command and personal observation for a period of five months. Sergeant Pothier's reputation for truth and honesty was not good. He was suspected of several petty thefts. I had investigated his previous service in the Navy and instructed the intelligence agent in the regiment to keep a close watch upon Pothier's actions, which resulted finally in my having to reduce Pothier from sergeant to private and order his court-martial for larceny.

That the death of Major Cronkhite was investigated in accordance with Army Regulations by a board of carefully selected officers of age, judgment, and responsibility; and that the findings of this board were to the effect that Major Cronkhite met his death by reason of accidental self-inflicted wound. The findings of this board I carefully reviewed in my capacity as commanding officer and approved.

ROBERT S. THOMAS,
Major Corps of Engineers, United States Army.

STATE OF MARYLAND, Talbot County, to wit:

I hereby certify that personally appeared before me, a notary public of the State of Maryland in and for Talbot County, the above-named Robert S. Thomas, being duly sworn, makes affidavit that the above is true to the best of his knowledge and belief.

[SEAL.] CHARLES E. NORRIS, Notary Public.

(My commission expires May 11, 1922.)

STATE OF NEW YORK, County of New York, ss:

I hereby certify that I have personally compared the above affidavit of Robert S. Thomas with the original copy thereof, and that this is a true and accurate and complete copy in every respect.

REGIMENTAL SURGEON TESTIFIES.

I, Henry Tucker, late major, Medical Corps, United States Army, affirm that the following is, to the best of my knowledge and belief, true:

I have never been interviewed by anyone connected with the Department of Justice, although they have had my address and could have done so at any time.

I was regimental surgeon to the Two hundred and thirteenth Engineers at the time Maj. Alexander Cronkhite met his death in October, 1918, at Camp Lewis, Wash. I was present at the autopsy on the body of Major Cronkhite, at which time there was raised the question that he might have been killed by a stray machine-gun bullet fired from the near-by machine-gun range. This was disproved by the finding of a pistol bullet of the same caliber as the pistol of Major Cronkhite. There was no question in the minds of those present at the autopsy but that he died from an accidental self-inflicted wound.

I was also a member of the board of inquiry to investigate the circumstances connected with the death of Major Cronkhite. This board decided, on evidence of the witnesses examined, that Major Cronkhite died from an accidental self-inflicted wound.

I was more or less closely associated with Major Cronkhite and Captain Rosenbluth from the time of my joining the regiment to the death of the former and the discharge of the latter, and at no time did I ever hear any rumor or see anything personally that would lead me to believe that these two officers were not the best of friends.

I have given the above testimony for the fact that I am informed that the State can not subpœna witnesses from without the State, and reading in the papers that this case has been taken out of the hands of the Department of Justice and put into the hands of the Washington State authorities; also to help right a wrong.

HENRY TUCKER.

Subscribed and sworn to before me this 3d day of August, A. D. 1921.

CHAPLAIN VOICES FAITH.

Copy of a letter from Rev. Thomas J. Harron, formerly chaplain of Two hundred and thirteenth Engineers, at Camp Forrest, Ga., and Camp Lewis, Wash.:

CHURCH OF THE ASCENSION,
Westmoreland and G Streets, Philadelphia, August 18, 1921.

Mr. ROBERT ROSENBLUTH.

DEAR FRIEND: In reference to my interview with a Department of Justice agent, Mr. Chastain, I would say that I told him that I firmly believed in your innocence. My testimony to him was substantially as follows:

At mess the night before Major Cronkhite's death Major Ziejack invited the former to go to the firing range the following morning, and Major Cronkhite said that he was too busy and that he hated to lose the time. Major Ziejack volunteered to supply him with a mount, and Major Cronkhite replied to Ziejack, "You go straight to hell." The eventful morning Major Cronkhite suddenly decided to go and left the mess hall about 7.50 and started out to the range later than the rest. This, to my mind, proved conclusively that there could not have been any premeditation on the part of Captain Rosenbluth, as no one could have known of the major's (Cronkhite) going to the range that fateful day.

Moreover, I told the agent that Captain Rosenbluth was generally regarded as one of the most efficient officers in the Two hundred and thirteenth Regiment. This was generally agreed upon even by those who personally disliked Captain Rosenbluth. One officer, Lieutenant Reeves, put it this way: "He's (Captain Rosenbluth) too damned efficient."

Again, I told him that I believed that the major and captain were very friendly, as a West Point man admired the efficient officer at all times. As for Sergeant Pothier, he was generally under suspicion and distrusted by officers and men alike.

I told the agent that if the authorities really wanted to get at the real truth they would get in touch with Lieutenant Miller, the intelligence officer of the regiment, as he knew the sergeant's record—past in the old Army, and present in the late war. I also mentioned how the sergeant (Pothier), to whom I had lent money on different occasions, had tried to cheat me out of $10, and when I, after waiting two months, threatened to take the matter up officially if the money were not returned within three or four hours, the $10 was returned within a half hour. That same day another sergeant lost $12.

From my experience with Sergeant Pothier, I think that he would be but too glad of an opportunity to gain notoriety. I hold no animosity toward the said sergeant, but I testified for the sake of justice, that a wrong might be undone.

At the time of the death of Major Cronkhite there was no suspicion that the death or shooting was not, as reported, accidental.

Everyone knew how impetuous the major was, and all felt the death keenly; in fact, many were somewhat superstitious on account of the "13" in Two hundred and thirteenth Regiment. Colonel Thomas, though this was never discussed by us together, will, I believe, confirm me in this opinion about impetuosity.

I also informed the agent that I thought that the charge against Captain Rosenbluth was probably helped by the natural antipathy which some had against Hebrews in general.

I know of no officer in the regiment who had the welfare of his men at heart like Captain Rosenbluth.

I was almost daily in the company of Captain Rosenbluth, and I always found him the open, earnest, and thorough gentleman.

I offered to go to see the Attorney General at any time, and at first I hesitated to give this information to Mr. Chastain, thinking it would be best to go direct to Washington, D. C.

I earnestly hope that you will soon be given justice and the unjust stigma be removed.

Yours most sincerely, Rev. THOMAS J. HARRON.

I hereby certify that I have carefully compared the above copies with the original letter signed by Rev. Thomas J. Harron and that it is a complete and accurate copy thereof.

BROTHER OFFICER TESTIFIES.

STATE OF CONNECTICUT,
County of New Haven, city of New Haven, ss:

Before me, the undersigned authority for administering oaths, personally appeared one Eugene M. Caffey, captain, Corps of Engineers, United States Army, who, being duly sworn according to law, deposes and saith:

That on October 25, 1918, he was a member of the Two hundred and thirteenth Regiment of Engineers, Thirteenth Division, stationed at Camp Lewis, Wash. That he was well and personally acquainted with Maj. Alexander P. Cronkhite, Two hundred and thirteenth Engineers, and Capt. Robert Rosenbluth, Two hundred and thirteenth Engineers, having served with both of them since the middle of August, 1918. That there was no ill feeling or animosity of any kind or description between these two officers, nor any cause for such.

That on the day in question the regiment went on a short march for instruction purposes. That Major Cronkhite did not leave with the regiment on the march and had no idea of going with it. A short time after the troops had left the major decided to follow and catch up with the column for the sake of the exercise involved, as he was just recovering from several days' illness. He spent some little time looking for the regimental surgeon, Major Tucker, to get his permission to go and in securing a lunch to carry with him. He left the regimental area probably about three-quarters of an hour after the regiment. He took with him Sergt. Bugler Roland Pothier, whom he happened to see at regimental headquarters and who had no particular duty that morning.

During the course of the morning Major Cronkhite was killed. The deponent has no direct knowledge of the circumstances, as he was not present at the scene of the accident. He was told, however, within an hour or so of the accident by Captain Rosenbluth, Sergeant Pothier, Lieutenant Morrison, and Lieutenant Seaburg (one of the medical officers of the regiment who was with the column and who gave first aid to the major), all of whom were within a short distance of the accident, that the major had accidentally shot himself with his own pistol while engaged in firing at a can that he had placed on a post. A board of officers which investigated the death of Major Cronkhite reported to the same effect.

The deponent further states that there was at no time any suspicion of foul play in connection with this accident on the part of anyone in the regiment. That it was a shock to him to read in the papers that charges had been trumped up by some one involving Captain Rosenbluth in the death of Major Cronkhite. He did not, does not, and never will believe that such charges are anything except the most baseless fabrications.

The deponent was approached some weeks after the arrest of Captain Rosenbluth by an agent of the Department of Justice. This agent stated among other things that Captain Rosenbluth was a man of no standing, that he had "traveled with a pretty shady gang," and had "nothing good in his record." Deponent states such statements are lies. They were a very evident attempt to influence the deponent to make statements against Captain Rosenbluth. Deponent has seen two other officers of the regiment, Major Zajicek and Lieutenant Saunders, who told him that they did not credit the charges against Captain Rosenbluth. Major Zejicek was approached, after the arrest of Captain Rosenbluth, by agents of the Department of Justice who attempted to blacken the character of Captain Rosenbluth.

Deponent has been told that a former lieutenant named Rustenback is in a large measure to blame for the framing of the charges against Captain Rosenbluth. Deponent knew Rustenback well and knows him to be a person easily influenced and prone to wild fancies and to be a person whose statements should not be given credit without the most careful investigation.

Deponent also knew Pothier very well and knows that he is mentally unbalanced, underhanded, and treacherous. He had a bad reputation in the Navy and a bad reputation in the Two hundred and thirteenth Engineers. Deponent would not believe him on oath.

Further deponent saith not.

ASKS FOR JUSTICE.

CHICAGO, ILL., August 10, 1921.

To the Hon. J. W. SELDEN,
Prosecuting Attorney, Pierce County, Tacoma, Wash.

DEAR SIR: Inclosed please find affidavit re Captain Rosenbluth, which is prompted in the interest of justice, and for no other reason.

I sincerely hope that you will see your way clear to exonerate Captain Rosenbluth of the charge. I am quite sure that the American sentiment will unqualifiedly appreciate such a fair attitude in all such cases and particularly in this one.

Yours very truly,

ARTHUR L. MILLER.

STATE OF ILLINOIS, County of Cook, ss:

I wish to state that I was never interviewed by the Department of Justice relative to the case of Capt. Robert Rosenbluth, charged with the murder of Maj. Alexander P. Cronkhite on October 25, 1918, at Camp Lewis, Wash.

Second. I wish to state that I was intelligence officer of the Two hundred and thirteenth Engineers at that time and up to January 14, 1919, the date of my discharge from the Army. I joined the regiment at Camp Forrest, Ga., in August, 1918.

Third. I knew Major Cronkhite, Captain Rosenbluth, and Sergeant Pothier. The relations between Major Cronkhite and Captain Rosenbluth were of a most friendly nature at all times. I know of no relations that ever existed between Captain Rosenbluth and Sergeant Pothier.

Fourth. Captain Rosenbluth's character and reputation were of the highest standing, and therefore, in my judgment, he could not have been involved in any murder plot under any circumstances.

Fifth: The circumstances surrounding the accident on October 25, 1918, point clearly that there could not have been any plot on that day. Major Cronkhite's decision to accompany the march was made at the breakfast table at the last minute, unexpectedly to all of us. In fact, it was my sergeant who supplied him with a pack and gun while the column was already formed. All this clearly shows any premeditated plot on that day to be impossible. The first news of an alleged murder plot that reached me was early in 1921 through the newspapers. The general opinion of all at the time was that death occurred from a self-inflicted wound by accident.

VIEW OF ENLISTED MAN.

WASHINGTON, D. C., April 20, 1921.

STATEMENT OF ELMER D. KIEFFER.

I, Elmer D. Kieffer, of Norwood, Pa., being duly sworn, on oath depose and say as follows:

I was attached to Company C, Two hundred and fourteenth Engineers, stationed at Camp Lewis, Wash., from the 9th of October, 1918, until January 30, 1919, and was a member of said Company C at the time of the occurrence of the events on October 25, 1918, hereinafter set forth.

On October 25, 1919, Company C, with several other companies of the regiment, was ordered on a hike across country. When about 2 miles out of camp the regiment was ordered at rest, and at this time I first saw Major Cronkhite, accompanied by Sergeant Pothier, who had come up to the spot where the regiment was resting. They did not come along the same road that we had traveled but appeared from a different direction through the woods. Neither Major Cronkhite nor Sergeant Pothier was with the regiment at the time we left camp. I was in the first platoon of Company C, and after the hike was resumed I saw Major Cronkhite and Sergeant Pothier from time to time, who were walking quite some distance ahead of the column. During the hike I heard several shots coming from the direction in which Major Cronkhite and Sergeant Pothier were walking. I remember this distinctly, because of the very unusual fact of any of the officers or men having ammunition with them while on a hike.

After Major Cronkhite had joined the company and before reaching the scene of the accident, referred to hereafter, the company fell out frequently for rest periods while proceeding through the woods. During one of these rest periods I distinctly remember seeing Major Cronkhite somewhere in front, but I do not recall the exact location nor do I remember noticing where Captain Rosenbluth was at this time.

During the rest period on the last halt of that day I had stepped out of the ranks and across the road, and as I did so I noticed Sergeant Pothier about 100 feet away, down the slight declivity of the road on the same side as I was standing, ahead of the column. I also saw Major Cronkhite, who was on the other side of the road about 15 or 20 feet from Sergeant Pothier. My attention was particularly directed to Major Cronkhite, because at that time he was engaged in shooting at some object located to the right of the direction in which the column was facing. I saw Major Cronkhite take a shot at this object, after which he walked in its direction. I could see both Major Cronkhite and Sergeant Pothier very distinctly at this time, and I am sure that Sergeant Pothier did not have any weapon in his hands. At this time I am certain that Captain Rosenbluth was not at the front of the formation, as I recall that Captain Rosenbluth passed the spot where I was standing, going toward the head of the formation very shortly after I saw Major Cronkhite take this shot.

I did not pay any more attention to this occurrence, but remember hearing one or two other shots, and the next thing I recall hearing was some one call for a doctor. I do not remember any further shots being fired after the doctor was called for.

Shortly after this Lieutenant Seaburg, a doctor attached to the regiment, asked for volunteers to carry the major to the artillery range. I, together with three other men, ran forward, and I saw the major lying on the ground. Lieutenant Seaburg was with him, but Captain Rosenbluth was not there at this time. The whole thing happened very quickly, and it is my recollection that not more than three minutes elapsed between the time of the last of these shots and the call for volunteers.

It was at first thought by those in charge that it would be necessary to carry Major Cronkhite over the hill to the artillery range, as it was doubtful whether an ambulance could reach that part of the woods where the accident occurred, but upon some one's suggestion that an ambulance could get through it was decided to let him remain there until the ambulance arrived. There was a can on top of a post a few feet away, which I later removed to use as a prop for the fireplace erected to cook our meal.

It was my opinion and the opinion of everyone there at the time, so far as I know, that Major Cronkhite had shot himself accidentally. I was demobilized at Camp Meade, Md., on February 13, 1919, and the incidents here related had practically passed out of my mind until I read in a paper about a month ago of the arrest of Captain Rosenbluth in connection with the death of Major Cronkhite. I thought it was an outrageous thing that Captain Rosenbluth should have been accused of this crime and immediately wrote him a letter, in which I stated my willingness to be of service to him in this matter, but I did not mail this letter, as I was not sure of Captain Rosenbluth's address. Several weeks thereafter I read in the papers in one of the articles telling of the arrest of Captain Rosenbluth that Major Tucker, who was also attached to the regiment at Camp Lewis at the time I was there, was living in Philadelphia at 1818 Pine Street. On the occasion of a visit which I made to Philadelphia on April 19, 1921, I went to see Major Tucker and told him what I knew about this affair, and he called Captain Rosenbluth's attorney, Mr. J. J. Goldstein, in New York, giving Mr. Goldstein my address and telephone number. Thereafter Captain Rosenbluth called me on the telephone and at his request I went to see him. This is the only time I have seen or heard from Captain Rosenbluth from the time of my transfer from Camp Lewis, Wash., to Camp Meade, Md., for discharge down to the present time.

No person has ever questioned or interviewed me as to my knowledge of the affair, and this statement is made entirely and wholly from my recollection of the events which transpired on October 25, 1918, without any stimulation or suggestion of any kind or character from Captain Rosenbluth or anyone else, and my sole and only object in making this statement is for the purpose of doing what I can to see that justice is rendered a man whom I know to be innocent.

ELMER D. KIEFFER.

Signed and sworn to before me this 20th day of April, 1921.

SERGEANT OFFERS AID.

PENSACOLA Y. M. C. A.,
Pensacola, Fla., March 26, 1921.

DEAR MR. ROSENBLUTH: I understand from the newspapers that you have been charged with the killing of the late Major Cronkhite on October 25, 1918. I was very sorry to see that in the press reports, for I was present as a sergeant of Company A, Two hundred and thirteenth Engineers, at the time in question, and can not see how these charges can be proven true, knowing what I do of the circumstances. For that reason I stand ready to help you in any way possible to prove that these charges placed against you are false. While a long trip and court trial would be unpleasant in many ways, I stand ready, if necessary, to go upon the stand as a witness in your behalf. To what I can testify is this:

I was a sergeant in Company A, Two hundred and thirteenth Engineers. Major Cronkhite had recently left the hospital from an attack of influenza and appeared unwell. I was told he was advised by Colonel Thomas not to participate in the hike. The skeleton regiment, composed largely of noncoms, due to the influenza quarantine, started on a hike on the morning of October 25, 1918. Major Cronkhite was in command, and I understood that Colonel Thomas was to join the regiment at our noon halt. We moved in a general southeasterly direction from Camp Lewis, going through patrol formations and problems on the way. At a place on the road where there was an abandoned schoolhouse on the left and a machine-gun range in front we halted to regain our regimental formation.

At that time I saw Major Cronkhite for the first time since the start of the hike. We turned to the right into the woods, passing over about a mile of undulating ground, heavily wooded, the trail so narrow as to force the command "Right by file—March." Being acting first sergeant of Company A, I was at the head of the column. At a point where there was a clearing on the right and a barn diagonally to the right and front we formed column of fours and halted. I understood this to be the place where we were to make our noon halt and cook dinner. The regiment was standing on the road in column of fours when Major Cronkhite and Sergeant Bugler Roland Pothier passed me from the rear, went forward a few yards and turned to the right behind some bushes. A few seconds later I heard four shots from that direction. Immediately after the last shot you passed me from the rear and went forward to see where the major and sergeant bugler were. You immediately stepped back into the road and called for Lieutenant Sieburg, the doctor. He went forward and in a few seconds either you or Lieutenant Sieburg stepped back into the road and called for a man with knowledge of artificial respiration. I had that knowledge and so did Bugler Wuthenow of Company A. All officers of Company A being absent, I felt that I was in command of Company A in case of orders to move (First Sergeant Bradshow being in the hospital), so I sent Bugler Wuthenow forward. A few minutes later the regiment was moved into the clearing to the right, our packs let down and we stood at rest waiting further orders. While standing there in regimental front we learned that Major Cronkhite had been shot and killed. Before leaving the road a runner was sent back down the trail to try to intercept the machine-gun ambulance at the machine-gun range, and Lieutenant Morrison was sent back through the woods to the camp to notify regimental headquarters. In a few minutes Lieutenant Miller assumed command of the regiment and marched us in single file back to the road at the machine-gun range, then in column of fours back toward camp.

The general opinion among the men, an opinion in which I concurred, was that the major's revolver was discharged accidentally when his thumb probably slipped off the trigger as he snapped the revolver back to his shoulder to cock it for the fourth shot. Some few raised the question of suicide. Sergeant Bugler Pothier seemed to be insensible as to what had happened. Sergeant Root told me that the revolver the major was using was a six-shooter that he (Sergeant Root) had loaned to the major, as the major's was out of order. Bugler Wuthenow told me that he leaned over the major to administer artificial respiration and that Lieutenant Sieburg had evidently assumed the major's death to be due to the shock from the gun's concussion and his weakened condition. Bugler Wuthenow said that he opened the major's shirt and found a bullet hole, then turned to Lieutenant Sieburg and said, "Why, this man has been shot"; Lieutenant Sieburg looking and answering, "Why, so he has." Bugler Wuthenow told me that he himself was the one who folded the major's arms and closed his eyes to prevent the body stiffening in its then present condition. Bugler Wuthenow also told me that a tobacco can had been put up on a tree as a target, the first three shots being so close together as to be covered by a silver dollar. Bugler Wuthenow told me that the bullet entered the major's right breast beneath the collar bone and lodged in the small of his back, the major being dead when he arrived. You were not there when the shots were fired. I know of no arguments, disagreements, or rivalry between you and the major. Unless the major had been standing so as to face us men and fire directly in our direction (something which is inconceivable, due to his military experience), I do not see how it would have been possible for you to have fired the shot that killed him, as you were standing back of me in the column during the firing. I certainly heard no shots from any other direction than from the major's gun. The intervals between shots appeared equal.

My reason for writing this letter is justice, for I believe you to be innocent of the charges preferred against you. While a long trip and court trial would be, as I said before, unpleasant in many ways and something which I can not undertake at my own expense, the question of unpleasantness is of no weight whatever if I can be of material help to you in clearing you of these charges. I would not be a man were I to sit here and see such accusations prosecuted.

Believe me, Mr. Rosenbluth, I wish you every success and good fortune in this unpleasantness, and remain

Cordially yours, FRANK B. TURNER.

TELLS NEW DETAILS.

STATE OF ILLINOIS, County of Peoria, ss:

Elmer W. Seaburg, being first duly sworn, upon oath states that he is the same person who, on the 26th day of March, A. D. 1921, made a written statement with reference to the death of Major Cronkhite at Camp Lewis, Wash., on the 25th day of October, A. D. 1918; that since the making of said statement this affiant has refreshed his recollection and given the matter further consideration, and, as a supplement to and explanation of said statement, further states:

That when this affiant first came to the point where Major Cronkhite was being supported by Captain Rosenbluth he and the others present were of the impression that the major was suffering from a heart attack; that as soon as this affiant came running up to the point he remembers that Captain Rosenbluth, in substance, cried out, "I think his heart failed; give him aromatic spirits or a hypodermic"; that while this affiant was preparing to administer the hypodermic some one—this affiant believes it was Captain Rosenbluth—asked this affiant if it would do any good to try artificial respiration; and this affiant, still believing that the weakened condition of the major was caused by heart failure, told the captain that it would do no harm, and thereupon artificial respiration was administered by several of the men, and the hypodermic was administered afterwards by this affiant; that afterwards, upon removal of the major's clothing, this affiant discovered the bullet wound which was not noticed theretofore because of the lack of blood coming from the same; that afterwards, while waiting for the ambulance to arrive, there was some discussion as to how the accident might have happened, all of which appeared to be merely speculation, and Captain Rosenbluth then told me of Major Cronkhite shooting with a revolver at a tin can, and the captain then, as a matter of speculation, told me how it might have happened; that no one thought at the time when I first came up to the place of the accident that the major's condition was due to a bullet wound, but everyone thought that his condition was due to an attack of the heart, and it was not until after the autopsy had been made and it had been thereby proved that the bullet pierced the aorta that we felt that it was not heart failure that caused his death; that in fact it was because this affiant had no suspicion that the major's condition was due to a bullet wound that he resorted to artificial respiration and the hypodermic, which would not have been administered and resorted to had this affiant thought that he had been shot; that it was because of the foregoing that I refer to myself worrying about whether there were things which I might have done and was only convinced that all had been done that it was possible after the autopsy had been made; that never at any time until this affiant heard of the arrest of Captain Rosenbluth did he ever hear any rumor or intimation that Major Cronkhite died otherwise than by accident and in the manner indicated in the findings of the board of inquest.

Further affiant saith not.

ANNA C. RIESZ, Notary Public.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from New York yield to the Senator from Tennessee?

Mr. CALDER. Certainly.

Mr. McKELLAR. I want to ask the Senator whether there was not a court-martial about the matter?

Mr. CALDER. Yes. At the time of the unfortunate death of Major Cronkhite a board of inquiry was convened, and that board of inquiry found that Major Cronkhite had met his death through an accident, a wound inflicted by himself.

Mr. McKELLAR. That it was suicide?

Mr. CALDER. I would not say that.

Mr. McKELLAR. Substantially so?

Mr. CALDER. Oh, no.

Mr. McKELLAR. A wound inflicted by himself, and it was afterwards found when his body was exhumed that he was shot in the back, was it not? I am just asking the Senator for the information, if he has it.

Mr. CALDER. I do not know. That may be true.

Mr. McKELLAR. I was informed, though I do not know how correctly, that when his body was exhumed by the family it was found that it would have been absolutely impossible for him to have shot himself; that he was shot in the back with a kind of gun that could not have been used by his own hand to inflict the wound.

Mr. CALDER. That may be true. I do not stand in my place to-day to defend anybody, but I do stand here to insist that everything possible be done to clear this matter up. I have seen in the public prints that Senators contemplate offering a resolution of inquiry. If they do I shall join with them in securing an agreement on the resolution.

Mr. McKELLAR. What was ever done with the findings of the board of inquiry?

Mr. CALDER. The board of inquiry, I am informed, determined that he was killed through his own act.

Mr. McKELLAR. Was that finding ever set aside in any way?

Mr. CALDER. It was confirmed.

Mr. McKELLAR. By the department?

Mr. CALDER. Yes.

Mr. McKELLAR. Appealed to the department and confirmed?

Mr. CALDER. Yes.

Mr. McKELLAR. It has not been interfered with in any way?

Mr. CALDER. I so understand. But if Senators who are interested in the matter contemplate asking for the adoption of a resolution inquiring into the ending of General Cronkhite's military services, I am hopeful that they will accompany it with an effort to determine, if it can be done by any committee of this body, through all the evidence obtainable, just how Major Cronkhite was killed, to the end that justice may be done to the memory of Major Cronkhite—a splendid officer—and also that the name of Captain Rosenbluth may be cleared, if he is innocent.

Mr. GLASS. Mr. President, I have just entered the Chamber. May I ask what the Senator's request is?

Mr. CALDER. I made no request except to comment upon an article which appeared in this morning's paper and to say that I had never attempted to retard investigation of the matter, but have constantly insisted the matter should be brought to a speedy determination.

Mr. GLASS. I think the Senator is quite within his rights in doing that. He is doing what any other Senator would feel constrained to do.

Mr. CALDER. I also, Mr. President——

Mr. GLASS. I do not think the Cronkhite case in either of its aspects ought to be tried here in the Senate, certainly not at this time.

Mr. CALDER. I quite agree with that. I think what the Department of Justice should do is to clear this matter up just as early as it can be done, for everybody's sake.

I thank the Senator from Texas for yielding to me.

ORDER FOR RECESS.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. President, will the Senator from Texas yield to me for a moment?

Mr. SHEPPARD. I yield.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I ask unanimous consent that when the Senate closes its business to-day it take a recess until 11 o'clock to-morrow morning. I will state further that I will ask the Senate to recess at 10 or half past 10 o'clock to-night.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Washington?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Will the Senator state a definite hour when the recess will be taken to-night that we may be informed—at 10 o'clock, say?

Mr. JONES of Washington. Not later than a quarter after 10.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair hears no objection to the request of the Senator from Washington, and it is so ordered.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. President, I think it but fair to give notice at this time that I shall ask the Senate to remain in session all night to-morrow night.

Monday, February 19, 1923.

WORK OF THE LEAGUE OF NATIONS FROM OCTOBER 3, 1921, TO JULY 24, 1922.

Mr. SHEPPARD. Mr. President, Thursday, February 15, 1923, was the first anniversary of the founding of the Permanent Court of International Justice, perhaps the principal accomplishment of the League of Nations. On that day I announced that it had been my intention to signalize that anniversary, in so far as I might be able to do so, by continuing the account of the work of the League of Nations which I had given to the Senate on October 5, 1921. I did not desire, however, to interfere with the prompt disposition of the international debt measure which was then pending. Inasmuch as that measure has now been disposed of and a number of days remain available for the consideration of the bill now before the Senate, I feel that I may properly proceed.

In that address of October 5, 1921, I described the proceedings of the League of Nations from its beginning on January 16, 1920, to October 3, 1921. On that day the assembly, still in its second annual session, which had begun September 5, 1921, after providing that no resolution submitting an amendment to the covenant or constitution of the league should be passed during that session without receiving a three-fourths majority, including all council members represented at the meeting, voted to submit to States members an amendment to paragraph 1, article 26, of the league covenant, requiring that thereafter a three-fourths majority of States represented in the assembly, including all the council members represented therein, should be essential to the submission of amendments to States members.

The assembly then voted to submit an amendment to article 26, adding after the first paragraph a new paragraph providing that if the required number of ratifications should not be obtained within 22 months after submission the proposed amendment should remain without effect.

The assembly next voted to submit to States members an amendment to article 26, replacing the second paragraph of the article as it then existed with two new paragraphs; one providing that the secretary general of the league should inform the States members of the taking effect of an amendment; the other providing that any member of the league which had not at that time ratified the amendment should be free to notify the secretary general within a year of its refusal to accept, but in such case should cease to be a member of the league.

In order that these amendments may be more clearly understood, let me say that article 26 consisted of two paragraphs, and read as follows:

"ART. 26. Amendments to this covenant will take effect when ratified by the members of the league whose representatives compose the council and by a majority of the members of the league whose representatives compose the assembly.

"No such amendment shall bind any member of the league which signifies its dissent therefrom, but in that case it shall cease to be a member of the league."

Mr. REED of Missouri. Mr. President, does the Senator object to interruptions?

Mr. SHEPPARD. Not a bit.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Texas yield to the Senator from Missouri?

Mr. SHEPPARD. I do.

Mr. REED of Missouri. Do I understand that this body adopted a rule by which it would submit amendments to the constitution, and that if a State did not accept, the State then would be expelled from the league? Is that the meaning? Because of the confusion, I could not quite catch what the Senator said.

Mr. SHEPPARD. I shall read it again:

"The other providing that any member of the league which had not at that time ratified the amendment should be free to notify the secretary general within a year of its refusal to accept, but in such case should cease to be a member of the league."

If it felt it could not tolerate the amendment, after notice of its adoption by the league and after having voted against it in the first instance, it ceased to be a member by giving notice of refusal within a year after being advised of adoption.

Mr. REED of Missouri. So that you have to agree or you have to get out. That is the result, is it not?

Mr. SHEPPARD. Not at all.

Mr. REED of Missouri. I assume that that is intended to encourage a free expression of opinion. If you do not agree you have to get out of this heavenly organization and wander all the rest of your life alone. Did the Senator ever before hear of any proposition like that being adopted by any body calling itself legislative or constitutional—that you have to agree with what the majority says or get out?

Mr. SHEPPARD. Mr. President, this amendment if adopted would be an effective answer to the contention that once in the league a State always is in the league. One of the principal arguments made against the league was that if we once got into it we never would get out.

Mr. REED of Missouri. But we might want to stay in, in order to embrace its manifold virtues, even though some one thing was done that did not please us. Does not that bring us to the point that if a majority could be obtained for some one matter which might be highly obnoxious to a particular State it must agree to that and say it was satisfied or must get out altogether? Does the Senator know whether this was devised for the express purpose of dissolving the league gradually or simply for the purpose of preserving absolutely and for all time a majority which had been once acquired?

What I mean is this: It is entirely conceivable that a State might be dissatisfied with some particular thing that had been voted. It might remain in and try to have that action afterwards rescinded, and would have the right to do that in any ordinary body. This exalted tribunal seems to want to have it fixed so that unless you accept in toto what the majority at a particular time wants to do you must get out, leaving that old majority in complete control. Does the Senator think that is common sense?

Mr. SHEPPARD. I do not think the Senator has properly stated the amendment.

Mr. REED of Missouri. I wish the Senator would state it over again. I am interested in it.

Mr. SHEPPARD. The amendment is that a State which is so opposed to an amendment that it does not desire to stay in the league with the amendment in operation may notify the secretary general of its refusal to accept within a year after notice of its adoption and in that way may secure withdrawal from the league on its own volition. If it does not notify the secretary general of its refusal to accept, although it may have voted against the amendment when submitted, then it remains within the league.

Mr. REED of Missouri. Would it not be notice if the delegate went there the next day and said: "I move to reconsider. I protest that this is bad"? Would not that put him out the minute he opened his mouth?

Mr. SHEPPARD. I do not think so.

Mr. REED of Missouri. Does not the Senator think that it is a very wicked thing to propose a plan like this for the general disintegration of the league? Instead of keeping men in, it is putting them out into the outer darkness, where I suppose there will be weeping and wailing and gnashing of teeth, according to the old biblical statement.

Mr. SHEPPARD. If the States do not desire to adopt this amendment it will not go into effect.

Mr. REED of Missouri. But if two-thirds of them do, all the rest of them have to get out.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. No, Mr. President.

Mr. SHEPPARD. Not at all.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. They have the privilege then of withdrawing. One of the arguments which the Senator from Missouri made against this league when it was before the Senate was that a two-thirds majority might change the organization or the constitution of the league, and that would bind members of it; but what the Senator from Texas has read indicates that when an amendment is proposed, and is adopted by the necessary majority, then those who are opposed to it have the privilege of dropping out of the league.

Mr. REED of Missouri. No; that states it wrongly. They do not have the privilege of dropping out; they have to accept it or get out.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Accepting it is the way they stay in. If they fail to accept it, then they are out. They have the privilege——

Mr. REED of Missouri. But you have to agree with a thing that you do not believe in, and accept it as a fixed principle of international law, or, the minute you protest, they kick you out.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. No.

Mr. REED of Missouri. That is a most uncharitable thing for a league of nations to do.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. My suggestion is that the Senator would object very much if we were in the league, and a two-thirds membership had the right to change the constitution of it, and we had no way of getting out if we pleased.

Mr. REED of Missouri. But does not the Senator see the difference? We might not like the thing that was done, and yet, if we were so enamoured of this institution as my friends are we might want to stay in notwithstanding the defects; but we can not stay in if we do not accept and swallow it.

Mr. SHEPPARD. Oh, yes; you can.

Mr. REED of Missouri. The minute we protest, we go out ipso facto. The protest puts us out.

Mr. SHEPPARD. Not at all.

Mr. REED of Missouri. That is the language.

Mr. SHEPPARD. I do not so construe it.

Mr. REED of Missouri. It is as hard to construe as article 10, I think.

Mr. SHEPPARD. Perhaps so, in the estimation of the Senator.

Mr. SHIELDS. Mr. President, I did not understand what the proposed amendment was; but the last clause of section 26 of the covenant of the league was that—

"No such amendment shall bind any member of the league which signifies its dissent therefrom, but in that case it shall cease to be a member of the league."

Does this amendment change that?

Mr. SHEPPARD. It does.

Mr. SHIELDS. In what respect?

Mr. SHEPPARD. It provides that any member of the league which has not at the time of adoption ratified the amendment shall be free to notify the secretary general within a year of its refusal to accept, but in such case it shall cease to be a member of the league. In other words, if it has voted against the amendment, and the amendment is adopted, and then it does not send a refusal to accept within a year from notice of adoption, it remains within the league.

Mr. FLETCHER. I should consider that that was in conformity with the suggestion of the Senator from Tennessee rather than against it.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. President, may I interrupt the Senator to say that I do not want to make the point of order about Senators yielding except for questions, because I intended to give notice when I would do it, and I waited until this colloquy was finished before I suggested anything of the kind. I do not say now that I will make it, but it is getting about time when I probably shall make it before very long.

Mr. SHEPPARD. I thank the Senator, and I shall not yield except for a question.

The assembly adopted a resolution on October 3 requesting the council to prepare for the next annual session of the assembly a final and comprehensive plan for the financial administration of the league, and in the meantime to continue to regulate the finances of the league in the spirit of the principles contained in the assembly recommendation of December 17, 1920, with certain modifications.

PROCEEDINGS OF OCTOBER 4—FURTHER AMENDMENTS.

On October 4 the assembly voted to submit an amendment to article 16 of the league covenant, the article dealing with the economic weapon of the league, adding a new paragraph to follow the first paragraph of that article and to read as follows:

"It is for the council to give an opinion whether or not a breach of the covenant has taken place. In deliberations on this question in the council the votes of members of the league alleged to have resorted to war and of members against whom such action was directed shall not be counted."

The assembly then voted the submission of an amendment to article 16 to constitute the third paragraph of that article and to read as follows:

"The council will notify all members of the league of the date which it recommends for the application of the economic pressure under this article."

The assembly next voted to submit an amendment to be known as paragraph 4 of article 16, and to read as follows:

"Nevertheless the council may, in the case of particular members, postpone the coming into force of any of these measures for a specified period where it is satisfied that such a postponement will facilitate the attainment of the object of the measures referred to in the preceding paragraph, or that it is necessary in order to minimize the loss and inconvenience which will be caused to such members."

The assembly next agreed to the proposal of an amendment to article 16, making the first paragraph, which now reads:

"Should any member of the league resort to war in disregard of its covenants under articles 12, 13, or 15 it shall ipso facto be deemed to have committed an act of war against all other members of the league, which hereby undertake immediately to subject it to the severance of all trade or financial relations, the prohibition of all intercourse between their nationals and the nationals of the covenant-breaking State, and the prevention of all financial, commercial, or personal intercourse between the nationals of the covenant-breaking State and the nationals of any other State, whether a member of the league or not"—

To read as follows:

"Should any member of the league resort to war in disregard of its covenants under articles 12, 13, or 15 it shall ipso facto be deemed to have committed an act of war against all other members of the league, which hereby undertake immediately to subject it to the severance of all trade or financial relations, the prohibition of all intercourse between persons residing in their territory and persons residing in the territory of the covenant-breaking State, and the prevention of all financial, commercial, or personal intercourse between persons residing in the territory of the covenant-breaking State and persons residing in the territory of any other State, whether a member of the league or not."

The assembly then resolved that the resolutions and the proposals for amendments to article 16 which had been adopted by the assembly should, so long as the amendments had not become effective in the form required by the covenant, constitute rules for guidance which the assembly recommended as a provisional measure to the council and to the members of the league in connection with the application of article 16.

The assembly next voted to postpone consideration of the amendment to article 1 of the covenant proposed by the Argentine delegation at the first assembly on December 4, 1920, and which provided that all sovereign States recognized by the community of nations be admitted to join the League of Nations in such manner that if they do not become members of the league this can only be the result of voluntary decision on their part. One of the reasons recited for the postponement was the absence of the Argentine delegation.

The amendment to article 3 of the covenant proposed at the first session of the assembly by the Governments of Denmark, Sweden, and Norway, and which provided that a certain number of members of the league might convene a session of the assembly at any other time than that fixed in the covenant, was withdrawn by the representatives of these Governments.

Amendments proposed by the Norwegian and Swedish Governments at the first session of the assembly to articles 12 and 13 of the covenant, and which related to procedure in matters of arbitration and conciliation, were not adopted, but the council was invited to appoint a committee to study the principles embodied in the proposed amendments and to report to the next assembly.

An amendment proposed at the first session of the assembly to article 13 by the Danish, Norwegian, and Swedish Governments, and which sought to establish in the covenant the principle of compulsory arbitration, was not concurred in.

The assembly then proceeded to discuss amendments relating to articles 12, 13, 14, and 15, made necessary by the establishment of the Permanent Court of International Justice.

Representative Zahle, of Denmark, said that the creation of this court made it desirable to mention explicitly the method of judicial settlement by the court in the articles of the covenant which enumerated the methods of settlement of disputes between the members of the league and amendments to that end were then proposed by the assembly to articles 12, 13, and 15.

In reference to article 21 of the covenant, the article confirming the validity of international engagements such as treaties of arbitration or regional understandings like the Monroe doctrine for securing the maintenance of peace, it was resolved to propose no amendment, and it was declared that agreements between members of the league tending to define or complete the engagements contained in the covenant for the maintenance of peace or the promotion of international cooperation should be regarded as of a nature likely to contribute to the progress of the league in the path of practical realizations—that such agreements might be negotiated under the auspices of the league, for example, in special conferences and with its assistance.

The assembly decided to postpone until its next annual session the proposed amendment of the Canadian delegation repealing article 10.

As to protection of minorities, it was decided to make no change for the time being from the resolution of the council adopted at Brussels October 25, 1920, and providing that the president and two members appointed by him should consider any petition or communication addressed to the League of Nations with regard to an infraction or danger of infraction of the clauses of the treaties for the protection of minorities.

It was announced that Haiti had agreed to the compulsory jurisdiction of the Permanent Court of International Justice.

PROCEEDINGS OF OCTOBER 5—AMENDMENTS, ELECTION OF NONPERMANENT MEMBERS OF COUNCIL, ADJOURNMENT.

On October 5 the assembly discussed the advisability of amending article 18 of the covenant, the article requiring the registration of treaties with the league, and decided to postpone action for another year, the resolution of postponement indicating the belief of the assembly that this article should not be construed literally, that exceptions were permissible in order to give proper effect to the spirit of the article; that is, the prevention of secret engagements imperiling world peace or justice. It developed in the debate that nations could not be expected to register all treaties relating to financial and other domestic conditions.

The amendments of the Colombian and Netherlands Governments to article 5 of the covenant, the article relating to the principle of unanimity in council and assembly action, were withdrawn.

It was decided to propose an amendment to article 6 of the covenant by substituting for the last paragraph, which read as follows: "The expenses of the secretariat shall be borne by the members of the league in accordance with the apportionment of the expenses of the International Bureau of the Universal Postal Union," the following paragraph: "The expenses of the league shall be borne by the members of the league in the proportion decided by the assembly." It became apparent during the discussion that the apportionment system of the Universal Postal Union had not worked satisfactorily for the league.

It was then decided to propose another amendment to article 6 by adding another paragraph providing that the allocation of league expenses already recommended by the committee appointed by the assembly for that purpose should be applied as from January 1, 1922, until a revised allocation had come into force after adoption by the assembly.

Rule 4 of the rules of procedure of the assembly was amended by the addition of a paragraph to the effect that no proposal for a modification of the allocation of expenses for the time being in force should be inserted in the agenda unless it had been communicated to the members of the league at least four months before the date fixed for the opening of the session.

Rule 14 of the rules of procedure was amended by a provision that resolutions involving expenditure should not be voted by the assembly before the financial committee had expressed its opinion on the advisability of the proposed expenditure with regard to general budgetary resources.

The assembly then adopted a resolution to the effect that the nonpermanent members of the council should in future be elected according to a system of rotation for a fixed period, present incumbents to be reappointed for 1922, and that in the absence of any decision regarding the number of the nonpermanent members of the council it would be inexpedient to lay down precise rulings in consideration of the fact that at the election to be held the next year account would be taken, both as to the determination of the entire period of office for each member and as to the conditions of reeligibility, of the period already spent in office.

It was next decided to propose an amendment to article 4 of the covenant, the article defining the council, by inserting between the second and third paragraphs a new paragraph providing that the assembly should fix by a two-thirds majority the rules dealing with the election of the nonpermanent members of the council and particularly such regulations as relate to their terms of office and conditions of reeligibility.

A resolution was agreed to expressing appreciation of the work of the committee on amendments which, under the chairmanship of Mr. Balfour, had done the preparatory work for the proceedings of committee No. 1, and agreeing that the council would refer to the consideration of that committee the draft amendments which had been adjourned and the proposed amendments which might be submitted to the next assembly.

Belgium, Brazil, China, and Spain were then elected nonpermanent members of the council for the ensuing year.

Prince Arfa-ed-Dowleh, representative of Persia, then addressed the assembly. I give his address in full because, brief as it is, it throws a vivid light on the world scope of the league. He said:

"Gentlemen, in my first speech here I had the honor to explain to you that the League of Nations is regarded in the East as a center of peace and equality.

"As you know well, there are more than 300,000,000 Mohammedans in the world. Hitherto in all international conferences there have been two representatives of the world of Islam—Turkey and Persia. At present, by reason of the unfortunate Greco-Turkish War, Persia is the only representative. With all my heart I hope to see the end of this terrible war in order that at the next session the Mohammedan world may have in this assembly its established representation. Moreover, as Afghanistan has just been reorganized as free and independent, I trust that circumstances will permit her also to send representatives to this assembly, and I hope, too, that we shall see representatives from Hedjaz, Mesopotamia, and from the Republic of Caucasian Azerbaidjan.

"I can assure you, gentlemen, that the entry of these countries into the League of Nations will be of the greatest benefit to the peace and tranquillity of the world.

"The League of Nations is an army fighting for peace. The more combatants there are in its ranks the surer will be its victory."

The president of the assembly then announced that the second assembly of the League of Nations had arrived at the end of its labors.

Reviewing these labors, he concluded with the following expressions:

"Here in a few brush strokes is the incomplete picture of the work we have accomplished. The world will judge it, but it must realize that what above all in my humble opinion has marked this session is the spirit which has been shown here—the spirit of closer cooperation, the conviction of work accomplished, and the feeling of confidence joined to the enthusiasm which marked our first labors last year. These are imponderable factors, but they are pregnant with promise justifying a growing faith in the future of the League of Nations and encouraging those who will have to continue our efforts. We ask the press, our faithful companion, to carry to the whole world a message that the League of Nations, the political and moral expression of the interests which unite all peoples, is not a mirage but a reality."

FOURTEENTH SESSION OF COUNCIL, HELD AT GENEVA BEGINNING AUGUST 30, 1921.

In my address to the Senate of October 5, 1921, I stated that the fourteenth session of the council began at Geneva on September 1, 1921, and I outlined most of its transactions to October 3, 1921, in connection with my account of the assembly, which began September 5. I find on further investigation that the council's fourteenth session began on August 30, 1921, and I shall now, for the sake of greater clearness, give a separate review of the proceedings of that session.

Attending the fourteenth session of the council were Mr. Wellington Koo, President, representing China; Mr. Paul Hymans, representing Belgium; Mr. Gastao da Cunha, representing Brazil; Mr. A. J. Balfour, representing the British Empire; Mr. Leon Bourgeois, representing France; Marquis Imperiali, representing Italy; Viscount Ishii, representing Japan; Mr. Quinones de Leon, representing Spain.

SAAR BASIN.

On the first day of the council's fourteenth session—August 30, 1921—Mr. Wellington Koo, representative of China, reported on the subject of the appointment of the Saar Basin member of the Saar Basin Governing Commission, stating that the term of Doctor Hector, who had been appointed as such member on September 20, 1920, on the acceptance of the resignation of Mr. von Boch, the original Saar member, would expire on September 20, 1921, that the other four members of the commission—Major Lambert (Belgian), Count de Moltke-Huitfeldt (Dane), Mr. Rault (French), chairman, Mr. R. D. Waugh (Canadian)—had been reappointed by the council on February 21, 1921, to serve until February 13, 1922; that in accordance with the Versailles treaty it was now the council's duty to appoint a native inhabitant of the Saar Basin to the commission for one year from September 20, 1921, and recommended that Doctor Hector, of Saarlouis, be reappointed for such year, with thanks for his services. The report and recommendation were adopted.

ADHESION OF SAAR BASIN TO BERNE CONVENTION.

Mr. Koo then presented a report to the council on the adhesion of the Saar Basin to the Berne Convention. He called attention to the fact that in a note of July 4, 1921, to the secretary general of the league, the chairman of the Saar Basin Governing Commission had stated that the German Government was opposed to the adhesion of the Saar Basin to the International Railway Transport Convention of October 14, 1890 (Berne Convention); that as a result the Saar railway system was placed in a position of actual subjection to Germany, and had requested, after indicating the unsatisfactory nature of the situation, that the council of the league intervene in order that the Saar Basin might be allowed to adhere to that convention. After discussing the matter at length Mr. Koo moved that the advisory and technical committee on communications and transit of the League of Nations be requested to give the council an opinion on the communications and transit questions raised by the request of the Saar Basin Governing Commission for adhesion to the Berne Convention.

The report and motion were adopted.

PROTECTION OF MINORITIES IN RUMANIA AND HUNGARY.

Mr. Balfour moved that whereas under article 12 of the treaty between the principal allied and associated powers—that is, United States, British Empire, France, Italy, and Japan, on the one hand, and Rumania on the other, signed at Paris, December 9, 1919—Rumania had agreed that the stipulations of articles 1 to 11 of the treaty, so far as they affected persons belonging to racial, religious, or linguistic minorities, constituted obligations of international concern and should be placed under the guaranty of the League of Nations, it be resolved by the council that such stipulations were thereby placed under such guaranty.

The motion was adopted, as was a similar motion by Mr. Balfour as to Hungarian minorities.

NEUTRALIZATION OF AALAND ISLANDS.

The secretary general announced that on August 10 the following Governments, to wit, Denmark, Esthonia, Finland, France, Germany, Great Britain, Italy, Latvia, Poland, and Sweden, had been invited to send representatives to a conference in accordance with the council's resolution of June 24, relating to nonfortification and neutralization of the Aaland Archipelago. His action was approved.

WORK OF THE EPIDEMIC COMMISSION OF THE LEAGUE.

Dr. Norman White, Chief of the League's Epidemic Commission, then stated that a detailed report of the work of the commission since its inception in resisting epidemic conditions in Poland and in cooperating with the Epidemic Commissariat of the Polish Government, was being prepared for the council and the coming session of the assembly.

He said that subscriptions to the work had been paid as follows: Bulgaria, Aug. 20, 1920, £27; Persia, Sept. 1, 1920, £2,000; Siam, Sept. 6, 1920, £1,000; Japan, Jan. 6, 1921, £5,316 15s. 10d.; Sweden, Jan. 6, 1921, £3,000; Switzerland, Jan. 6, 1921, £2,150 10s. 9d.; Belgium, Jan. 14, 1921, £1,000; Great Britain, Jan. 17, 1921, £50,000; Greece, Jan. 21, 1921, £10,000; Austria, Feb. 9, 1921, £42 17s.; Finland, Feb. 15, 1921, £500; Peru, Mar. 14, 1921, £363 12s. 9d.; Albania, Mar. 25, 1921, £981 7s. 5d.; Canada, June 4, 1921, £41,905, 17s. 10d.; Denmark, June 11, 1921, £5,000; Norway, July 21, 1921, £1,919 7s. 9d.; China, Aug. 2, 1921, £2,000; making a total of £126,397 9s. 4d. The following countries, he said, had not yet paid their subscriptions: France, Germany, Honduras, Netherlands, Spain, Uruguay. Of the amount paid in, about £119,000 had been expended as follows: Hospital and sanitary equipment, £22,397; motor ambulance and other transport, £15,892; clothing, £13,166; drugs, £4,913; soap, £4,470; foodstuffs, £15,772; construction, completion, or repair of bathing and disinfecting establishments, and epidemic hospitals, £35,000, freight, insurance, port dues, etc., £3,051; salaries, traveling expenses, office expenses, etc., £4,406.

Assistance to the Polish health administration had taken the form of supplies of articles and stores most difficult to obtain, motor ambulance and other transport facilities in area most needed—that is, northern portion of most eastern area under Polish administration—foodstuffs and hospital equipment in that area, equipment for quarantine stations, through which prisoners of war, refugees, and emigrants returning from Russia were to pass, and so forth.

All arrangements had worked successfully and the percentage of loss was unexpectedly small. The epidemic situation was far more satisfactory than a year before.

UPPER SILESIAN QUESTION.

The council accepted the task of solving the question of Upper Silesia, which had been submitted to it by the supreme council of the allied powers, and appointed a committee to take up the matter, as before described.

DEPORTATION OF WOMEN AND CHILDREN IN TURKEY AND NEIGHBORING COUNTRIES.

Representative da Cunha, Brazil, stated that information received from members of the commission appointed by the council to inquire into the question of the deportation of women and children in Turkey and neighboring countries seemed to show that while a considerable number of Armenians, 90,819, had been reclaimed, an almost equal number of Christian women and children remained in Turkish houses; that immediate action was needed in a problem of such magnitude; that the commission had made various suggestions as to the continuance and extension of this work. He moved, therefore, that the report of the commission be placed before the assembly and that a member of the commission be invited to attend the meetings of the assembly at which this question should be discussed. The motion carried.

No meeting of the council seems to have been held on September 1, and for this date in my address of October 5, 1921, that of August 30 should be substituted.

FRONTIERS OF ALBANIA AND PROTECTION OF RACIAL MINORITIES.

The second meeting of the council at its fourteenth session was held on September 2, and it was decided on that date that all questions connected with Albania, frontiers, minorities, and so forth should be referred to the assembly.

PROVISIONAL HEALTH COMMISSION AND INTERNATIONAL INTELLECTUAL COOPERATION.

Decisions on this day of the council relating to a provisional health commission and international intellectual cooperation have been set out in my address of October 5, 1921.

RUSSIAN REFUGEES.

The council then heard a report by the secretary general as to the proceedings of a conference held by interested countries at the instance of the council on the subject of Russian refugees. It appeared, among other things, that Doctor Nansen had been appointed high commissioner to look after these refugees and that he would arrive at Geneva shortly. The council resolved that the league should be asked to consider financial assistance to the work of Doctor Nansen should it become necessary.

REPORTS OF BLOCKADE AND COMMUNICATIONS COMMITTEES.

The international blockade committee and the advisory committee for communications and transit announced that their reports were ready for transmission through the council to the assembly.

APPOINTMENT OF CHAIRMAN OF COMMITTEE ON WATERWAYS IN DANUBE BASIN.

The council decided to appoint Mr. Charguerаud chairman of the permanent technical commission for the régime of waterways in the Danube Basin, under authority of article 293 of the treaty of Trianon. The duty of the commission was the settlement of all questions relating to the régime of waterways in the Danube Basin. The ambassador's conference had on June 6 urged the council to act as soon as practicable, stating that urgent necessity existed for prompt action. The treaty of Trianon required that the chairman of this committee should be appointed by the council.

MANDATES.

Proceedings of the council in respect to mandates on September 3 are outlined in my address of October 5, 1921. On September 8 the president of the council addressed, on behalf of and by authority of the council, a letter to the principal allied powers urging that negotiations with the United States regarding mandates be speedily brought to a satisfactory conclusion.

TEMPORARY MIXED COMMISSION FOR REDUCTION OF ARMAMENTS.

On September 12 Mr. Leon Bourgeois, representative of France, announced to the council that there had just been received from the temporary mixed commission for reduction of armaments its report on the questions submitted to it; that the commission was to be congratulated on its activity; that it had met for the first time about the end of July and a second time at the beginning of September; that in the short time at its disposal it had accomplished much useful work and had established an admirable program of subsequent investigation.

He suggested that the council, before discussing the questions raised in the report, and while reserving decisions within its competence, accede to the wish expressed by the third assembly committee by immediately communicating the report to that committee in order that the council might have the benefit of discussion by the committee and the assembly. The suggestion of Mr. Bourgeois was agreed to.

PERMANENT ADVISORY COMMISSION FOR MILITARY, NAVAL, AND AIR QUESTIONS.

On September 12 the council received a communication from the permanent advisory commission for military, naval, and air questions. It began by stating that on September 8, 1921, a member of the assembly, Lord Robert Cecil, had in a speech before the assembly criticized the work of the commission; that these criticisms of the commission were in reality criticisms of the council, for which the commission acted as a technical advisory body; and that the best answer was a full statement of the work of the commission.

That work was of two kinds, one consisting of giving opinions when required by the council which had covered examination of forces of States not original members of the league but applying for membership, gas as a weapon of warfare, exercise of right of investigation as laid down in the treaties of peace, military defense of the free city of Danzig, and so forth; the other relating to plans under article 8 of the covenant for reduction of armaments, private manufacture of war material, and exchange of information. The permanent advisory commission had begun the examination of these matters in 1920, without waiting to be asked to do so, and had pursued the work as far as possible, considering the conditions on which the assembly had made the final solution depend.

The council at its meeting in February, 1921, had stated that the permanent advisory commission for military, naval, and air questions had already begun to consider the reduction of armaments in accordance with article 9 of the covenant and had submitted the first opinion to the council in its report of December 11 at Geneva; that the problem was one calling for profound study carried out with a view to finding progressive solutions; that these solutions were themselves concerned with conditions, some of which, such as the execution of the military, naval, and air clauses of the treaties, were outside the scope of the league, while others, such as the enforcement of the execution of these clauses by means of the exercise of the right of investigation, would one day come within its sphere.

The council's statement had contained the further assertion that when the council on December 11, 1920, adopted the procedure proposed by the permanent advisory commission as to the exercise of the right of investigation it took a step toward the solution of the question of the reduction of armaments and removed in advance one of the objections put forward by the governments against the carrying out of article 8, that the standard questionnaire adopted by the council on the suggestion of the advisory commission would facilitate the application of article 8 as soon as it was possible to exchange the information referred to in said article; that these were the efficient measures taken by the council at the instance of the commission to continue its work; that the commission had not been hindered by any lack of expert knowledge but rather by the policy of the governments and the conditions laid down by them with regard to any undertaking relating to a definite reduction of armaments; that these conditions were familiar to the council and that the assembly itself had declared that the question of the limitation of armaments had depended upon them in the first place; that it would take time to improve these conditions, but the essential work would be carried out and would continue to engage the attention of the council during its progressive stages.

The council's statement had then referred to the fact that the assembly had called for the institution of a temporary commission possessing the necessary competence in political, social, and economic questions connected with armaments to enable it to undertake the study of this problem in collaboration with the existing permanent advisory commission; that in instituting the temporary commission the assembly's evident desire was that the question should be considered from the social point of view, as well as the technical and material; that the way to accomplish this was to set up a temporary mixed commission comprising a certain number of distinguished political personalities of undisputed authority, and some technical members from existing league organizations, such as the permanent advisory commission, the economic and financial sections of the provisional economic and financial commission, and the governing body of the labor office; that such a mixed commission would be able to coordinate its work with that of the technical organizations, and especially with that of the permanent advisory commission on military, naval, and air questions.

The communication from the permanent advisory commission then stated that it seemed that certain members of the temporary mixed commission on armaments had lost sight of these considerations when they opposed the right of members of the permanent advisory commission to be spokesmen for their commission, and requested the council once again to define the rôle of mandatories assigned to delegates of the permanent advisory commission sitting on the temporary commission on armaments, and to insist on the close relations which should exist between the two commissions.

The council in reply expressed high appreciation of the services of the permanent advisory commission and said that before giving an opinion as to the status of delegates from the permanent commission to the temporary commission it wished to confer with the president of the latter.

CONFERENCE ON TRAFFIC IN WOMEN AND CHILDREN.

On September 12 Mr. Fisher, representative of Great Britain who had taken Mr. Balfour's place, called the council's attention to the fact that at its meeting on February 22 the council, pursuant to a resolution by the assembly of December 15, had summoned an international conference on traffic in women and children; that the conference had met in Geneva from June 30 to July 5 and had recommended (1) that all States which had not ratified or adhered to the existing international instruments should be urged to do so both for themselves and their colonies; (2) that the secretariat of the league should prepare an annual report, and that a permanent advisory committee should be constituted to advise the council on these matters; (3) that certain additions to or modifications in the existing international agreement and convention on this traffic should be made.

The speaker said that the conference had made substantial progress and suggested that the council approve its recommendations and authorize the secretariat to take the action indicated; that the following States be invited to nominate representatives on the proposed advisory committee: France, Denmark, Chile, Great Britain, Japan, and possibly one of the mid-European States, Austria, Germany, or Czechoslovakia, and that three assessors be nominated by societies mentioned by the conference; that a draft convention which had already been prepared embodying recommendations by the conference for changes in existing international instruments and conventions be referred to the assembly. These suggestions were approved and adopted by the council.

REQUEST SUBMITTED BY AUSTRIA FOR LEAGUE INTERVENTION.

Viscount Ishii, representative of Japan, stated to the council on September 12 that the secretary-general of the league had received communications from the chief Austrian delegate to the second assembly and from the representative of the Austrian Government with the secretariat of the League of Nations, respectively, the first stating that regular Hungarian troops in conjunction with irregular bands had made incursions into Austrian territory; that several Austrian guards had been killed or wounded; that renewed attacks were feared, and that the writer had been instructed by his government to draw the council's attention to these facts and to request the intervention of the council under articles 10, 11, and 17 of the covenant to assure the integrity of Austrian territory against aggression; the second stating that the Austrian Government had also referred its claims against Hungary to the conference of ambassadors whose intervention seemed to be specially indicated in view of the putting into force of the treaty of peace of Trianon; that the conference of ambassadors had just addressed a note to the Hungarian Government; that the Austrian Government wished to inform the members of the League of Nations of the violation of its territory in order that they might be completely informed, and that the writer would supply the council with all additional information.

Viscount Ishii then proposed that a reply be addressed by the council to the chief Austrian delegate stating that both communications had been received and noted; that the council had observed that the Austrian Government had informed the ambassadors' conference of its difficulties with the Hungarian Government concerning the execution of the treaty of Trianon and that the ambassadors' conference, which was intrusted with the execution of the recent peace treaties, had already taken steps in the matter; that under these conditions the council was of the opinion that for the moment there was no need of intervention by the League of Nations; that the request of the Austrian Government was being held over; that the council would follow the matter with the greatest attention and would be glad to receive the promised additional information to enable it to decide on its further course. The proposal was adopted.

EXPENSES IN CONNECTION WITH THE PROBLEM OF UPPER SILESIA.

On September 12 the council decided that the expenditures of its committee on the Upper Silesian problem should not, without its special authorization, exceed the sum of 100,000 gold francs.

REPORT OF PERMANENT ADVISORY COMMISSION ON MILITARY, NAVAL, AND AIR QUESTIONS.

On September 16 Mr. Leon Bourgeois, representative of France, made a report to the council stating that on September 14 the permanent advisory commission on military, naval, and air questions had submitted a report on the three following subjects: (1) Amendment to article 9 of the covenant, French proposal; (2) military, naval, and air status of Esthonia, Latvia, and Lithuania; (3) financial question concerning right of investigation.

He proposed that the council make an immediate decision as to the second subject and transmit the commissions' proposals to the assembly's sixth committee, which was at that time considering requests for admission by the three countries mentioned.

As to the second, which involved a request for the sum of 250,000 gold francs to defray expense of investigation, he said he thought it preferable that the council draw any sum that might be found necessary from the item of "Unforeseen expense" rather than request the assembly, to which the budget had already been referred, to open a special credit for that purpose.

As to the first, he recommended that inasmuch as the council had already intrusted to the assembly's third committee the examination not only of this amendment to article 9 but of a similar amendment to article 8, it should postpone consideration of any opinions or proposals of the permanent advisory commission until the third committee and the assembly had formulated their proposals on the question as a whole; that only when the council had been informed of the assembly's decisions as to principles would it be possible for the council, in so far as the execution of these decisions was concerned, to take the advice both of the permanent advisory commission and of the temporary mixed commission should the assembly ask that the latter be maintained either in its present or in a modified form.

The report and proposals of Mr. Bourgeois were adopted.

FREE CITY OF DANZIG.

The council decided on September 15 to postpone the question of the draft law regarding acquisition and loss of citizenship in the free city of Danzig until its fifteenth session, the information having been received that the Polish-Danzig negotiations on this subject had resulted in an agreement not yet finally reduced to writing.

The council also decided before taking further action regarding the case of Puppel against Deutsche Bauern Bank, as to which differences existed between Poland and Danzig, to invite the delegate of the Republic of Poland and the president of the free city of Danzig to take up the matter with a view to settlement.

It decided further to refer the report of the high commissioner of the League of Nations in Danzig, dated August 30, 1921, concerning the defense of the free city, and which had been confidentially circulated among the members of the council to the permanent advisory commission for military, naval, and air questions for study and report. The same action was taken on the high commissioner's report on the establishment of a "port d'attaché" for Polish warships in Danzig.

The council requested the provisional economic and financial committee to make further study of the question of the financial position of Danzig, which the president of that city had reported as unsatisfactory, said further study not to be taken with the idea on the part of the council to provide for direct financial assistance to the city.

REPORT OF PROVISIONAL ECONOMIC AND FINANCIAL COMMITTEE.

On September 19 the provisional economic and financial committee presented to the council a review of its work since its creation. The Brussels conference a year before had dealt with the critical condition in which the economic world had been placed by the war. The nations in general were at that time unable to balance their budgets and continued to print paper money, providing continuous inflation and depreciation of exchanges, factors aggravated by shortage of merchandise and raw materials and many restrictions on free dealings in goods.

The primary aim of the Brussels conference had been to recommend a sound and reasonable financial policy and the restoration of the world to normal conditions of economic prosperity, as well as the mitigation of the shock of adaptation to the new commercial situation dependent on the adoption of the principles of "financial morality" proclaimed at Brussels. The council had charged the provisional economic and financial committee with the duty of endeavoring to secure the application of these principles and of studying the methods of their application. Most countries had undergone profound financial and economic changes since the Brussels conference and might be considered with reference to these changes in two groups.

First. Countries outside Europe and countries in western Europe, including most of the former neutrals, had in the main shown a considerable and often rapid advance toward deflation, or at least a cessation of inflation. Some had substantially reduced, if they had not completely closed, the gap between expenditure and receipts, and had shown better understanding of the idea that loans should not be incurred except for productive expenditure. Some had stopped the issue of paper money and reduced the quantity of such paper in circulation. This deflation movement had caused great changes commercially. The urgent demand for goods of a year before had disappeared and products were being sold with difficulty, because buyers were under the impression that falling prices would continue and become more marked on account of forced disposal of stocks accumulated during the war. This was now compelling owners of merchandise to seek new markets for their goods, and to do so under difficult world conditions. These changes had been accompanied by increase of unemployment and other unfortunate features, all of which had been foreseen as a part of the process of readjustment by the Brussels conference, which had been careful to urge that deflation operations, if and when undertaken, should be carried out gradually and cautiously to avoid disastrous disturbances to trade and credit. Whether the period of transition was ending for these countries it was hard to say; but many of them had shown distinct improvement in public finance, the balance of their foreign trade had been largely redressed, and a large number of restrictions on commerce, especially discriminations in prices, had been lifted. To help exporters seeking markets the committee had developed an international credits organization, whose services had proved of great value.

Second. Other countries had not been so successful in meeting readjustment problems. Many of these, especially countries in eastern Europe, with the notable exception of Czechoslovakia, had been unable to close or reduce the gap between income and expenditure, were still issuing paper money, and still had falling exchanges. While the constant process of inflation afforded an artificial stimulus to industry, its inevitable end was disaster. Though certain export trades might flourish temporarily, there was no escape from the difficulty of obtaining essential imports due to the disorganized exchange of these countries. Obtaining of credits was seriously hampered, and no markets could be provided by countries with depreciated currencies.

The present derangement of economic relationships was a great economic loss and damage "to all the partners in the trade of the world."

The committee had given much attention to the promotion of machinery to provide credits for bringing exporter and importer together. Its inquiry into systems of finishing credits had satisfied the committee that they would not be employed on any large scale. It had continued, therefore, to develop the organization of the international credits scheme, which had great advantages. The provision of credits, however, was not the sole remedy for existing ills. It was necessary that each State should apply to its own finances the principles laid down by the Brussels conference. In this belief the committee had accepted the invitation to examine the finances of Austria. With the cooperation of the Austrian Government it had applied these principles and utilized the international credits scheme to which the Brussels conference had given rise. The committee felt that if the league was able to promote the financial reconstruction of one of its members—for example, Austria—it would contribute to the welfare of mankind and to that cooperation of nations in peaceful progress which was one of the league's primary aims. In the well-being of Austria was involved that of southeastern Europe and a beneficial effect on the trade of the world. The committee was dealing not only with immediate but with permanent problems. It had begun the publication of certain financial information. It was making inquiry into questions of double taxation, of the treatment of foreign branch banks, and of international action looking to uniform laws relating to bills of exchange.

The financial section of the committee had on May 31 last presented to the council a plan for the reform of the finances of Austria, stating that assurance had been received that temporary advances, enabling the program to operate for some months, would be available in a few weeks; that these advances would be conditioned on the execution by the Austrian Government of its program of financial reform, and on the suspension of liens on Austrian assets for reparations and other debts in accordance with the statement of the supreme council of March 17. These two conditions were as yet but partly realized. The Austrian Government, despite the lack of foreign credit, had tried to give immediate proof of its sincerity, had taken measures which should substantially lessen the budgetary deficit, and was maintaining industry and production in a satisfactory condition, had improved economic relations with neighboring States, while Vienna's importance in trade and finance was steadily growing. The measures taken by Austria had not produced, however, all the beneficial effects rightfully expected. Almost all the Governments had agreed to suspend their liens on the national resources of Austria, provided all similarly interested should do likewise. The United States had not yet announced its decision, and this had prevented complete execution of the financial program devised by the committee. While the committee recognized the good will shown by the United States administration, it regretted the delay, due to the failure of the United States so far to act. The delay had made it impossible for Austria to secure foreign credits, had caused deep pessimism in Vienna, and had contributed largely to the depression of the crown.

Mr. SHIELDS. Mr. President, I do not remember what it was that they desired the United States to do for relief in Austria.

Mr. SHEPPARD. They desired the United States to suspend the lien which it had on the public assets of Austria as security for payment for foodstuffs we sent there some time after the armistice. Nearly all the other nations had suspended their liens, and they were waiting on the United States to do so.

The financial section had carefully considered the progress of the work under the international credits scheme, work covered by a report from the organizer in an annex to this report to the council. With the views of the organizer the committee agreed, it being their belief that for the present the work should be conducted by the existing organization, and that the duties of the international commission under the scheme should continue to be performed by the financial section, as recommended in the committee's report of November 30, 1920, and as approved by the council on December 14, 1920. The committee believed that an application of the Ter Meulen scheme under existing conditions would have a steadying and improving effect on international economic relations, especially if applied to the support of credits designed to aid reconstruction enterprises, and to facilitate financial reforms by governments in the most serious difficulties.

The report of the organizer of international credits, contained in the annex to this report of the committee, stated that the duties of the organizer, as laid down in a prior report of the committee which had been adopted on December 14, 1920, were (a) to prepare a constitution for the international commission, (b) to work out details of the international credits scheme, including preparation of forms of bonds, pledges, and so forth, (c) to consider how far the scheme could be worked in conjunction with existing services in various countries—for example, export credits scheme in the United Kingdom, Edge Act in United States—(d) to inquire how far borrowing countries might use the scheme, (e) to advise as to the executive organization likely to be required, with estimate of cost. The organizer's report then stated that the plan for general organization and administration machinery had been completed as far as possible; that standard forms of necessary documents, forms, and so forth, had been prepared; that the organizer had kept in close touch with the department administering the British export credits scheme, a scheme dependent largely on the availability of such a security as would be provided by Ter Meulen bonds; that as to the Edge Act the organizer was hopeful for results in connection with his visit to the next meeting of the American Bankers' Association. The organizer had also kept in touch with countries that might be desirous of borrowing funds, and they were seriously considering the committee's international credits scheme. It was the judgment of the organizer, however, that the governments of these countries, before applying for the scheme, would have to be convinced, first, that credits would really be provided on the security of the bonds, and, second, that they would be supported by internal public opinion. The organizer had accordingly taken steps to give general publicity to the scheme and to secure favorable consideration by exporters and bankers in the principal leading countries. A pamphlet explaining the scheme had been issued in several languages and given to the press. Important firms and commercial organizations had been communicated with. Articles had been published, and public meetings addressed, by the organizer.

The organizer had attended two very important international conferences—the World's Cotton Conference at Manchester and Liverpool, in the first half of the preceding June, and the Congress of the International Chamber of Commerce in London, in the last part of that month. Both these congresses were attended by representative business men, including strong delegations from the United States. In each body the American delegates had come with a scheme of their own, which they intended to submit but had on investigation become convinced of the superior merits of the Ter Meulen scheme, a one-standard scheme which could be understood and accepted in all countries.

Mr. DIAL. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. FERNALD in the chair). Does the Senator from Texas yield to the Senator from South Carolina?

Mr. SHEPPARD. I yield.

Mr. DIAL. I would like to call attention to the action of Czechoslovakia in buying cotton. My recollection is that it purchased cotton at as high a price as it has brought since immediately after the Civil War, and notwithstanding the fact that the price went down over 50 per cent—approximately 75 per cent, in fact—yet Czechoslovakia paid every dollar of her debt before it was due, be it said to her credit.

Mr. SHEPPARD. I am very glad to have that suggestion. Did they do that under any particular credit system, or was it an ordinary transaction?

Mr. DIAL. I think it was an ordinary transaction. The point I make is that it shows they respected their debts very highly and carried out their contract, which they paid before maturity. Some people might have wanted to repudiate their obligation, but, to the credit of Czechoslovakia, they paid the debt before maturity.

Mr. SHEPPARD. I pointed out a few moments ago that Czechoslovakia had made an exceptionally excellent record in reconstructing its finances and in restoring its economics.

Mr. DIAL. I was not in the Chamber at the time the Senator referred to that.

Mr. SHEPPARD. The organizer's report then pointed out that the world's cotton conference—June, 1921—had adopted the following resolution:

"While the conference recognizes the existence of various credit schemes and the contemplated formation of other schemes, it is of opinion that at the present moment the scheme which offers the best instrument for promotion of imports into impoverished countries by exporters in other countries is that known as the Ter Meulen scheme, and urges all engaged in the cotton industry and in the financing of it to avail themselves of the Ter Meulen scheme whenever and wherever it shall be established.

"They accordingly unanimously recommend that exporters to impoverished European countries should urge importers in these countries to induce their respective governments to apply for approval of the issue by them of Ter Meulen bonds."

The Congress of the International Chamber of Commerce—June, 1921—had adopted the following:

"That the congress recognizes the necessity of the establishment under government auspices of credits for the reconstruction of the devastated and impoverished countries of Europe.

"To this end the congress is prepared to support the Ter Meulen scheme as modified and put into operation by the provisional economic and financial committee of the League of Nations.

"Further, this congress advises the establishment of permanent committees of business men and bankers in all the countries affected to furnish all information and to lend all assistance in the choice of credits and participations."

The organizer's report then went on to state that the organizer had, with the approval of the international credits subcommittee of the financial section of the provisional economic and financial committee, accepted an invitation to explain the Ter Meulen scheme at the annual convention of the American Bankers' Association, to be held in October, 1921; that this invitation had provided the organizer with the opportunity he required for the completion of his work; that he felt the scheme could not realize its full development as an instrument for helping the countries for whose aid it was intended unless American bankers would finance credits given against Ter Meulen bonds.

One of the chief features of the international credits scheme, the report stated, was the function of the league in connection with its application. Through the proposed international commission it could provide an impartial body with the necessary authority, but without political bias, which could aid a government in carrying out financial reforms and watch administration of pledged revenues or assets in such way as to inspire confidence among lenders and not to interfere with the sovereignty of the borrowing country. This function of the league had been well illustrated in the Austrian negotiations. This function would also be valuable in supporting commercial credits. Much depended on the outcome of the experiment with Austria. The situation there was an exceptional one, and the plan proposed was not the Ter Meulen scheme in its entirety, because credit was to be given directly to the government, and the double security of bonds as collateral for private credits would not exist. However, the case was being generally watched, and if successful would encourage others to utilize the league's services in the matter of international credits.

The financial section of the committee had considered the council's request to study the financial situation of Danzig, had collected material, but had been unable as yet to make much progress. The finances of Danzig were apparently affected by the world-wide economic situation and could hardly be alleviated by local measures. However, an inquiry at the council's instance might well be undertaken, in view of the relations between the league and Danzig, and the committee had delegated two of its members to make more thorough study, with authority, subject to the council's approval, to consult representatives of Danzig and Poland.

As to claims by holders of bonds on which interest was in arrears, the committee had considered memoranda by Mr. Carneiro and Mr. Ter Meulen which had come before them while considering the results of the Brussels conference. Difficulties of fact and principle stood in the way of a report to the council without more specific direction.

The committee had decided not to consider direct applications from private associations or interests in relation to specific loans.

As to double taxation, the committee had considered the objections to existing systems of taxation in so far as taxes were required in more than one country on the same taxable objects. The committee thought that the question should be submitted to English, Italian, and Dutch experts, with the assistance of an American expert.

As to the gold standard, the financial section had given continued study to the resolutions of the Brussels conference on the question, which were as follows:

"Without entering into the question whether gold is or is not the ideal common standard of value, we consider it most important that the world should have some common standard, and that as gold is to-day the nominal standard of the civilized world it is highly desirable that the countries that have lapsed from an effective gold standard should return thereto.

"It is useless to attempt to fix the ratio of existing fiduciary currencies to their nominal gold value, as, unless the conditions of the country concerned were sufficiently favorable to make the fixing of such ratio unnecessary, it could not be maintained.

"The reversion to or establishment of an effective gold standard would in many cases demand enormous deflation, and it is certain that such deflation if and when undertaken must be carried out gradually and with great caution, otherwise the disturbance to trade and credit might prove disastrous."

I know that the Senator from Alabama [Mr. HEFLIN], who has just entered the Chamber, will be glad to hear the stand of the Brussels conference, a conference called at the instance of the League of Nations on the question of too rapid deflation, and I want to refer to it again for his benefit.

Mr. HEFLIN. I will be glad to hear the Senator.

Mr. SHEPPARD. It reads: "The reversion to or establishment of an effective gold standard would in many cases demand enormous deflation, and it is certain that such deflation if and when undertaken must be carried out gradually and with great caution, otherwise the disturbance to trade and credit might prove disastrous."

Mr. HEFLIN. If the Senator will permit me——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN in the chair). Does the Senator from Texas yield to the Senator from Alabama?

Mr. SHEPPARD. I yield.

Mr. HEFLIN. As it proved very disastrous, not only to our country in 1920 and 1921, but to Great Britain and other countries as well.

Mr. SHEPPARD. The resolution proceeds:

"We can not recommend any attempt to stabilize the value of gold, and we gravely doubt whether such attempt could succeed, but this question might well be submitted to the committee to which we refer later, if such should be appointed."

The financial section, after studying the situation and considering suggestions that the possibility of stabilizing currencies should be reconsidered with a view to an international agreement, had concluded that the opportune moment for such action had not yet arrived. Financial, economic, and political conditions in many countries were still so unsettled, so many countries were still unable to meet budgets and engagements without new issues of paper money, that it was not practicable to offer any immediate method of stabilization of currency other than the principles announced at the Brussels conference.

The economic section of the provisional financial, and economic committee had considered the question of raw materials referred to it by the council on October 25, 1920, and submitting a unanimous report in separate form. It had also considered questions of unfair international competition, uniform legislation regarding bills of exchange, commercial methods in relation to instability of exchanges, and would make reports on all these at a later date.

The financial and economic sections of the committee had considered in joint session the proposal of the Belgian Government that the International Institute of Commerce, a body created by the Interparliamentary Union, be made the league's general statistical organ, and had concluded that this question should be held in abeyance until the scope of the league's statistical activities could be determined; that for the present it was believed the league should not venture on original statistical work, except as to definite objects and on requests of competent organs of the league. The committee had also concluded that it was doubtful whether member States would accept a bureau to which they had not all adhered. It was also advisable before final action could be taken on this proposal by the Belgian Government that the relation of the International Institute of Commerce to the international bureau of commercial statistics, established by international convention in 1913, be clearly defined.

The two sections of the committee had also considered in joint session suggestions for the improvement of the Monthly Bulletin of Financial and Economic Statistics, but did not believe that any should be immediately adopted except that from South Africa that statistics of gold production and exports should be included.

The two sections had also jointly considered the resolution of the council adopted at Brussels in October, 1920, requesting the provisional economic and financial committee to study the agenda for the next economic and financial conference and to submit concrete suggestions for the establishment of a permanent economic and financial organization of the League of Nations. The committee was of opinion that for reasons already stated it was not advisable to call in the near future a conference on economic and financial matters in general. Consultative conferences on special problems arising out of the committee's work might be held. This did not necessitate, however, the creation of a permanent economic and financial organ to prepare the ground for such special conferences. Further experience should be had before taking up the matter of a permanent financial and economic organization. The committee believed the existing provisional organization, embodied in itself, should be continued another year, at the expiration of which it would probably be possible to lay proper foundations for a permanent body. The committee did not wish, however, to prolong the provisional mandate intrusted to its members in November, 1920, and their resignations were accordingly placed before the council as from December 31, 1921.

The committee presented to the council the report of its advisory committee on finishing credits annexed to the committee's report of March 2, 1921. This advisory committee at its Geneva meeting had instituted an inquiry in industrial and financial circles in various countries to see to what extent the system of finishing credits might be applicable. The provisional financial and economic committee had examined the results of this inquiry and had come to the conclusion that there was no likelihood in practice of a demand for the application of such a system, that while it was worthy of investigation it did not reach actual economic needs and involved legal difficulties that could not be overcome.

The council after receiving this report passed resolutions thanking the committee for its services and approving the manner of their performance; expressing regret over the delay in the Austrian negotiations; transmitting the report to the assembly; referring to its action of September 15 requesting the committee to undertake further inquiry into the finances of Danzig; asking the committee to take no further steps in the matter of interest-defaulted bonds and approving the committee's decision not to entertain direct applications from private sources; suspending decision on the Belgian Government's proposal as to the International Institute of Commerce and referring the matter to the assembly which had under discussion the general statistical functions of the league; accepting the committee's proposal for its continuance through another year and asking present members to continue to serve until the next session of the assembly; approving the remaining sections of the committee's report and asking the committee to carry out their suggestions; requesting the committee to consider and report upon the meaning and scope of the provision dealing with equitable treatment of commerce in article 23, paragraph (e), of the covenant.

MANDATES.

On October 2 the council approved a note to the mandatory powers through its president on the subject of mandates.

The note contained the report of the subcommittee on mandates of the sixth committee of the assembly, a report adopted by both the sixth committee and the assembly, and approved by the council on October 2. That report was made by the subcommittee to the sixth committee of the assembly on September 19, 1921. It started out by reciting that the subcommittee had considered the draft resolution handed in at the assembly by Lord Robert Cecil in the following language:

"The assembly regrets the delay which has taken place in the definition of the mandates, recognizes that the council is not responsible for that delay, and is of opinion that it would be desirable that the mandates of the A and B classes should be forthwith defined."

The report stated that the subcommittee fully agreed with that part of Cecil's resolution relating to delay in defining the A and B mandates and also agreed that the fault could not be said to lie with the council; that notice from the United States of objection to definitions without consultation with that nation had caused the council to delay confirmation until the United States could express its views; that it was understood that negotiations were still proceeding between the principal allied powers and the United States; that a memorandum from the United States had been received by these powers only a few days before the assembly met and that its terms were under examination; that the council seemingly had no option but to await the conclusion of these negotiations before confirming the remaining mandates; that nevertheless the subcommittee realized that delay in issuing the remaining mandates might cause anxiety and apprehension—anxiety because the trust conferred by article 22 of the league covenant had not yet been fully defined, apprehension lest in the absence of completed mandates the sacred trust laid down by that article might not in all respects be fulfilled.

The report went on to say that the subcommittee had not felt that its duties required an examination of the draft mandates A and B, or of the reports which the mandatory governments had in some cases submitted to their legislatures or submitted to the council for information, on the administration of the mandated territories committed to them during the preliminary period; that these reports were all public property and the world could draw its own conclusions; that it was hoped the perusal of such reports would allay all anxiety and apprehension.

The report continued by stating that as to the A mandates the subcommittee felt it would be premature to press for immediate action by the council; that it took note of the fact that the treaty of Sevres had not yet been ratified by the powers; that as to these mandates the subcommittee expressed the hope that during the transitory period the administration of the territories involved would be carried out in the spirit of article 22 of the covenant.

The report held, however, that the B mandates were in a different condition, having been authorized by the ratified treaty of Versailles; that drafts of these had been before the council since the beginning of the year; that even if they were still subject to change in details, the principles they embodied were certainly worthy of approbation; that the French and British Governments were charged by the decision of the supreme allied council of May 7, 1919, with the duty of agreeing on the future of Togo and the Cameroons, and to recommend steps agreed upon to the league for adoption; that this agreement had been reached and that the council should at the first possible opportunity (a) formally approve the application of the mandate system to Togoland and the Cameroons, (b) adopt in principle the declarations signed by representatives of the French and British Governments on July 10, 1919, as to the respective spheres to be placed under the authority of each Government.

The report concluded by urging that the assembly invite the council to present this construction of the situation to the mandatory powers. The report was adopted by the sixth committee on September 20 and by the assembly on September 23. The review of the assembly's proceedings in my address of October 5, 1921, fails to mention this action of the assembly. It should have been recorded in the description of the assembly's transactions on September 23. The council, as before stated, also approved the report, and accordingly addressed a note, heretofore mentioned, to the mandatory powers advising them of the league's position.

The note advised these powers (a) that as to the territories to be administered under paragraph 5, article 22, league covenant—that is, the former German possessions of East Africa, Togoland, and the Cameroons—the council, while reserving examination of the details of the draft mandates laid before it for modifications which might be found desirable, considered generally the principles contained therein to express the high objects which the covenant had in view and to safeguard the rights of all league members in a spirit in harmony with that of the covenant; (b) that as to Togo and the Cameroons the council, in accordance with the joint recommendation of the French and British Governments of December 17, 1920, approved the application of the mandate system to these territories and adopted in principle the declarations signed by the representatives of the French and British Governments on July 10, 1919, as to the respective spheres to be assigned each government; (c) that the council felt that the mandatory powers would continue to administer the territories committed to their charge in accordance with paragraphs 4 and 5, article 22, of the covenant, in the spirit of the draft mandates until such time as the mandates could be regularly defined and conferred.

The note expressed to the mandatory powers the council's appreciation of their courtesy in communicating to the league for its information reports concerning certain of the territories confided to their care in accordance with article 22 of the covenant even before it had been possible to confirm their mandates, and concluded by saying that the council had noted the declarations before the sixth committee of the second assembly by representatives of Belgium, British Empire, and France as to supply of information to the permanent mandates commission.

PERMANENT MANDATES COMMISSION.

On October 10, 1921, the council heard the report of the permanent mandates commission through its chairman, Marquis Theodoli. He referred to the provision of article 22 of the league covenant that the permanent commission should be constituted to receive and examine the annual report which the mandatory powers were pledged to send to the council concerning the territories under their charge and should advise the council on all matters relating to the observance of mandates. He said that such investigations and such advice could only be of value if inspired by absolute independence and impartiality of judgment; that the council evidently intended that the commission should act in such spirit because it had insisted that the commission should consist of experts answerable only to the league as a body and that the majority of its members should be nationals of nonmandatory States. He said that the commission would aid the mandatory powers in carrying out their tasks in the spirit of the covenant and would endeavor to do justice to all concerned.

He then stated that the commission had worked along three lines of effort.

First. It had adopted rules of procedure in accordance with the resolution creating the commission, and asked the council's approval of such rules.

Second. The commission had realized when it first met at Geneva that no annual report could be placed before it, a year not yet having elapsed since the council confirmed the first mandates, but it also knew that under a recommendation of the first assembly, adopted by the council in June, 1921, the mandatory powers had consented to authorize the commission to study reports on their administration in accordance with the principle of the mandates.

Reports communicated to the commission in this way dealt with French Cameroons, French Togoland, British Tanganyika, Belgian East Africa, Southwest Africa, Mesopotamia, and Palestine, and had all been carefully studied except the last two. Interesting as the last two were, the commission considered that the state of uncertainty still existing concerning everything affecting mandates mentioned in paragraph 4, article 22, of the covenant, would make such study of little use for the time being. The commission in studying the other reports were conscious of restrictions imposed by their nature, and by the fact that they were not annual reports but documents drawn up for the parliaments of the mandatory powers and communicated voluntarily for the league's information. The commission would therefore say nothing of them at that juncture except to express appreciation of the courtesy of the powers in permitting the commission to study them and admiration for "the magnificent and generous effort at colonial reorganization and reconstruction" which they showed.

Third. The commission had drawn up questionnaires to aid the mandatory powers in preparing annual reports to the council after the first year of regular administration. The questionnaires were of two kinds relating to mandates B and C, mentioned in paragraphs 5 and 6 of article 22 of the covenant, and were therewith submitted to the council with the hope that the council would approve the proceeding, transmit the questionnaires to the mandatory powers, requesting such powers to consider them as far as possible when drafting their first annual reports. The commission admitted that the questionnaires were open to criticism and reserved the right to complete and improve them as experience might suggest.

The speaker said that in arranging these questionnaires the commission had in mind the "C" mandates, whose terms had been definitely laid down by the council nearly a year before, and the draft "B" mandates, which still awaited the council's confirmation. The commission had refrained, however, from giving any opinion on these drafts because they considered that the commission was limited by the last paragraph of article 22 of the covenant to the examination of questions relating to the observance of mandates. To facilitate the work of the mandatory powers, however, and to throw light on doubtful points the commission had prepared for submission to the council certain questions and suggestions based on a study of the reports and draft mandates before the commission.

These questions and suggestions and the questionnaires were presented in annexes to this report.

The council authorized the chairman of the commission and two of his colleagues to form a subcommittee to seek further information on the question of the nationality of the inhabitants of "B" and "C" mandated areas. This question was raised in one of the annexes to the chairman's report.

PROTECTION OF MINORITIES IN ALBANIA AND FINLAND.

The council on October 2 adopted a resolution taking note of the declaration by the Albanian delegation for the protection of minorities and providing that the stipulations therein, so far as they concerned racial, religious, or linguistic minorities, should be placed under the guaranty of the League of Nations, as from the date of their ratification by the Albanian Government; also providing that the Albanian Government be invited to inform the secretary general as soon as possible of the ratification; also, providing that a copy of the resolution and the declaration therein mentioned be forwarded to the assembly of the League of Nations under reference to its recommendation of December 15, 1920, regarding protection of minorities in Albania. Satisfactory information was received by the council as to the protection of minorities in Finland and the assembly notified.

INTERNATIONAL HYDROGRAPHIC BUREAU.

The council on October 2 resolved, in view of information received on the final constitution of the International Hydrographic Bureau, its public character and international utility, that it should be placed under the direction of the league in conformity with article 24 of the covenant.

MANUFACTURE OF CIVILIAN AIRPLANES AT DANZIG.

The council on October 6, in response to an inquiry from the high commissioner of the league in Danzig as to what types of airplanes and airplane material should be defined as war material, forwarded to him the decision of the air subcommission of the permanent advisory commission on armaments, holding certain heavier-than-air craft and dirigibles to be military, with the understanding that these definitions should be revised every two years.

REDUCTION OF ARMAMENTS.

The council on October 12 decided to instruct the secretary general to inform Mr. Viviani, president of the temporary mixed commission on armament, that said commission was requested by the council to continue its work; to make proposals on general lines for reduction of national armaments in the form of a draft treaty or other equally definite form, to be presented to the council, if possible, before the next annual assembly; to carry out its statistical investigations, as suggested in the assembly report on the reduction of armaments; to continue the examination of the questions of the private manufacture of armaments and the trade in arms. The council also decided to send a new letter to the States that had not yet notified their attitude in respect of the convention of Saint-Germain, requesting them to do so. It decided to send a communication to the governments which would participate in the Washington conference on disarmament in the terms of the draft included in report of the third committee to the assembly. It decided also to ask the temporary mixed commission on armaments, in consultation with the permanent advisory commission on military, naval, and air questions, to consider the advisability of addressing an appeal to the world's scientific men to publish their discoveries in poison gas and similar subjects, so as to minimize the probability of their use in war.

TRAFFIC IN OPIUM.

The council on October 12 resolved in reference to the opium traffic:

1. That the provisional health committee be informed in reference to the inquiry to determine approximately the average requirements of the drugs mentioned in chapter 3 of the International Opium Convention for medical and other legitimate purposes in different countries that it was understood that the inquiries would be of scientific character, and, when applicable to any particular country, would be made through or with the consent of the government of such country.

2. That whereas notice of provisions of article 15, International Opium Convention, relating to prevention of contraband trade in opium and other dangerous drugs, had been called to the attention of the contracting powers having treaty relations with China, they should also be called to the attention of China.

3. That original paragraph 7 of council resolution of June 28 be modified so as to read that in view of world-wide interest in league's attitude toward the opium question and of the general desire to reduce and restrict cultivation and production of opium to legitimate purposes, the advisory committee on the traffic in opium be requested to consider and report at its next meeting on the possibility of making an inquiry to determine approximately the average requirements of raw opium specified in chapter 1 of the convention for legitimate purposes in different countries.

4. That the Governments be invited, if they have no objection, to furnish the secretariat in addition to the official annual report any information as to illicit production, manufacture, or trade in opium and other dangerous drugs which they might think helpful to the league in carrying on its work on this subject.

5. That the Governments of Germany and the Serb-Croat-Slovene State be invited to nominate members of the advisory committee on the traffic in opium.

6. That the secretary general advise Governments concerned of the resolution urging all States members of the league which had not signed and ratified the opium convention to do so as soon as possible.

7. That the secretary general advise all Governments concerned of the resolution urging all States members of the league which were parties to the convention to notify the secretariat as soon as possible of their acceptance of the fourth recommendation of the advisory committee as to importation certificates.

8. That the advisory committee on the traffic in opium be requested to investigate not only drugs mentioned in convention of 1912, but all dangerous drugs of whatever origin producing similar effects, and to advise as to desirability of a further international conference of States parties to the convention, as well as States members of the league, with a view to a convention for the suppression of the abuse of such drugs.

PRINCIPLE OF ROTATION IN CHAIRMANSHIPS OF COMMITTEES.

The council, on October 12, resolved that, being in agreement with views already adopted by the advisory and technical committee for communications and transit, in organizations under the League of Nations the principle of rotation should be obligatory with regard to the chairmanship; this principle should apply to the provisional economic and financial committee so far as consistent with its constitution; that said committee be requested to apply that principle at their next meeting; and that M. Ador be confirmed as chairman of that committee until the next assembly.

COMMISSION FOR CONTROL OF LEAGUE'S FINANCES.

The council on October 12 resolved that in accordance with the assembly recommendation of October 3 a commission for control of the league's finances be immediately appointed, and that the following persons be invited to serve: Messrs. Noblemaire, France; Waddington, Chile; Nederbagh, Holland; James Allen (Sir), New Zealand; and Dusek, Czechoslovakia.

THE COUNCIL'S RECOMMENDATIONS AS TO UPPER SILESIA.

On October 12 the council transmitted to the supreme council of the principal allied powers its recommendation as to Upper Silesia. Reference was first made in the recommendation to the letter from the supreme council stating that in pursuance of article 11, paragraph 2, of the covenant it had been decided to submit to the council of the League of Nations the difficulties attendant on fixing the frontier between Germany and Poland in Upper Silesia, and to request it to be so good as to inform the supreme council of the solution it recommended as to the delimitation of the frontier which the principal allied and associated powers should adopt. Reference was then made to a subsequent letter from the supreme council stating that each of the Governments represented on the supreme council had formally undertaken to accept the solution recommended by the council of the league. It was then stated in the text of the recommendation that the council of the league after accepting this invitation had given the matter long deliberation and thorough investigation; that it had endeavored to interpret faithfully and equitably the provisions of the Versailles treaty regarding Upper Silesia; that the council, feeling that its duty above all was to endeavor to find a solution in conformity with the wishes of the inhabitants, while keeping in view the geographical and economic situation of the various districts, had concluded that it was necessary to divide the industrial region of Upper Silesia; that on account of the geographical distribution of the population and the mixture of racial elements any division must leave relatively large minorities on both sides of the line and separate important interests; that under such conditions the council deemed it would be desirable to take measures to guarantee, during a provisional period of readjustment, the continuous economic life of this region, which presented a complicated problem with its dense population, numerous industrial undertakings, and many interwoven systems of transportation and communication.

The council had carefully examined various methods of giving accurate expression to the results of the plebiscite. The council recognized that the mere proportion of votes would work injustice to one side or the other, and endeavored to find a system assigning to each State a number of electors not differing substantially from the total number of votes in its favor and at the same time equalizing and reducing the minorities as far as possible. Based on these considerations, the council had decided on the frontier line contained in the appendix to the recommendation. The council's recommendation then set out the special measures it considered essential to the continuity of the economic and social existence of Upper Silesia, and to the avoidance as far as possible of the inconveniences of readjustment.

The supreme council accepted the recommendation with thanks and asked the league council to name presidents for the commissions needed to carry out its suggestions.

At the close of business on October 12 the fourteenth session of the council closed.

FIFTEENTH SESSION OF THE COUNCIL, PARIS, NOVEMBER 16–19, 1921.

Members of the council at the fifteenth session, which was held at Paris from November 16 to 19, 1921, were as follows: Belgium, Mr. Paul Hymans, president (replaced by Baron de Gaiffier d'Hestroy for the first three meetings); Brazil, Mr. Gastao da Cunha; China, Mr. Tung Tsai-Fow; British Empire, Mr. H. A. L. Fisher; France, Mr. Leon Bourgeois; Italy, Marquis Impenali (replaced by Count Bonin-Longare for first meeting); Japan, Viscount Ishii; Spain, Mr. Quinones DeLeon.

CONTROVERSY BETWEEN ALBANIA AND SERB-CROAT-SLOVENE STATE.

At the first public meeting, November 17, Mr. Fisher, representative of Great Britain, was asked to make a statement. Mr. Fisher stated that the meeting had been called to consider a communication received by the secretary general from Mr. Lloyd-George, Prime Minister of Great Britain, asserting that inasmuch as the continued advance of Serb-Croat-Slovene forces into Albania were of such nature as to disturb international peace, His Majesty's Government desired to call the council's attention thereto, and to request the secretary general to take immediate steps to summon a meeting of the council to consider the situation, and to agree upon measures to be taken under article 16 of the covenant, in the event the Serb-Croat-Slovene Government refused or delayed to execute their obligations under the covenant; that the ambassadors' conference had decided on the frontiers of Albania which would at once be communicated to those interested. Mr. Fisher then said that the Government of Great Britain had for some time been disturbed over events in northern Albania; that Mr. Lloyd-George's invitation to the secretary general was based on article 11 of the covenant, which stated that it was the friendly duty of each member of the league to bring to the attention of the assembly or the council any circumstances whatever affecting international relations threatening to disturb international peace or the good understanding between nations, on which peace depended. He said that His Majesty's Government had reason to fear that the disturbed area was rapidly widening, and that immediate action was essential to check the spread of hostilities. He stated, further, that both Serbia and Albania were members of the league, and both had taken solemn pledges, such as were contained in article 12 of the covenant, by virtue of which members of the league agreed that if there should arise between them any dispute likely to lead to a rupture they would submit the matter either to arbitration or to inquiry by the council, and agreed in no case to resort to war until three months after the award by arbitration or the report by the council. He added that an appeal to the league had been made which could not be disregarded without stultifying the covenant; that it appeared to the British Government that the council should assemble without delay; that the council should receive from the two interested parties the required explanations and assurances; and that should these be unsatisfactory the council should consider measures to insure respect for the obligations of the covenant. The speaker then gave further details which had led the British Government to act.

Albania was represented at this meeting by Messrs. Konitza and Frasheri; Serb-Croat-Slovene State (Serbia) by Messrs. Jovanovitch and Popovich.

After hearing arguments and statements from representatives of Albania and Serbia on November 17 and 18, the council on November 19 adopted a resolution to the effect that the council, having heard the statement concerning information which led the British Government to request the immediate convocation of the council, having heard the explanations by representatives of Serbia and Albania, considering that the assembly recognized on October 3 that the principal allied and associated powers were responsible for fixing the frontiers of Albania, considering that the conference of ambassadors decided on November 9, 1921, that it was necessary to confirm with certain specified alterations the line of the frontiers of Albania established in 1913 by the conference of ambassadors in London, and considering that the frontiers were consequently now fixed and must be respected in accordance with the guaranties assured to the members of the League of Nations by the covenant, noted the declaration of the prime minister of the Serb-Croat-Slovene State to the effect that his State, in accordance with the above decision, was taking all steps to assure immediate evacuation of its troops from all territory belonging to Albania; noted also the assurance given by the representatives of two States that they intended to live as neighbors in good relations, which implied that neither would take, directly or indirectly, any action tending to disturb the other's internal peace; and decided to give the commission of inquiry, sent to Albania in accordance with a prior resolution, the following instructions: First, to keep the council informed of the retirement of both the Serbian and Albanian troops from the provisional zone of demarcation defined in the decision of the conference of ambassadors of November 18, 1921, to keep in touch with the delimitation commission, whenever necessary, and to place itself at the disposal of the local authorities to assist in carrying out the evacuation, so as to avoid incidents. Second, to satisfy itself that no outside assistance was being given in support of a local movement which might disturb internal peace in Albania, and to examine and submit to the council measures to end present disturbances and prevent their recurrence.

The resolution was accepted by the representative of Albania and by that of Serbia, subject to his declaration of protest against the procedure of the conference of ambassadors and against certain language in the council's resolution, to wit, language specifically defining what good relations meant, the Serbian delegate considering the definition unnecessary. He stated also in his protest that the commission of inquiry had been sent to Albania by the second assembly and that it should be clearly understood that the commission's field of activity should be limited to Albania. The Serbian representative requested that his declarations in the nature of protest be inserted in the minutes.

MESOPOTAMIA, OR IRAK.

On November 17 Mr. Fisher, representative of Great Britain, stated that his Government wished to acquaint the council with the policy it was pursuing as the mandatory of the league with reference to Irak or Mesopotamia, and had notified the president of the council that its representative would make a statement at the present session. He said that the council had been kept advised as to the manner in which his Government had hitherto discharged its obligations toward the league by printed documents already sent the league, namely, (1) the draft mandate, (2) review of civil administration in Mesopotamia or Irak since October, 1920, which was being sent to members of the council, this note describing events culminating in the selection of the Emir Feisal as King of Irak and his accession on August 3; that the attitude of the people of Irak during the last two and a half months had confirmed the results of the plebiscite which had developed an overwhelming vote for the Emir Feisal.

The speaker said all this showed that the British Government had not delayed to act on article 94 of the treaty of Sevres, by which the high contracting parties agreed that Irak should, under paragraph 4, article 22, of the covenant of the League of Nations, be provisionally recognized as an independent State, subject to administrative advice and assistance by the mandatory until it was able to stand alone; that the British Government had obligations not only to Irak but to the league; that besides the duty to submit the draft mandate to the league in accordance with article 96, treaty of Sevres, the League of Nations, article 22, prescribed that the degree of authority, control, or administration to be exercised by the mandatory should, if not previously agreed upon by the members of the league, be explicitly defined in each case by the council. Political developments in Irak had led the British Government to the conclusion that its obligations to the league could be most effectively discharged if embodied in a treaty to be made between it and the King of Irak. It had been unable to resist the desire of the people of Irak for a national government under an Arab ruler. Events had moved so rapidly as not to permit consultation by the British Government with the council before doing what it felt the council would approve, namely, recognizing the sovereign whose accession to the throne had followed the universal demand of the people. The position of the mandatory power had been modified somewhat by this recognition, and its relations in the new situation should be defined by the suggested treaty. The spirit in which the new sovereign, King Feisal, proposed to act was shown by his accession speech, part of which was as follows:

"My first task will be to proceed with the election and convocation of the constituent assembly. The nation should understand that it is this congress that will, in consultation with me, draw up the constitution of its independence on the basis of democratic government and define the fundamental principles of political and social life. Finally, it will confirm the treaty which I shall lay before it regarding relations which are to exist between our Government and the great British Government. Furthermore, the congress will establish freedom of religion and worship, so that all men may follow their own law and religion, provided they do not conflict with security and public morals. It will also enact certain judicial laws safeguarding the interest of foreigners and insure them against any interference with their religion, race, or language, and will guarantee equity of commercial dealing with foreign countries."

The other passages in King Feisal's inaugural address had shown his readiness and willingness to include in his treaty with the British Government provisions insuring the conduct of the Government of Irak in thorough harmony with the spirit of the covenant of the league. The proposed treaty would give a more satisfactory definition of the relations between the mandatory power and the mandated State than any other form of instrument, provided it secured: First, control by the British Government over the foreign relations of Irak; second, fulfillment of international obligations incurred by the British Government by treaty, mandate, or agreement; third, such degree of financial control as might be necessary; fourth, conformity in every respect with the spirit and letter of the covenant. The treaty was not intended as a substitute for the mandate which would remain the operation document defining the obligations undertaken by the British Government in behalf of the league. The treaty would serve simply to regulate the relations between the British Government as mandatory power and the Arab Government of Irak.

The fifteenth session of the council closed on November 19, 1921.

PERMANENT COURT OF INTERNATIONAL JUSTICE.

The official journal of the league shows that on October 8, 1921, Portugal ratified its signature of the statute of the permanent court of international justice, and that Esthonia on October 18, 1921, signed the statute.

LIMITATION OF ARMAMENTS.

The official journal shows that on July 23, 1921, India replied to the letter containing the assembly's recommendation of December 14, 1920, as to limitation of expenditure on military, naval, and air services during the following two financial years, stating that the policy of the Government of India was in harmony with the spirit of the recommendation; that expenditure had been reduced substantially and further economies in the next two years might be possible; but that all economies would be subject to the reservations mentioned in the recommendation and that India's policy would be liable to reconsideration if the assembly's recommendations were not adopted by other powers.

The official journal shows that on August 19, 1921, Sweden replied to the effect that the Swedish Government gladly welcomed all schemes which might contribute to bring about an effective and simultaneous limitation of armaments in all countries; that in accordance with this attitude the Swedish representative had adhered at the first assembly to the recommendation regarding limitation of military, naval, and air expenditure; that the Swedish Government believed that if this recommendation were universally adopted notable progress toward reduction of armaments would be obtained; that so far, however, as the national defense of Sweden was concerned, the question of its future organization was under thorough examination and the result could not at the time be foreseen; that this made it impracticable for the Swedish Government to make a definite statement for the time being as to the action it was likely to take in accordance with the assembly's recommendation.

CAMPAIGN AGAINST INFECTIOUS DISEASE.

On October 6, 1921, the presidents of assembly and council issued an appeal to members of the league for more funds to support the league's efforts against infectious disease in Poland and elsewhere.

Czechoslovakia replied on October 18 that it would contribute for this purpose during 1922 a sum not exceeding a million Czecho-Slovak crowns. Belgium replied on November 4 that it would repeat its gift of 1,000 pounds sterling which it had furnished at the end of 1920.

PERMANENT LABOR ORGANIZATION—WASHINGTON CONVENTION OF UNEMPLOYMENT—GENOA CONVENTIONS ON EMPLOYMENT AT SEA.

By October 27, 1921, the league's official journal shows the following countries had ratified the convention concerning unemployment adopted at the first international labor conference at Washington in November, 1919, namely, Greece, Rumania, Great Britain, India, Sweden, Denmark, and Finland. The journal also shows that on October 18 Sweden ratified the conventions fixing minimum age for admission of children to employment at sea, and establishing facilities for finding employment for seamen adopted by the International Labor Conference at Genoa June 15–July 10, 1920. Inasmuch as the British Government had also ratified the first of these two conventions it became effective as between Sweden and Great Britain on October 18.

PERMANENT COURT OF INTERNATIONAL JUSTICE.

According to the official journal, Brazil on November 2, 1921, Japan on November 17, 1921, and Venezuela on December 7, 1921, adopted ratifications of the statute of the permanent court of international justice, and on December 31, 1921, Panama accepted the compulsory jurisdiction of the court.

LIMITATION OF ARMAMENTS.

On October 29, 1921, Rumania replied to the league's recommendation as to armament limitation; stated that a reduction in the Rumanian military budget for the year 1921–22 had been made amounting to 197,404,600 lei less than the budget for the preceding year.

ARMS TRAFFIC CONVENTION.

On September 8, 1921, Bulgaria informed the secretary general that it was prepared to ratify the Arms Traffic Convention signed at St. Germain on September 10, 1919, such ratification to be conditioned on ratification by other signatory powers. Guatemala stated on September 10, 1921, that it had the matter under advisement. Liberia stated on October 21, 1921, that it could not at present see its way to adhere. New Zealand stated on October 4, 1921, that it was prepared to sign on condition that the other signatory powers did likewise, and subject to safeguards being provided against the convention being rendered nugatory by nonsignatory States. San Salvador, on September 6, 1921, reserved decision pending negotiations for a union of Central American States. Bolivia announced on September 24, 1921, willingness to ratify provided treaty should not come into force until all the other signatory parties had agreed. Venezuela stated on October 10, 1921, that it had adhered to the convention in February preceding. France announced on October 24, 1921, that it would ratify as soon as the other signatory powers were prepared to do likewise.

SAAR BASIN.

On November 1, 1921, the governing commission for the Saar Basin presented to the secretary general its ninth periodical report covering economic and social conditions, steps taken to comply with resolutions of the council, legislative and administrative measures, conduct of railways, post, public works, public education, justice and worship, and public relief. The commission stated that the work of administrative organization was nearly complete, that the creation of new services had practically been confined to the sphere of social insurance and public welfare, that the alarming depreciation of the mark constituted a serious problem for both the population and Government of the Saar, but that industrial activity was for the moment satisfactory, the number of unemployed not exceeding 3,000 in a population of more than 700,000, including 180,000 workmen.

PROTECTION OF MINORITIES.

The official journal shows that by December 21, 1921, the following States had adhered to the council's resolution of June 27, 1921, modifying procedure concerning protection of minorities laid down in Mr. Tittoni's report adopted by the council October 22, 1920: Austria, Hungary, Poland, Rumania, Serb-Croat-Slovene State, and Czechoslovakia.

ARMENIA.

On November 3, 1921, the Armenian delegation to the Peace Conference addressed from Paris a letter to the league stating that on October 13, 1921, an agreement had been signed at Kars between representatives of Angora on the one hand and Bolshevik representatives of Moscow, Erivan, Tiflis, and Baku on the other regulating the question of frontiers and other questions pending between the Caucasian Republics and Turkey; that the Bolshevik administration, which had been imposed on Armenia by force of arms and by whose representatives the above agreement was signed, did not represent the wishes of the Armenian nation; that the delegation of the Armenian Republic to the Peace Conference desired to state that it made formal reservations with regard to any partial or general infringement by the agreement in question of the terms of the treaty of Sevres and the rights which had been acquired by Armenia and recognized as hers by reason of international agreements.

ORGANIZATION OF A SERVICE OF EPIDEMIOLOGICAL INTELLIGENCE UNDER THE LEAGUE OF NATIONS.

On December 5, 1921, the medical director of the health committee of the league announced that this committee had decided to organize at once a service of epidemiological intelligence under the health section of the league; that this service was intended to insure rapid and effective interchange of information on epidemic diseases; that it was at present difficult to obtain trustworthy information on the prevalence of epidemics, because the various national health administrations received most of their information through diplomatic channels, a system often resulting in great delay.

TRAFFIC IN WOMEN AND CHILDREN.

On September 27, 1921, Australia and its various States, and on November 16, 1921, Newfoundland, replied to the league questionnaire relating to their laws against the white-slave traffic and for the protection of women and girls.

On November 19, 1921, the International Bureau for the Suppression of the White Slave Traffic and the International Traffic in Women addressed a communication to the league thanking it for inviting the bureau to take part in the official conference of Government delegates at Geneva on June 30 on the traffic in women and children, and expressing appreciation of the recommendations of the conference which the bureau believed would strengthen the international legislation already in existence and result in necessary progressive measures in the future.

On December 1, 1921, the secretary general announced that 23 countries had through their representatives adhered to the draft convention submitted by the Geneva conference on traffic in women and children, and that it would remain open for signature by other members of the league until March 31, 1922.

LETTER FROM WORLD PROHIBITION FEDERATION.

On October 13, 1921, the World Prohibition Federation, representing more than 40 countries, assembled at Lausanne, Switzerland, addressed a letter to the league urging all possible steps to protect small nations against all attempts to force the alcohol traffic upon them; expressed the hope that the league would support the principle that each nation, without risk of trade or other wars, should freely decide what steps to take to serve its physical and moral welfare; urged the governments of the various countries in making commercial treaties to respect the self-determination of other countries on all matters involving the physical and moral welfare of their people, and not try to force the alcohol traffic on any country that had adopted prohibition.

PERMANENT LABOR ORGANIZATION.

On November 1, 1921, the secretary general announced that the Union of South Africa had ratified the convention concerning the employment of women during the night adopted by the International Labor Conference at Washington on November 29, 1919; that other countries also ratifying were Greece, Rumania, Great Britain, India, Czechoslovakia.

SIXTEENTH SESSION OF THE COUNCIL, GENEVA, JANUARY 10–14, 1922.

At the sixteenth session of the council, which was held at Geneva from January 10 to January 14, 1922, the member States were represented as follows: Belgium, Mr. Paul Hymans, president; Brazil, Mr. Gastao de Cunha; China, Mr. Tang Tsai-Fou; British Empire, Mr. Cecil Harmsworth; France, Mr. Gabriel Hanotaux; Italy, Marquis Imperiali; Japan, Viscount Ishii; Spain, Mr. Quinones de Leon (replaced for the eleventh, twelfth, and thirteenth meetings by Mr. de Reynoso).

UPPER SILESIA.

On January 10, 1922, the first day of the sixteenth session, it was announced that negotiations between Germany and Poland pursuant to the Upper Silesian decision were proceeding satisfactorily.

PERMANENT COURT OF INTERNATIONAL JUSTICE.

The secretary general reported to the council on January 10 that up to January 6 preceding the following States had signed the statute of the Permanent Court of International Justice: Albania, Australia, Austria, Belgium, Bolivia, Brazil, Bulgaria, Canada, Chile, China, Columbia, Costa Rica, Cuba, Czechoslovakia, Denmark, Esthonia, Finland, France, Greece, Haiti, India, Italy, Japan, Siberia, Lithuania, Luxemburg, Netherlands, New Zealand, Norway, Panama, Paraguay, Persia, Poland, Portugal, Rumania, Salvador, Serb-Croat-Slovene State, Siam, South Africa, Spain, Switzerland, United Kingdom, Uruguay, Venezuela.

That the following States had accepted the compulsory jurisdiction of the court: Brazil, Bulgaria, China, Costa Rica, Denmark, Finland, Haiti, Liberia, Lithuania, Luxemburg, Netherlands, Norway, Panama, Portugal, San Salvador, Sweden, Switzerland, Uruguay.

That the following States had deposited ratifications of their signatures to the statute: Albania, Australia, Austria, Belgium, Brazil, Bulgaria, Canada, Cuba, Czechoslovakia, Denmark, France, Greece, Haiti, India, Italy, Japan, Netherlands, New Zealand, Norway, Poland, Portugal, Rumania, Serb-Croat-Slovene State, South Africa, Spain, Sweden, Switzerland, United Kingdom, Uruguay, Venezuela.

That the following States ratified their signatures of the clause accepting compulsory jurisdiction: Bulgaria, Brazil, China, Denmark, Netherlands, Norway, Portugal, Switzerland, Uruguay.

The secretary general stated further that the Cuban ratification of statute signature had been received but not yet notified to the powers, because there was a slight question as to its legal validity; that the Chinese and Siamese ratifications had been completed, but had not yet reached the secretariat; and that Brazil had signed the clause for compulsory jurisdiction, with the understanding that it was to be deemed invalid unless the clause should be signed by at least two of the States who were permanent members of the council.

ECONOMIC WEAPON.

On January 10 the council addressed a letter to the members of the league calling attention to the fact that the second assembly had adopted 19 resolutions concerning the economic weapon of the league and certain proposals of amendment to article 16 of the covenant, all of which were set out in an annex to the letter, one of the resolutions providing that these resolutions and proposals should, as long as the amendments had not been put in force in the form required by the covenant, constitute rules for guidance which the assembly recommended as a provisional measure to the council and to league members in connection with the application of article 16.

The letter stated further that the council would be guided by the assembly's suggestion if necessity for action should arise before final rules had been formally established; that the rules already tentatively suggested constituted a complete system, however, and the council could not adequately determine all the details of its own action until it had learned the attitude of members as to such of the rules as related to their action; that the council would be glad to have for its own information and guidance the opinion of members of the proposed rules; that the particular attention of members was directed to the resolution requesting the council to urge on all States members to take necessary preparatory measures, especially legislative ones, to enable them to enforce at short notice necessary measures of economic pressure.

ALLOWANCES TO MEMBERS OF PERMANENT MANDATES COMMISSION.

The council on January 10 adopted a resolution amending paragraph K of the constitution of the permanent mandates commission approved by the council on December 1, 1920, so as to provide that members of the commission should receive an allowance of 70 gold francs per day during their meetings, that their traveling expenses should be paid, and that all expense of the commission should be borne by the League of Nations.

AUDIT OF ACCOUNTS FOR THIRD FISCAL PERIOD (1921).

The council on January 10 resolved that in accordance with article 8 of the second recommendation of the fourth committee adopted by the first assembly on December 17, 1920, the Netherlands Government be requested to make the audit of the accounts of the League of Nations for the third fiscal period (1921).

RULES OF PROCEDURE OF PERMANENT MANDATES COMMISSION.

The secretary of the Permanent Mandates Commission, Mr. Rappard, advised the council that the commission had unanimously adopted rules of procedure. These rules were submitted to the council and approved.

PROTECTION OF MINORITIES IN ESTHONIA, LATVIA, AND LITHUANIA.

The council on January 11 adopted resolutions inviting representatives of Esthonia, Latvia, and Lithuania to collaborate with the secretariat of the league in preparing a draft declaration concerning protection of minorities.

CONVENTION FOR NONFORTIFICATION AND NEUTRALIZATION OF AALAND ISLANDS.

Mr. Harmsworth, representative of Great Britain, presented on January 11 a report to the council on the convention signed at Geneva October 20, 1921, by the interested powers after a conference on the nonfortification and neutralization of Aaland Islands, congratulating the league on the settlement of this complicated question and stating that it was a victory for the league. Mr. Harmsworth then proposed a resolution thanking the president of the conference for his letter of October 21, 1921, asking the council on behalf of the conference to agree, subject to the ratification of the convention by the signatory powers, to carry out the duties provided for in article 7 of the convention and to give favorable consideration to the request formulated in article 9, stating that in view of the fact that the duties described in article 7 were in complete conformity with the spirit of the covenant and its object, the council accepted the request with the idea of maintaining peace and justice, and instructing the secretary general to bring this convention to the knowledge of league members as soon as it came into force in order that the legal status of the Aaland Islands might be universally respected in the interest of general peace. The resolution was agreed to.

CONTROL OF LIQUOR TRAFFIC IN AFRICA.

The council decided on January 11 to request the Belgian Government to continue in Brussels the work of the international bureau for the control of the liquor traffic in Africa, as stipulated in the convention of September 10, 1919; that the bureau, having been placed under the direction of the league, be required to conform to the general principles laid down by the council for international bureaus coming under its control.

SUGGESTIONS OF SWEDISH AND NORWEGIAN GOVERNMENTS FOR CONCILIATION PROCEDURE.

The council on January 11 appointed a committee, in conformity with a suggestion of the assembly, to investigate the procedure of conciliation proposed by the Swedish and Norwegian Governments.

FURTHER CORRESPONDENCE WITH HUNGARIAN GOVERNMENT.

The secretary general on January 11 submitted to the council a letter on the interpretation of articles 11 and 17 of the covenant, which he proposed to send the Hungarian Government in reply to a further note from that Government dated December 19, 1921. The council approved the letter, which held in substance that intervention by the league could be considered under article 11 only on the initiative of a league member, and that article 17, while it did not provide any special method of bringing a question before the council involving one or more States not members of the league, laid down the means by which action might be extended to nonmembers, assuming that the question had been properly brought before the council. In the matter of initiation, the letter stated, the secretary general had no more right by virtue of article 17 than article 11.

DISPUTE BETWEEN LITHUANIA AND POLAND.

On January 12 the council again took up the dispute between Lithuania and Poland, Mr. Narushevitch representing Lithuania, and Mr. Askenazy representing Poland. After hearing both sides, the council decided to ask the President to prepare a draft recommendation as to the questions involved.

DANZIG.

The council on the same day took up matters relating to Danzig, Mr. Askenazy representing Poland, Mr. Sahm representing Danzig, and General Haking, the league's high commissioner for Danzig, representing the league's interest. The council, after discussion, resolved to request the representatives of the Polish and Danzig Governments to talk over the question of the control and administration of the Vistula River, and to inform the secretary general before the end of the session whether the question could be settled by direct negotiation. The council also resolved that the principles of the draft law concerning the acquisition and loss of nationality in the free city of Danzig, forwarded the high commissioner by the president of the Danzig senate on November 26, 1921, were acceptable; that any modification of principle therein must be approved by the council before enactment into law. The council also decided not to veto under article 6 of the treaty of November 9, 1920, the provisional commercial and consular agreement between Poland and Danzig on the one part and Norway on the other. The council then decided to accept, in accordance with article 103, paragraph 1, treaty of Versailles, the constitution of the free city of Danzig when amended so as to embody the draft law concerning the term of office of senators annexed to the letter of November 14, 1921, from the president of the senate. The council also received the Polish-Danzig agreement of October 24, 1921, by which the treaty of November 9, 1920, was executed and completed. It was decided to postpone to a later session the question of a port d'attaché for Poland in Danzig, the preliminary agreement providing safety and necessary harbor facilities for Polish war vessels remaining in force.

DISPUTE BETWEEN POLAND AND LITHUANIA.

On January 13, 1922, the council passed a resolution to the effect that it noted with regret that the Lithuanian and Polish Governments—the former by a note dated December 26, 1921, the latter by oral announcement of its representative at the meeting of the council on September 20, 1921—had refused to accept the council's final recommendation of September 20 for the settlement of the dispute between the two Governments over the Vilna district;

That the council noted these refusals, which under article 15 of the covenant ended the procedure of conciliation begun by the council's resolution of March 3, 1921;

That the council would accordingly withdraw its military commission of control in one month, and extend to the commission highest appreciation of its services;

That the council noted with satisfaction the formal engagement undertaken for both Governments by their representatives to abstain from any hostile act, and thus maintain the peace which had been preserved during the past year by the intervention of the League of Nations;

That the council invited the two Governments, if they could not come to an understanding, to confide their respective interests to friendly powers whose representatives could be intrusted with the supervision of peace measures recommended by the present resolution;

That the council's military commission had established two neutral zones, one in the Suwalki region on both sides of the so-called Curzon line, fixed by the supreme council on December 8, 1919, the other in the Vilna district; that it would be advisable as a modus vivendi after the commission's withdrawal to substitute a provisional line of demarcation for these neutral zones, no territorial rights to be prejudiced; that should this solution be accepted by the two Governments, the council was prepared to suggest measures for marking out the line;

That the council had received from the Lithuanian Government a protest, dated December 15, against the elections organized in the Vilna district by the administration established there under the military authority which had been in occupation since October 9, 1920.

That the council could not recognize any solution of a dispute submitted to the league by one of its members which might be reached without regard to the recommendation of the council or without the consent of both parties to the controversy.

That as to the protection of minorities Poland was bound by the Versailles treaty of June 28, 1919, and Lithuania by her declaration of September 14, 1921.

That as to the Vilna district, inasmuch as it was the league's duty to see that minorities were protected in Poland and Lithuania, the council believed both parties would consent to its sending representatives, if it thought proper, to collect information for a report to the council.

Mr. Narushevitch, representing Lithuania in the dispute, expressed disappointment that the council had been compelled to cease its efforts at a time when the situation was inflamed by attempts of the Polish Government to confirm the status quo by elections held under military occupation. He said that the origin of the dispute was the lack of a definite frontier between Lithuania and Poland; that Lithuania wished the council to request the allied and associated powers to determine the eastern frontiers of Poland in accordance with article 87 of the treaty of Versailles; that the absence of any league control might affect seriously the future relations of the two countries, and that frontier incidents would probably revive on the commission's departure; that the Lithuanian delegation requested the council to appoint a high commissioner from a neutral nation to serve as intermediary between the two Governments and to protect racial groups in the controverted area; that the delegation could not consent to a new line of demarcation between Lithuanian forces and those of Zaligowski, as that would be a recognition of the position he had created and would practically set aside the agreement of Suwalki.

Mr. Askenazy, representing Poland, declined to accept these proposals and said he would forward the council's resolution to his Government. He thanked the council for its efforts in behalf of peace between the two countries, stating that Poland would continue to act in a spirit of conciliation, and expressing the hope that in time the parties might agree through direct negotiations.

The President, in the name of the council, requested the representatives of Poland and Lithuania to ask their Governments to reply in regard to the resolution in 10 days.

OPIUM TRAFFIC.

On the same day, January 13, the council authorized the secretary general to convene the second session of the opium advisory committee for April 25, 1922, or on some other date if after conference with the chairman it should seem advisable.

SALARIES OF PERSONNEL OF PERMANENT COURT OF INTERNATIONAL JUSTICE.

A memorandum was presented on January 13 by the secretary general as to action to be taken by council in accordance with article 32 of the statute of the court of international justice. The council then by resolution authorized the secretary general to inform the council concerning measures to be taken to regulate the question of the salaries to be allocated to the personnel of the permanent court of international justice.

EXPENSES CONNECTED WITH THE POLAND-LITHUANIA DISPUTE.

The secretary general on January 13 presented a memorandum on the expenses of the Polish-Lithuanian dispute setting forth that at a meeting at Brussels on October 20, 1920, the council had decided that the interested parties might reasonably be asked to pay the costs; that accordingly all expenditure incurred during 1921 had been regarded as reimbursable advances from working capital; that inasmuch as the second assembly had decided that a statement showing the status of the working capital fund should be prepared for audit at the end of 1921 it now became necessary for the council either to determine what should be done to obtain a recognition of the obligation on the part of Lithuania and Poland or to reconsider and amend its decision of October 20, 1920, so as to permit this expenditure, which amounted approximately to 225,000 gold francs, to be charged to current account.

The president stated that the two countries had never declined to bear the costs connected with the attempts to arrange the dispute and that the council would not surrender its right to reimbursement.

Representative Hanotaux advocated apportionment of expense between the two countries according to the system of allocation for league contributions, calling this a fairer method than an equal distribution. His proposal was adopted and the secretary general directed to so advise Poland and Lithuania.

RUSSIAN REFUGEES.

In the case of the Russian refugees it developed that Doctor Nansen in his work for them had through his personal prestige collected considerable sums of money, but that the league had not placed any funds at his disposal; that Doctor Nansen proposed to open an office at Constantinople to expedite relief measures.

ADMINISTRATION OF VISTULA IN TERRITORY OF FREE CITY OF DANZIG.

The council on January 13 authorized further negotiations between the harbor board of Danzig and Poland regarding the control and administration of the Vistula River in the territory of the free city of Danzig.

GENERAL HAKING REAPPOINTED HIGH COMMISSIONER FOR LEAGUE AT DANZIG.

On the same day the council reappointed General Haking as the league's high commissioner at Danzig for one year, the president of the council thanking him for his labors.

EASTERN CARELIA.

The president then invited Mr. Enckell, representing Finland, Mr. Pusta, representing Esthonia, Mr. Walters, representing Latvia, and Mr. Askenazy, representing Poland, to come to the council table for the purpose of considering the situation in eastern Carelia.

Mr. Enckell presented a statement in the form of a letter from the Finnish Government describing conditions in eastern Carelia, giving a history of its people and of their endeavor to secure freedom from Russia, both before and after the Bolshevist revolution. He said that in the treaty of Dorpat, between Finland and Russia, in 1920, Russia had agreed to grant autonomy to eastern Carelia, which was composed mostly of Finnish people, but had not fulfilled its agreement. He described the oppression of these people by Soviet Russia and the outbreak of a new effort on their part for independence, which was still in progress. He said the situation involved international peace, and he called on the league to act under article 11, paragraph 2, and article 17 of the covenant.

Mr. Pusta, representing Esthonia, supported Finland's request, while Latvia presented a statement taking a neutral position. Mr. Askenazy said that Poland had offered to mediate between Finland and Russia, but the offer had not been accepted.

The council requested the Marquis Imperiali to prepare a resolution on this subject for consideration at its next meeting.

TURK AND GREEK ATROCITIES IN NEAR EAST.

On motion of Mr. Harmsworth, representative of Great Britain, the council resolved on January 13 that having heard various reports of excesses alleged to have been committed both by Turkish and non-Turkish inhabitants in Turkish and Greek territories instructions be given the commissioner of the league at Constantinople to investigate any report of atrocities committed in these territories in the future and to report to the council.

REDUCTION OF ARMAMENTS.

The council of January 13 approved a letter to be sent by the secretary general, as ordered by the second assembly, to league members urging that for the succeeding two years no increase be made in expenditures on military, naval, and air forces over that of the current year and inclosing replies received to date from members to the similar letter authorized by the first assembly.

AGRICULTURAL LABOR.

The council decided on January 13 to submit on request of the French Government, through the French representative, Mr. Hanotaux, to the permanent court of international justice the question of the competency of the international labor office of the league to deal with problems of agricultural labor.

MANDATES.

The council decided to postpone until its next session consideration of the report of a subcommittee of the permanent mandates commission on the national status of the inhabitants of the territory under mandates B and C.

EXPENSE OF UPPER SILESIAN QUESTION.

The council resolved on January 13, in reference to its resolution of September 12, 1921, that the expense incurred in carrying out decisions relating to Upper Silesia should be charged in 1922 under the budget heading of "Unforeseen expenditure," such as special commissions of inquiry, etc.

SPANISH REPRESENTATIVE.

On January 14 Mr. de Reynoso replaced Mr. Quinones de Leon as Spanish representative.

EASTERN CARELIA.

On January 14 the Lithuanian delegation presented a letter from its Government joining in the appeal to the league to bring about a peaceful settlement of the eastern Carelia question.

The Marquis Imperiali then submitted a resolution relating to Eastern Carelia, which declared that the council, having heard the statement of the Finnish delegation on Eastern Carelia, contained in a letter from the Finnish Government, dated November 26, 1921, and the statements submitted by the Esthonian, Latvian, Polish, and Lithuanian representatives, was willing to consider the question with a view to arriving at a satisfactory solution if the parties concerned were agreeable; that one of the interested States, members of the league, which had diplomatic relations with the Soviet Government at Moscow, might ascertain the views of that Government in such respect; that it was to be hoped that one of these States could lend its good offices as between the parties to bring about a settlement in accordance with the league's ideals; that the secretary general be instructed to obtain all necessary information for the council.

ARMENIANS IN CILICIA.

The president stated to the council on January 14 that the recent evacuation of Cilicia by the French, following the treaty of Angora, had profoundly stirred the Armenian world; that complaints from the Armenian people and from the Catholic

Armenian Hierarchy had reached the Belgian Government; that it was considered to be the duty of the league to watch over the fate of the Armenian people in the future. He said that fortunately no deplorable incident had occurred during the evacuation, this being due to measures taken by the French Government; that the outlook for the future was dark, however, and that the council ought to suggest to the principal allied powers measures which would protect these people; that the moment was auspicious because negotiations were about to take place for definite peaceful conditions in that section; that promises had been made to the Armenian people, and that the second assembly had enacted a resolution which the council had laid before the principal allied powers in the shape of a recommendation; that the council should again direct the attention of these powers to the matter.

Mr. Hanotaux, representative of France, then presented a statement of France's course following her Angora agreement with nationalist Turkey. He said that for many reasons, and especially to reduce the burden of military expenditure, France had long intended to withdraw her troops from the Turkish territory she was still occupying; that the San Remo agreement of 1920 had roughly defined the zones which would be relieved of Turkish sovereignty and in which, under article 22 of the covenant, practically independent nations were to be set up under the guidance of a mandatory state; that north of the Syrian territories, which were to come under mandate, France had kept troops, which had been subjected to attacks by bands of Turkish nationalists, and which became involved, despite France's desire to end the state of war, in the conflict between Turkish nationalists and the Greek armies under Constantine. France determined, however, in reaching a peaceful understanding with Angora chiefs, to take all possible steps under existing conditions to protect and safeguard the Christian populations established in or who had returned to Cilicia, the Turkish nationalist territory from which France was retiring. The negotiations for this retirement and for peaceful relations had taken place in London with representatives of the nationalist chiefs of Angora, the nationalist capital of these chiefs and their followers. France had not been able to obtain at these negotiations all the conditions which had been imposed on a beaten and supposedly disarmed Turkey by the treaty of Sevres, but had succeeded in securing guaranties similar to those which the Allies had considered sufficient for racial and religious immunities in eastern Europe. These guaranties were covered by article 6 of the treaty with the Turkish nationalists, known as the treaty of Angora, in which it was declared that the government of the great national assembly of Turkey would confirm the rights of minorities which were solemnly recognized in the national covenant in accordance with the principles established in the conventions on this subject concluded between the allied powers, their enemies, and certain of their allies. Mr. Hanotaux averred that by this declaration the Angora military chiefs agreed to grant to the minorities in Cilicia full and entire protection of life and property, free exercise of religion, entire legal equality, including the right to hold office, free use of their own language even in the courts, and the right to establish and direct charitable, religious, social, and educational institutions. He said further that by article 5 of the same treaty the Angora chiefs agreed to grant full and complete amnesty, and had kept the agreement, having issued a proclamation of amnesty when these representatives began to officiate at Adana.

The French Government was not satisfied with having secured these promises, however, but sent a special mission under the supervision of a consul general experienced in eastern affairs, the members of this mission having taken up residence at Adana, Mersina, Deurtyol, and Ain Tab. The mission got into communication with the Angora chiefs, secured the removal of Turkish officials whose attitude toward the minorities was under suspicion, obtained a suspension of the military recruiting law for six months as to the Christians in Cilicia, and organized a Franco-Turkish commission, with a special police force to protect property abandoned by owners. Every assistance, Mr. Hanotaux continued, has been given the French mission by the recently appointed Turkish authorities in reassuring native Christians, among whom an attempt had been made to scatter panic. This attempt had borne fruit even before the French mission arrived, large numbers of Armenians having fled from their homes to look for refuge abroad. They had found ships ready to take them on the coast, ships which then proceeded to Egypt, Palestine, and Cyprus, the refugees encountering strict regulations by the local authorities, who would not permit them to land. Panic-stricken and homeless, they turned to the relief offered them under the French flag and were landed in the French mandated territories of Syria and Lebanon. The speaker went on to say that the French high commissioner organized a distribution point for the emigrants at Mersina, dividing them according to religion, means of support, occupation, etc.; that transportation by means of chartered or requisitioned ships was placed at their disposal to enable them to reach Syria; that other distribution points were set up on the frontiers of Cilicia and Beirut; that those with adequate means of support, or who could be reliably vouched for, or who were sure of getting employment, were permitted to live wherever their interests required; that for the others accommodations had been secured in barracks or in the Lebanon convents, which were at present unoccupied; that all able-bodied men were employed on works of public utility provided by the high commissioner; that wages were paid, of which a small part was reserved for the maintenance of their families; that many of the refugees had received reassuring news from Cilicia and were already talking of returning to their homes.

Mr. Hanotaux said further that the French high commissioner in Syria, although convinced that the French mission, in cooperation with the new Ottoman authorities, would handle the situation successfully, and that Christians in Cilicia would not be molested, had nevertheless taken measures to receive any further refugees and to care for them temporarily. He pointed out that the French Parliament had increased the credit at the disposal of the high commissioner in Syria from 20,000,000 francs to 50,000,000, in order that he might be able to do everything humanly possible for the Armenian refugees. He added that since January 4 the flight of refugees seemed to have ceased; that the French Government felt that by its treatment of the Cilician minorities it had maintained its traditional policy of generous protection to Christian communities in the East; that it gave this frank explanation to the council of the league pending ratification by Turkey and the Allies of a final treaty defining the rights of ethnical and religious minorities and the manner of their guaranty by the league; that according to the council's procedure the league's intervention could not become effective until the council had accepted the mandate which would be offered it by a treaty actually in force.

Mr. Harmsworth, representative of the British Empire, and Marquis Imperiali, representative of Italy, thanked Mr. Hanotaux for his statement.

The council then adopted a resolution reminding the principal allied powers, in view of the fact that the sufferings of the Armenian Nation had been aggravated by the delay of the restoration of peace in the East, and in the hope that negotiations then in progress between the principal allied powers would enable outstanding questions to be satisfactorily settled, leading to return of peaceful conditions in regions so long ravaged by war and by acts of violence from which Armenian populations had especially suffered, of the resolution adopted by the assembly on September 21, 1921, in which representatives of these powers participated, relating to the safeguarding of the future of the Armenian people—noting with satisfaction the statements of the French representative showing the steps taken by France to protect the Armenian populations—drawing attention of the principal allied powers to the urgent need for restitution of all possible measures for the protection of minorities in the Ottoman Empire, and stating the willingness of the council to cooperate to this end.

REPORT OF HEALTH COMMITTEE.

A report on the work of the health committee of the league was then presented by Doctor Rajchmaun, medical director. It covered the efforts of the subcommittee on opium, the relations between the health section and the health committee of the league, sanitary work in Russia and Poland, the question of the pneumonic plague in Manchuria and Siberia, the standardization of antitoxic sera, and so forth. The report was approved.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

MONDAY, February 19, 1923.

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. James Shera Montgomery, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Almighty God, in the strength which Thou hast most graciously given us, we bow in Thy presence. May the thought of Thy loving Father fatherhood arouse in us devout reverence and holy desire to do Thy will. Do Thou accept our humble offerings of gratitude and praise. So direct us that all endeavor shall be with high aims that touch the present and future welfare of our country. Bestow great wisdom and courage so that the integrity of all Christian institutions shall be made secure. Nobly will our work be done if molded by the standards of Him who is the perfect model for all men. Help us to go on each day from strength to strength in the cultivation of those virtues which are the abiding realities for all time; through Jesus Christ our Lord. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of Saturday, February 17, and of Sunday, February 18, were read and approved.

The SPEAKER. To-day is suspension day, and the Clerk will report the first bill on the Unanimous Consent Calendar.

LAC DU FLAMBEAU BAND—LAKE SUPERIOR CHIPPEWAS.

The first bill on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill H. R. 6428, for the enrollment and allotment of members of the Lac du Flambeau Band of Lake Superior Chippewas in the State of Wisconsin, and for other purposes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, although I question whether it is for the best interests of these Indians to have their lands allotted, yet in view of the statements of the gentleman from Wisconsin and the Assistant Secretary of the Interior I will not press my objection in view of amendments that are going to be offered by my colleague.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That within 90 days after the approval of this act the Secretary of the Interior be, and he hereby is, authorized and directed to add to the existing rolls of the Lac du Flambeau Band of Chippewa Indians the names of all persons legally entitled to enrollment born prior to the approval of this act, including the issue of members of the band heretofore enrolled or who may be enrolled hereunder, such roll to constitute the final roll of the Lac du Flambeau Band. In the preparation of this roll the said Secretary shall be assisted by a committee of members of the said band duly appointed at a general council of the Lac du Flambeau Band called for that purpose. Immediately after the approval of the roll the Secretary of the Interior shall cause allotments of land within the Lac du Flambeau Indian Reservation to be made to the members of the band whose names appear on said additional roll (exclusive of the merchantable timber on such land) in conformity with the provisions of the treaty of September 30, 1854 (10 Stat. L., p. 1109), and acts of Congress applicable to allotting lands to members of an Indian tribe: Provided, That if there is not sufficient unappropriated land on the reservation to give each member the full acreage to which he or she is entitled, the Secretary of the Interior may prorate the lands as nearly as practicable among the members so enrolled. The patents for the allotments made hereunder shall issue to the allottees as early as practicable after the merchantable timber thereon has been removed, and the right is hereby reserved to the United States to cut and market the merchantable timber on the lands so allotted, the proceeds to be disposed of as herein provided. When the merchantable timber has been cut from the lands so allotted the title to such timber as remains on said lands shall thereupon pass to the respective allottees: Provided further, That the land allotted or reserved hereunder shall be subject to all the laws of the United States prohibiting the introduction of intoxicants into the Indian country until otherwise provided by Congress.

Mr. A. P. NELSON. Mr. Speaker, I offer the following amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. A. P. NELSON: On page 2, line 8, after the word "the" before treaty, strike out all following up to and including the word "tribe," on line 11, and insert in lieu thereof the following: "General allotment act of February 8, 1887 (24 Stat. 338), as amended, the trust patents to said allotments to contain the usual 25-year restriction clause as to alienation and taxation."

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk, continuing the reading of the bill, read as follows:

SEC. 2. That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he hereby is, authorized to sell, at the current market value in the year which the timber is cut or logged the merchantable timber on the lands allotted under the provisions of this act under such rules and regulations as he may prescribe, the net proceeds derived therefrom, together with any undistributed proceeds derived from the sale of timber heretofore cut and sold from such lands, shall be distributed per capita and paid to the members of the band enrolled under the provisions of this act where such members are or may hereafter be adjudged by the Secretary of the Interior to be competent to manage their own affairs and care for their own business; and in cases where members have not been adjudged competent by the Secretary of the Interior their shares shall be deposited to their individual credit as individual Indian moneys are now deposited and paid to them or used for their benefit under the supervision of the Secretary of the Interior: Provided, That of the amount now on deposit derived from the sale of tribal timber, at least $50,000 shall be distributed among the members enrolled under the provisions of this act as early as practicable after the approval of the roll as herein provided.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, I move to strike out the last word. I understand the amendment adopted in section 1 places a limitation on the alienation for 25 years so that the Indians can not dispose of their allotments within 25 years?

Mr. A. P. NELSON. That is correct; and, furthermore, if at the end of 25 years some Indians are found not to be competent, then the bureau under the law has a right to make an extension of 10 years more.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, I withdraw the pro forma amendment.

Mr. A. P. NELSON. Mr. Speaker, I offer the following amendment to section 2.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 3, section 2, line 4, after the word "authorized," insert the following: "by the advice and consent of the Indian council representing the band."

Mr. STAFFORD. Will the gentleman please make some explanation of that?

Mr. A. P. NELSON. This has been offered to meet the objection of my colleague from Pennsylvania [Mr. KELLY], who insisted that it ought to be within the province of the Indians themselves to consent and agree to the sale of timber when made. Hence I offer the amendment suggested by Mr. KELLY, which was that it should be by the advice and consent of the Indian council representing the band.

Mr. STAFFORD. Will not the effect of that be to hold up the sale of the timber that has been cut until the band gathers in communal meeting and approves of the sale?

Mr. A. P. NELSON. Not necessarily.

Mr. STAFFORD. If this amendment is agreed to it will read:

That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he hereby is, authorized, by the advice and consent of the Indian council representing the band to sell at the current market value in the year in which the timber is cut or logged.

And so forth.

I question whether it is not going to result in holding up unnecessarily the timber that has been cut.

Mr. A. P. NELSON. Personally I am in favor of the bill as originally drawn, but this amendment is offered to meet the objection of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. KELLY], who would not consent to the bill being passed without that amendment. However, if there is objection to it I am willing to withdraw the amendment.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman withdraws his amendment.

Mr. A. P. NELSON. Mr. Speaker, I have another amendment, which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 3, section 2, line 20, after the word "deposit," insert the words "and hereafter."

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, what is that for?

Mr. A. P. NELSON. At the present time there is only about $24,000 on deposit, and the amendment is offered so that there at least will be $50,000.

Mr. BLANTON. Are all these amendments committee amendments?

Mr. A. P. NELSON. They are all agreed to by the committee.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 3. That there be set aside for the village of Lac du Flambeau, lots 3 and 4 of section 8, and lots 3 and 4 of section 5, township 40 north, range 5 east; for the Indian village, lots 1, 2, 3, 4, and 5 of section 1, and lots 1, 5, 6, and 7 of section 2, and lots 1, 2, and 3 of section 12, township 40 north, range 5 east; and for the school agency farm, approximately 200 acres of unappropriated land, and sections 6 and 7, township 40 north, range 5 east.

With the following committee amendment:

Page 4, line 1, beginning with the word "that," strike out the remainder of the section and insert in lieu thereof the following: "sold from such lands, shall be distributed per capita to the members of the band enrolled under the provisions of this act where such members are or may hereafter be adjudged by the Secretary of the Interior to be competent to manage their own affairs and care for their own business; and in cases where members have not been adjudged competent by the Secretary of the Interior, their shares shall be deposited to their individual credit as individual Indian moneys are now deposited and paid to them or used for their benefit under the supervision of the Secretary of the Interior: Provided, That of the amount now on deposit derived from the sale of tribal timber, at least $50,000 shall be distributed among the members enrolled under the provisions of this act as early as practicable after the approval of the roll as herein provided."

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the committee amendment.

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

JURISDICTION OF MISSISSIPPI RIVER COMMISSION.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (H. R. 13459) extending the jurisdiction of the Mississippi River Commission and making available funds appropriated under authority of an act entitled "An act to provide for the control of the floods of the Mississippi River and of the Sacramento River, Calif., and for other purposes," approved March 1, 1917, for the purpose of controlling the floods of the Mississippi River from the mouth of the Ohio River to Rock Island, Ill., and for the purpose of controlling the floods of the tributaries of the Mississippi River between the mouth of the Ohio River and Rock Island, Ill., including levee protection and bank protection, in so far as said tributaries are affected by the flood waters of the Mississippi River.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. WILSON. Mr. Speaker, this is the bill from the Committee on Flood Control, and on behalf of the author, Mr. KOPP, who is absent to-day, I ask unanimous consent that this bill be passed over without prejudice.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

SALARIES OF AUDITOR AND DEPUTY AUDITOR OF PHILIPPINE ISLANDS.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (S. 3617) to fix the salaries of the auditor and deputy auditor of the Philippine Islands.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, I object.

Mr. TOWNER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the bill may continue its place on the calendar. Is there objection?

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, may I ask the gentleman from Iowa what rights will accrue to the bill by having it die in the closing hours of Congress still on the calendar?

Mr. TOWNER. I hope to find some propitious moment when gentlemen will feel that they ought not to object.

Mr. STAFFORD. It will have the advantage that the calendars on the last day will show that the bill is on two separate calendars.

Mr. BLANTON. I notice that nothing that affects the Philippine Islands or any islands in that direction ever passes without the gentleman protecting its interests, so I shall not object.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Iowa that the bill may retain its place on the calendar?

There was no objection.

PINEY BRANCH ROAD.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (S. 1066) to authorize the Commissioners of the District of Columbia to close Piney Branch Road between Seventeenth and Taylor Streets and Sixteenth and Allison Streets NW., rendered useless or unnecessary by reason of the opening and extension of streets called for in the permanent highway plan of the District of Columbia.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the bill as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Commissioners of the District of Columbia be, and they are hereby, authorized to close Piney Branch Road from Seventeenth and Taylor Streets to Sixteenth and Allison Streets NW., upon the application in writing of the owner or owners of all of the property abutting on said road between the limits named, and upon the closing of said road the land embraced therein shall revert to the owners of the abutting property.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. HAWES] have permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD in 8-point type on the alien-property question.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Tennessee asks unanimous consent that the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. HAWES] may extend his remarks in the RECORD in 8-point type on the alien-property question. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

PRIVATE PROPERTY SHOULD NOT BE CONFISCATED FOR PUBLIC DEBT.

Mr. HAWES. Mr. Speaker, the United States should return all property now held by the Alien Property Custodian except those patents which are now in litigation, or if part is withheld, a definite statement should be contained in the partial release that the balance is not retained for security or ultimate confiscation.

The bill under consideration defends the medieval doctrine of the use of private property as security for public debt, and, in addition, contains the threat of confiscation.

We are not dealing with the property of the German Government. We are considering the disposition of the private property of individuals.

These individuals were invited to make investments in our country and had the right to feel entirely secure because of the established policy of the American Government.

The United States is not constrained to violate the uses of civilization, either to punish an enemy or palliate a friend. Our policy should be one of justice, humanity, and right, irrespective of the acts of others. There is no obligation of imitation that binds us to do those things which are wrong.

The private property of alien individuals must be secure in times of peace, war, and the settlement of war. There should never be a period when it is not secure. Its established security will be our best bid for the business of the world and the respect of the world.

Retaining the principle is the grave issue. What proportion of money shall be returned is of secondary consequence. Humane reasons dictate a return of all or a large portion of this private property, but the principle of the sacredness of private property in its relation to public debt should be preserved without impairment.

In violating our traditions we pass a legacy to posterity which will rise to strike them at a future time.

If we change our policy and now hold as security—with the threat of ultimate confiscation—the private property of individuals, Japan, England, or any other nation may in the future justify similar conduct.

We have the power to confiscate. That is not in dispute. It is whether we shall exercise the power that causes this discussion.

The limitation of $10,000 in the release is wrong in both equity and principle. If only a limited portion of the property is to be returned now it should be upon an agreed percentage, affecting all property held, whether small or large. We can not justify an arbitrary dead line regulated by the amount of property.

While the State Department is advocating a policy of holding private property of individuals for security for a public debt, the responsibility for the passage of this act rests exclusively upon Congress and upon each individual Member of Congress, and not upon the State Department, which can only carry out the expressed will of Congress.

American investments abroad are increasing, and it is manifestly to our advantage that they should increase, because with their increase we add to our ability to sell our surplus products.

No discussion is necessary to prove not only the advantage but the necessity for increased sales of our surplus products abroad.

The decision of Congress in this matter will fix the status of all of our foreign investments.

We have refused to recognize Mexico because of her laws relating to American investments; and yet this bill proposes, and the State Department advocates, the principle of holding the private property of individuals as security for a public debt.

An extension of this principle would mean the right to seize the private property of any national and use it as security for the public debt of the Government of that national.

Once this principle is recognized in our public life all international comity, stability, and certainty will cease.

We can not afford to sacrifice a great fundamental principle for a seeming transitory benefit.

THE ORIGINAL ACT.

Shortly after our entrance into the World War Congress created the office of Alien Property Custodian for the following avowed purposes:

First. To prevent the use of this property in a manner injurious to the interests of the United States; and Second. To conserve and protect the property of alien nationals situated within the United States.

The bill was discussed by two great committees of the Senate and House. Representatives of all the executive departments of the Government who appeared as witnesses, without exception, declared with great positiveness that it was not the intention of Congress to confiscate this property, but that, upon the contrary, it was to be returned to the private owners upon the conclusion of hostilities.

In the discussions on the floor of both the House and Senate the declaration was made time and again by the sponsors of the bill that the United States was taking over the property temporarily in the capacity of a custodian, and that the property would be returned to the private individuals owning it upon the conclusion of the war.

There was an absolute, unqualified unanimity of opinion on this subject. This unanimity was not broken by recorded declaration from any executive officer of the Government by either a Senator or a Member of the House.

PROPERTY CONSERVED.

Acting as official custodian for the American people, Mr. Palmer took possession of German, Austrian, and Hungarian property belonging to the private citizens of those countries, amounting to approximately $600,000,000; and, in addition, the Government took over 128 German vessels then in American ports. None of these vessels was seized upon the high seas or captured during the war. They were interned in the ports of the United States and had at the time of their seizure an approximate valuation of $400,000,000.

The value of these interned ships has been greatly reduced and their selling price to-day can only be estimated. It has been asserted that a fair estimate would proximate $200,000,000.

The Alien Property Custodian, because of certain amendments releasing property held under the original act, and because of various rulings of his department, has released property held by him until he now holds approximately $350,000,000 in trust for the civilian citizens of Germany and Austria-Hungary.

This property is largely of an investment character made many years prior to our entrance into the war, at a time when peace and cordial relations existed between Germany, Austria, and the United States. Nearly every species of real and personal property is covered by it. Some of the investments are small; some of large proportions. Investments in partnerships; investments in private businesses; investments in corporations, in banks, railroads, and various forms of public utilities and public works.

Many of the investments were made for these foreign citizens by relatives and friends, citizens of our country; by children for their parents; by the brother for the sister. Usually there existed close ties of blood or friendship.

The invitation to make these investments was due to a well-established American policy understood by all law writers and recognized throughout the world.

The American doctrine that private property could not be used as security or confiscated for the payment of a public debt was so clearly established that it was not in dispute.

American representatives at The Hague time and again stood for this declaration of principle.

Cordial invitations to invest were made and accepted and there seemed to be little doubt of the American position in this matter until Secretary Hughes had approved the novel theory of holding private property as security for public debt.

It is proposed under this bill to return $44,362,002.08, leaving in the possession of the custodian $273,966,899.82, and in the custody of the Government the 128 German ships, of an estimated value of $200,000,000, so that, if this bill passes, we will still retain and hold property belonging to the civilian nationals of Germany and Austria-Hungary amounting to approximately $500,000,000.

PROPERTY HELD BY GERMANY.

Austria-Hungary never took over any American property during the war and never held the property of any American citizen.

Germany has released all real and personal property, excepting certain bank accounts which are now in dispute regarding the value of the mark. Of the money now held by her it may be safely estimated that over 90 per cent is in the nature of bank balances which were in German banks at the time of our entry into the war and were largely counterbalanced by the equalizing of deposits of German citizens in American banks. So that, eliminating the question of adjustment between these bank deposits on each side, there remains no American property held by Austrians and but a very small amount held by Germany.

The Alien Property Custodian had this to say on this subject:

"Question by Mr. LEA: I have gathered from statements in the newspapers that an agreement was made between the United States and Germany by which American citizens were to be paid the full value of the mark as of the day the United States entered the war. Do you know whether or not there is any such agreement?

"Mr. MILLER. I was informed by an attorney of the Mixed Claims Commission that they had either arrived at such a decision, or were about to arrive at a decision, which would settle the value of the mark at the average cable value 30 days preceding our entry into the war. That was 18 cents, as I understand it, Mr. LEA.

"Mr. LEA. Do you know about the total value of the claims of American citizens of property in the hands of the German alien property custodian?

"Mr. MILLER. I do not. This is merely a guess, Mr. LEA, but I understand that at no time did the German custodian have over one hundred millions of property over there, and the Austria-Hungarian Government, so I am informed, never had any alien property custodian, and did not seize property belonging to American citizens."

This would seem to indicate that, as soon as the question of the value of marks was settled, all property of every character formerly held by Germany will have been released and satisfied.

Showing our view of the Government of seizing and holding private property of enemy nationals, we must remember that all German and Austrian subjects found within the United States during the period of the war were never dispossessed of their property. They are still in possession of it, and only when interned and placed under specific suspicion was their property taken over, so that we see at once that a distinction is made between those nationals who were in our country and those nationals who were abroad.

CHARACTER OF AMERICAN CLAIMS.

American claims, with the possible exception of the bank balances still in dispute, are not claims of American citizens against the private citizens of Germany, Austria, and Hungary, but are claims of American citizens against the German Government, and are for damages growing out of the war because of acts committed by the German Government and not by the civilian citizens of Germany.

It has been stated before our committee and not disputed that 90 per cent of these claims are those of marine-insurance companies, growing out of the sinking of cargoes during the war, for which the insurance companies were paid in the form of premiums, and the insurance companies have paid the owners of the cargoes damages for their losses.

Insurance risks are based upon the hazard incurred.

Insurance may be described as a scientific gamble on probabilities. Insurance companies write insurance upon the duration of a man's life, upon an accident, upon contagious diseases. They gamble on the act of God, a storm, hail, tornado, earthquake, flood. They gamble upon fire. They gamble against the breaking down of machinery at sea, on the storm at sea, upon all forms of accidents at sea. They gamble on the collision of automobiles. They gamble on a man's honesty or dishonesty. They gamble on the lawbreaker, insuring against theft and burglary. They compute by chances and fix their rates according to risk.

Modern civilization could hardly exist without these great companies, and their element of chance is worked out upon scientific bases insuring their own capacity to pay.

In insuring cargoes during the war they voluntarily assumed the risk created by the war, and charged according to the risk assumed. Instead of losing money during the war by the sinking of cargoes, they are reported to have made great sums of money, because the loss of life and loss of cargoes by American citizens was comparatively small compared with the extent of tonnage and passenger transportation which safely crossed the ocean during the period of the war.

If the statement that 90 per cent, or even 75 or 50 per cent of the total claims by American citizens are of this character is true, they are certainly open to contention if not objection.

There are about 130 claims for loss of life during the entire period of the war, including the Lusitania outrage. These claims for loss of life vary from $10,000 to $100,000, but if each were allowed $100,000, the total, including the Pittsburgh Plate Glass Co. claim for damages done in Belgium, would not exceed $15,000,000.

This estimate is the maximum, and it is not believed by either the custodian or the counsel for these claimants that over 50 per cent of this amount will be awarded.

On this subject the Alien Property Custodian made the following statement:

"Mr. MILLER. Now, to depart briefly and give merely what I understand personally, it is said there will be probably a billion dollars worth of claims filed with the Mixed Claims Commission against Germany and Austria-Hungary. That seems like a large sum of money. All precedents show that all war claims in past wars were settled on a basis of about 8 per cent. If that is carried out in an adjudication of these claims the settlement would amount to eighty million. Not that I adhere to this principle, but you will find, if you look over the record of past wars, that loss of life has been settled at a 2 per cent percentage. So that in the case of our hundred and ninety million dollars of claims against Germany for losses of life on the high seas, if we go by any precedents in the past, they are to be considerably boiled down."

MIXED CLAIMS COMMISSION.

These claims are all made against the German Government for the acts of the German Government and for the purpose of adjusting these claims the United States entered into an agreement with Germany for the creation of what is called the Mixed Claims Commission.

The object of this commission is set forth as follows:

1. Claims of American citizens arising since July 31, 1914, in respect of damages to or seizure of their property, rights, and interests, including any company or association in which they were interested within German territory as it existed on August 1, 1914.

2. Other claims for loss or damage to which the United States or its nationals have been subjected with respect to insurance to persons or to property, rights, and interests, including any company or association in which American nationals are interested since July 31, 1914, as a consequence of the war.

3. Debts owing to American citizens by the German Government or German nationals.

Each government was to select and appoint one commissioner. These two commissioners were by agreement to select an umpire to decide upon any case concerning which the respective commissioners disagreed. The American representative selected was Judge Edwin B. Parker, the German representative Dr. Wilhelm Kisselbach. These two agreed upon another American, Justice W. R. Day, of the Supreme Court, to act as umpire, the German representative waiving his right to suggest as umpire a citizen of a neutral nation and agreeing upon the selection of an American.

The total amount of the American claims has not been ascertained, but the following statement from Alien Property Custodian Miller may be given as an approximation:

"Question by Mr. HUDDLESTON: Would the cash credit to the alien property administration be sufficient, in your opinion, to discharge claims that might be properly made against the German Government?

"Mr. MILLER. Oh, yes; as I have said informally before to-day, that amount of money, $174,000,000, would eventually guarantee all American claims, but this is my personal opinion."

Any award made by this commission will be against the German Government and not against the private citizens of Germany. The property held by the Alien Property Custodian belongs to the private citizens of Germany and Austria-Hungary, so that even after the Mixed Claims Commission has made its report this Congress is confronted with the full and undivided responsibility of deciding whether the private property of enemy citizens shall be taken over for the purpose of either confiscation or security in the payment of a Government debt.

PATENTS.

Among other German and Austrian property taken over by the custodian there were 34,000 patents, trade-marks, copyrights, and so forth.

There were sold to an American corporation, called the Chemical Foundation, certain patents belonging to these German and Austrian citizens. Certain other patents were held and used by the War and Navy Departments, and our committee believes that where such transfers had created an uncertainty as to ownership they should be held subject to the termination of the litigation now in progress and to certain disposition to be made by the War and Navy Departments of patents used by them.

Complications attendant upon the taking over and use of some of these patents require adjudication, and our committee seemed unanimous in the opinion that they should be reserved in the interests of both the enemy nationals and our own Government officials until the litigation is terminated.

But whatever disposition is made of the 34,000 patents, their value must be added to the other property of German citizens, which approximates $500,000,000.

OBLIGATION OF CONGRESS.

Congress having assumed jurisdiction over this alien property by the passage of the act creating the custodian, is under an obligation to provide by subsequent enactment for the form of its release.

The war has been over four years. This property is still in the possession of the custodian, and it is agreed by everyone that it is the duty of Congress to act.

In reading the testimony before our committee it will be found that representatives of the State Department, the Attorney General's office, the Secretary of the Navy, the Secretary of War, and the Alien Property Custodian all are in unanimous agreement that the property can be released only by act of Congress, and that the Executive will be bound by the manner of release; and, furthermore, that the full responsibility for the form of the release rests solely and exclusively upon Congress. It is a responsibility which the House can not avoid. Therefore its decision should only be made after considering not only the exigencies of the hour but of the effect its action will have upon international law.

This bill proposes the release of all claims not exceeding $10,000 and the release of all patents excepting those enumerated and covered by litigation.

Personally, aside from motives of humanity, the matter of the amount of property to be returned is, in my opinion, of secondary importance to the manner of its return.

I am opposed to holding any of this property either for the purpose of confiscation or for the purpose of securing the debts of the German Government, because "security" in effect means ultimate confiscation if the Government of Germany fails to provide means for the payment of the awards made by the Mixed Claims Commission and destroys effectively the time-honored American doctrine, now well established in international law, that private property can not be seized to pay a Government debt.

It is the principle involved that concerns me.

If part of the property is now returned and the bill contains a statement that the balance is being held subject to litigation and adjustment, but that it will not be confiscated but ultimately returned to the private citizens of Germany and Austria, to whom it belongs, American precedent will be preserved; but this precedent can not be maintained unless all the property is returned or part of it is temporarily retained, with the distinct statement that all of it will ultimately be returned. To hold this property for the purpose of security or ultimate confiscation will involve an element of almost national dishonor.

All of the witnesses appearing before our committee seemed to be opposed to the thought of confiscation, but the representative of the State Department, speaking for Mr. Hughes, advocates that part of the property shall be held as security for the payment of the debts of the German Government.

My position is one of opposition to the use of private property for the payment of a Government debt.

THE OPPOSITION OF SECRETARY HUGHES.

Congress is confronted with a plain, simple, understandable proposition. Will it scrap all precedents of international law? Will it repudiate the uniform decisions of our courts? Will it repudiate all the Presidents from Washington to and including Wilson? Will it repudiate all of our Secretaries of State from Jefferson to and including Knox and Lansing? Will it make a scrap of paper of the statement made upon the battlefields of France by General Pershing? Will Congress support the American view or support Secretary Hughes in his demand that private property shall be held as security for the payment of a public debt?

The position of the Secretary of State is in conflict with all international precedent and with the American doctrine on this subject from the first Secretary of State, Jefferson, to and including Knox and Lansing.

Secretary Knox acted for the United States Government in the recent peace treaty which bears his name jointly with that of Mr. Porter under date of June 11, 1921, and defined his opinion in the following language:

"MY DEAR MR. BORCHARD: I am in entire sympathy with your views relative to the seizure of German private property during the war. I have expressed on the floor of the Senate the opinion that in order to follow our traditions and be decent this property should be returned; that our only proper function was to conserve it during the period of hostilities, and in the peace resolution I introduced there is a clear indication that our retention of such property shall continue only until the adjustment of the terms upon which we are to live with Germany in peace are satisfactorily determined.

"Yours sincerely,

"P. C. KNOX."

This statement of Senator Knox has been the established American doctrine until it has been recently challenged by Secretary Hughes.

It is the opinion maintained by our courts, our law writers, and our statesmen from Washington to and including McKinley, Roosevelt, Taft, and Wilson, and is, for the first time in American history, challenged in the following language used by Secretary Hughes, in a letter directed to Mr. WINSLOW, chairman of our committee, of July 22, 1922:

"It is understood that this bill has been introduced upon the assumption that it would require the return of a relatively small amount of property and that the security for the settlement of American claims would not be substantially impaired. Unless this were the fact, I could not approve this bill even though amended as above suggested."

This was again repeated by Mr. Hughes in a letter to Mr. WINSLOW on December 8, 1922, and again in a letter of December 21, 1922.

Mr. Carr, representing Mr. Hughes before our committee, refused to either enlarge or explain these communications of the Secretary (p. 337, hearings):

"Mr. CARR. These letters, Mr. Chairman, set forth the views of the Secretary of State on this subject. Congress laid down the principle that this property should be held as a pledge for the satisfaction of American claims against Germany. That provision of law has been carried into an agreement with Germany. The claims against Germany are now being determined by a commission, so that we shall soon know the amount due from Germany. We do not yet know the amount, and we do not know how much security will be necessary. The Secretary merely wants these facts laid before the committee, so that the committee itself will be in a position to determine what it wants to do or what Congress wants to do. This is practically all that I have to say."

It is true that under the treaty of Versailles the right is given to the American Congress to either confiscate German civilian property situated in this country or to hold it as security; but while Congress has the undisputed right to do this, nowhere, either in the hearings before committees, on the floor of the House or the Senate, or by resolution, or by act of Congress, has the legislative branch of our Government ever intimated that it intended to hold this property as security or for purposes of confiscation.

Mr. Carr, representing Mr. Hughes, stood steadfastly upon the Secretary's letters and refused to vary or explain them.

As there may later be some dispute as to the position of the Secretary in withholding his approval of the return of this property unless a large proportion is held as security for the payment of the national debts of the German Government, I add the following interrogations and answers:

"Question by Mr. SANDERS: Do you regard anything we have done up to date as being inconsistent with the present determination on the part of Congress to return this property? Suppose we should not determine, as a legislative proposition, that the property should be returned, notwithstanding we may have reserved the right as between us and the German Government or the Austrian Government, to appropriate any part of it, do you see anything inconsistent, even though we have reserved that right, in determining not to exercise that right and now returning the property?

"Mr. CARR. That, sir, is an expression of opinion which I prefer not to make. I regard that matter entirely as one in the complete discretion of Congress to do what it, in the face of the facts, sees fit to do.

* * * * * * *

"Mr. SANDERS. Whose nationals' property would be thus confiscated, rather than the Government's property?

"Mr. CARR. Yes; quite so.

"Mr. SANDERS. The point I have in mind is that if we shall establish a legislative policy, either directly or indirectly, that this property is kept as security or as a pledge, that means ultimately, in the event the thing which is secured or pledged is not carried out, that the property is confiscated to the extent that it is necessary to carry out the terms of the surety or pledge. In other words, if we should by law expressly provide in this legislation by an amendment that we should keep $200,000,000 worth of this property and then return the rest, that the $200,000,000 should be kept for a period of 20 years, at the end of which time, if these claims had not been satisfied, that property should be applied to the payment of the claims; that would be a clear confiscation, would it not, to that extent?

"Mr. CARR. To that extent, yes; but with the consent, if you please, of the Government whose nationals' property is concerned.

* * * * * * *

"Question by Mr. HAWES. Well, I will repeat my question, Mr. Carr, and you can refuse to answer if you want to. I think it is perfectly clear. You are here representing an important branch of the Government, and what you say will have great weight in my determination of this subject. If we hold this property, to be paid either for an enemy's debts or damages, or hold it as security, do we not, for the first time in our history, change an established American policy of international law?

"Mr. CARR. Perhaps we may; but if we do, it has been done because Congress has directed that it should be done.

"Mr. HAWES. No; Congress has not decided that question, and under the peace resolution, while we have the power to retain it, there is nothing in the treaty that directs us to assume that policy; and I again ask you, if we do take the action intimated by you and hold the property of these nationals, do we not violate all American precedents on that subject?

"Mr. CARR. But Congress has directed that the property shall be held temporarily, and until Congress says to the contrary the property has to be held.

"Mr. HAWES. Will you decline to answer that question?

"Mr. CARR. I think I have in effect answered the question.

"Mr. HAWES. Well, I will state it again: Suppose Congress does act and does hold this property as security, or does hold it subject to litigation, then does not Congress for the first time in the history of the American Congress violate an established principle?

"Mr. CARR. I do not know whether for the first time exactly in the history of our country or not. Perhaps it is, but——

"Mr. HAWES (interposing). Are you not quite sure that it is?

"Mr. CARR. It is, so far as I now recall.

* * * * * * *

"Mr. RAYBURN. What is your interpretation, then, of the word 'guaranty'—holding this property as a guaranty?

"Mr. CARR. I did not use the word 'guaranty.' I merely used the word 'security.' The Secretary used the word 'security.'

"Mr. RAYBURN. What is your interpretation of the meaning of 'holding this property as security'?

"Mr. CARR. As a pledge.

"Mr. RAYBURN. What do you mean by the word 'pledge'?

"Mr. CARR. To be held until the other Governments have satisfied these claims, in accordance with the purpose of the Knox resolution.

"Mr. RAYBURN. Well, 'guaranty' and 'pledge' and 'security' in a debt are about the same thing, aren't they?

"Mr. CARR. They are related to each other very closely.

* * * * * * *

"Mr. LEA. So that in this letter that you read from the Secretary, as I understand it, he has withheld his recommendation of a bill that would substantially impair the American security as represented in this property?

"Mr. CARR. He has withheld his approval of it if the security was substantially impaired.

"Mr. LEA. Yes; if it was being substantially impaired; but he has not affirmatively asserted that he objected to Congress doing as it pleases?

"Mr. CARR. No."

It is quite apparent from the Secretary's letter and from the statement of his representative before our committee that the position of the State Department is that the private property of enemy nationals should be held as security for the payment of Government debts.

It is an entirely new policy for our State Department, and it is a new policy in international law, because the logical sequence of holding property for security means the confiscation of the property belonging to private individuals to satisfy a public debt if the public debt is not paid.

SECURITY.

There might be some other reason why this property should not be returned, but there being no opposition to its return upon the part of the Alien Property Custodian, the Attorney General's office, or the Departments of War or Navy, and as the sole objection, clearly defined, comes from the State Department to hold it as security, that must be the issue.

"Security" means a pledge, a taking over and holding until such time as some obligation is performed or payment made. It means in this case that if the German Government refuses to pay the awards of the Mixed Claims Commission, then the American Government may seize and confiscate the property of German citizens invested in this country prior to the war.

Two citations are sufficient to define the word "security."

Webster defines security to be "something to be given or deposited to make certain the fulfillment of an obligation; the observance of a provision for the payment of a debt." He also says "it may mean an evidence of a debt, a contract, which secures or clearly ascertains the amount of the money due on the performance of a certain work or the furnishing of a certain material; it is security in law." (In re Sloan's Estate (Pa.), 2d Del. Co. R. 309, 310.)

"Security is something which makes the enjoyment or enforcement of a right more secure or certain. A security on property is where a right over property exists by virtue of which the enforcement of a liability or promise is facilitated or made more certain." (78 Iowa, 575.)

It can not be disputed that if this property is held as security, it carries with it the direct implication that if certain conditions are not met it will be confiscated. If there is no confiscation or threat of confiscation in the holding of this property, then it is not security.

When property is taken as security for the payment of an obligation, it means that the property will be confiscated if the debt is not paid.

The difference between security and confiscation is merely one of duration of time. A security which is not liquidated is followed by confiscation. Therefore the distinction which the Secretary of State seems determined to draw between "security" and "confiscation" is unsound. The indefinite holding of property from its rightful owner is in itself confiscation.

If the friends of this bill propose to release only $44,000,000 and to hold over $300,000,000 as security, they can easily release themselves of any charge of a desire to ultimately confiscate by making a statement to that effect in a bill making a partial release of the property.

A declaration of this kind, preserving American policy, and in fact the enlightened policy of the world, would preserve our faith and honor no matter what portion is released.

SETTING A NEW PRECEDENT.

The advance of civilization has been marked by guideposts created by the mutual agreements of nations regarding the conduct of war.

These agreements are known as international law and, as Christianity has expanded, the rule of humanity has extended in ever-broadening fields as it applied to noncombatants in the actual field in which war was conducted.

The right of private property and the persons of civil and noncombatant nationals are more respected, and enlightened people sought if not to stop war at least to provide rules by which it would be limited in its operation to combatants and to such orderly assessments and penalties upon civilians as the actual and acute necessities of the combat made unavoidable.

Civilized nations not only provided these rules for the theater of war, but there was general and universal agreement regarding the treatment of enemy person and property during the war and the right and title to enemy property was conceded to be resumed at the conclusion of peace.

There have been contentions upon the rules of warfare upon the seas, but there has been general admission as to the rule upon the land.

But every great power, without dispute, had finally admitted by the fatal year of 1914 that the former rights and interests of nationals in respect of private property situated in the territory of each of the belligerent powers automatically revived, and such nationals were, as far as was possible, relegated to the position which they held before the outbreak of hostilities.

The United States, beginning with Franklin and Jefferson and supported by every Secretary of State to and including Knox and Lansing, have without exception maintained and advocated this human and enlightened doctrine of civilization.

Twice our great Supreme Justice Marshall has spoken upon the subject in the following language:

"It may not be unworthy of remark that it is very unusual, even in case of conquest, for the conqueror to do more than to displace the sovereign and assume dominion over the country.

"The modern usage of nations, which has become law, would be violated; that sense of justice and right which is acknowledged by the whole civilized world would be outraged if private property should be generally confiscated and private rights annulled. * * *"

And again:

"Between debts contracted under the faith of laws and property acquired in the course of trade on the faith of the same laws reason draws no distinction."

These opinions of our own Chief Justice have been sustained by the courts of this country and England.

Never before during the entire history of this country has there been held a contrary opinion until the year 1922, when for the first time either in the decisions of courts, the promulgation of treaties, or the opinion of our statesmen, Mr. Hughes wrote his letter of July 26, 1922, enunciating the entirely new and radical doctrine of holding the private property of enemy nationals as security for a public debt.

PRIVATE PROPERTY IN THE THEATER OF WAR.

Even in the theater of war itself, where actual combat takes place, there are certain rules of civilized warfare found in our treaties and conventions, and especially in The Hague agreements providing for the protection of private property.

If private property has this protection in the actual scene of the war, where necessity seems to be the first rule, how much more important, how much more compelling, should it be when it relates to private property of nationals thousands of miles away from the theater of war?

Immovable private property can not under any circumstances be appropriated by an invading belligerent. Should he confiscate and sell private property and buildings, the buyer would acquire no right whatever to the property.

All private railroad stock, ships, carts, horses, and so forth, seized for military purposes by an invading belligerent must be returned at the conclusion of peace and compensation must be paid for them.

This is expressly enacted by article 53 of The Hague regulations.

Articles of art and science may not be appropriated for use for military operations.

See article 56 of The Hague regulations prohibiting such seizure.

Articles 46 and 47 of The Hague regulations expressly stipulate that private property may not be confiscated, and pillage is formally prohibited.

Even cash, jewelry, and other articles of value found upon the dead, wounded, and prisoners must, according to article 14 of The Hague regulations and article 4 of the Geneva convention, be conserved for the benefit of captured prisoners or their heirs in case of death.

Private property is classified into real and personal. Real property can not be confiscated. It may be used temporarily and only such personal property as is susceptible of direct military use may be taken, and money can only be taken by computation of requisitions regularly imposed or by levy in the nature of a contribution.

Contributions must be on the written order and responsibility of the commander in chief, not merely by a local commander. They must not be imposed indiscriminately but must follow assessment rules and be general in character.

Money, unless by way of contribution, clothing and cloth, and not adapted for use as uniforms, and all other products, manufactures, and commodities are exempt from capture and entitled to protection by the laws of war.

It was on the battle field of France on July 1, 1918, during one of the most critical periods of the world conflict, that General Pershing issued the following order:

General Orders, No. 106.

GENERAL HEADQUARTERS,
AMERICAN EXPEDITIONARY FORCES,
France, July 1, 1918.

* * * * * * *

3. By the treaty of Berlin, 1799, still in force, the United States of America and the King of Prussia solemnly pledge themselves to the world and to each other "That the prisoners of war whom they may take from the other shall be placed in wholesome situations"; that they shall not be confined; that the officers shall have comfortable quarters and the men be disposed in cantonments or barracks as roomy and as good as provided for their own troops, and that they shall be allowed the same rations. "And it is declared that neither the pretense that war dissolves all treaties, nor any other whatever, shall be considered as annulling or suspending this and the preceding articles; but, on the contrary, that the state of war is precisely that for which they are provided, and during which they are to be sacredly observed as the most acknowledged articles in the law of nature and nations."

The obligations of this treaty will be scrupulously observed unless and until substantially violated by Germany, in which case further orders will be published from these headquarters.

* * * * * * *

VIII—REGULATIONS.

Regulations and instructions will be promulgated from these headquarters for the carrying of the provisions of this order into effect.

By command of General Pershing.

JAMES W. MCANDREW,
Chief of Staff.

Official:

ROBERT C. DAVIS,
Adjutant General.

The Prussian treaty to which General Pershing referred and which has always been accepted in this country reads as follows:

"ART. XXIII. If war should arise between the two contracting parties, the merchants of either country then residing in the other shall be allowed to remain nine months to collect their debts and settle their affairs, and may depart freely, carrying off all their effects without molestation or hindrance; and all women and children, scholars of every faculty, cultivators of the earth, artisans, manufacturers, and fishermen, unarmed and inhabiting unfortified towns, villages, or places, and in general all others whose occupations are for the common subsistence and benefit of mankind, shall be allowed to continue their respective employments, and shall not be molested in their persons, nor shall their houses or goods be burnt or otherwise destroyed, nor their fields wasted by the armed force of the enemy, into whose power by the events of war they may happen to fall; but if anything is necessary to be taken from them for the use of such armed force, the same shall be paid for at a reasonable price."

And section 24, which follows, is particularly significant:

"ART. XXIV. * * * And it is declared that neither the pretense that war dissolves all treaties, nor any other whatever, shall be considered as annulling or suspending this and the next preceding article, but on the contrary that the state of war is precisely that for which they are provided, and during which they are to be as sacredly observed as the most acknowledged articles in the law of nature and nations."

We have seen where both real property and private property belonging to noncombatant civilians situated in the path of war itself are immune from confiscation.

President Wilson time and time again proclaimed that our war was one against the German Government and its military autocracy and not against the German people.

We sent tons of literature on this subject across the battle lines to the civilian population of Germany. We dropped it in their midst from airplanes and balloons.

To win the war two things were necessary: The first was to break the military morale of the German Army, and, failing in this, to break the civil morale of the noncombatant inhabitants of Germany. And it is claimed by many that the civil morale broke first.

The whole correspondence carried on at that time between the President of the United States and the German people indicated a desire for humane and proper treatment. This related to treatment in Germany itself.

Certainly it would seem that property which we had taken over in the capacity of a custodian—in a fiduciary capacity—with express promises made for its return, should be treated with the same consideration and leniency as that in the actual field of war.

OUR HISTORICAL POSITION.

One of the latest American law writers on this subject, Mr. Charles C. Hyde, describes the situation exactly as follows:

"Upon the outbreak of hostilities a belligerent may find large amounts of enemy property within its territory, and that remote from a field of military operations. It seems to be acknowledged that the bare existence of war does not serve in such case to affect any change of ownership. Confiscation, whether rightful or wrongful, requires affirmative legislative action. According to Chief Justice Marshall, the terms of the Constitution of the United States forbid the inference that a declaration of war operates by its own force to transfer title to property within the national domain."

Article 4 of the Geneva Convention makes it apparent that private enemy property found on the battle field, other than military papers, horses, arms, and the like, is no longer booty.

Congress must decide whether the property of private citizens of Germany situated in the United States, over 3,000 miles from the field of conflict, shall now be considered booty; for security in this case means booty.

In Wilson on International Law, we find the following statement:

"The opinion of the Supreme Court of the United States is 'that the laws of the United States ought not, if it be avoidable, so to be construed as to infract the common principles and usages of nations and the general doctrine of international law.'"

Again: "An act of Congress ought never to be construed to violate the law of nations, if any other possible construction remains, and consequently can never be construed to violate the neutral rights or to affect neutral commerce further than is warranted by the law of nations as understood in this country."

The treaty made with Prussia was written by Benjamin Franklin and presented to the Prussian Government by Benjamin Franklin, John Adams, and Thomas Jefferson.

Hamilton joins with Jefferson in an expression of the same opinion, in one of his letters (18) to Camillus, in the following language:

"No powers of language at my command can express the abhorrence I feel at the idea of violating the property of individuals, which, in an authorized intercourse in time of peace, has been confided to the faith of our Government and laws, on account of controversies between nation and nation. In my view, every moral and every political sense unite to consign it to execration. * * * It would have been an inestimable gem in our National Constitution had it contained a positive prohibition against such a practice, except perhaps by way of reprisal for the identical injury on the part of another nation."

Camillus's letter 19:

"The right of holding or having property in a country always implies the duty on the part of its government to protect that property and to secure to the owner the full enjoyment of it. Whenever, therefore, a government grants permission to foreigners to acquire property within its territories or to bring and deposit it there it tacitly promises protection and security. There is no parity between the case of the persons and goods of enemies found in our country and that of the persons and goods of enemies found elsewhere. In the former there is a reliance upon our hospitality and justice; there is an express or implied safe conduct; the individuals and their property are in the custody of our faith; they have no power to resist our will; they can lawfully make no defense against our violence; they are deemed to owe a temporary allegiance, and for endeavoring resistance would be punished as criminals, a character inconsistent with that of an enemy. To make them a prey, is, therefore, to infringe every rule of generosity and equity; it is to add cowardice to treachery.

* * * * * * *

"Will justice sanction, upon the breaking out of a war, the confiscation of a property which, during peace, serves to augment the resources and nourish the prosperity of a State?

"The property of a foreigner placed in another country, by permission of its laws, may justly be regarded as a deposit of which the society is the trustee. How can it be reconciled with the idea of a trust to take the property from its owner when he has personally given no cause for its deprivation?"

It is unnecessary to quote other writers of international law on the subject of confiscation, because there is unanimous agreement on the subject. Only one possible point of dispute could be raised, and that would be the distinction between seizing such property and using it for security and confiscating it outright.

President Taft stated in his annual message of 1909 that in considering whether American enterprise should be encouraged in a particular country "the Government should give full weight to the fact whether or not the government of the country in question is in its administration and in its diplomacy faithful to the principles of moderation, comity, equity, and justice, upon which alone depend international credit, in diplomacy as well as in finance."

In the hearings before our committee there will not be found a single witness, excepting the representative of the State Department, who is demanding the holding of this property as a matter of security. The position of the Alien Property Custodian is described in these questions and answers:

"Mr. HAWES. And I understand, Mr. Miller, that you do not believe the United States Government should take the position that property seized by the Alien Property Custodian from private individuals should be used by the American Government in the enforcement of its claims against Germany?

"Mr. MILLER. I have stated here to-day a number of times that personally I would be opposed to the confiscation of private property to pay claims against the enemy government."

Mr. Herman J. Galloway, representing the Attorney General's office, a witness of unusual ability and clearness, referring to his request that patents now under litigation in connection with the Chemical Foundation should be temporarily withheld and not released by Congress, answered the following questions:

"Mr. HAWES. Upon the successful prosecution of the suit, to whom will the property be returned?

"Mr. GALLOWAY. Our theory is that the property should be put back where Congress intended it should be, namely, in the custody of the Alien Property Custodian, to let Congress dispose of it as they see fit. That was the intention of the original law, and that is the way we look at it.

"Mr. HAWES. So that the object of the suit, then, is to take from this Chemical Foundation these patents and restore them to the possession of the Alien Property Custodian?

"Mr. GALLOWAY. That is right.

"Mr. HAWES. For him to decide, subject to enactment by Congress.

"Mr. GALLOWAY. Well, I don't think he has any decision as to what should be done with them. I think Congress is the sole judge of that. The law was intended, according to my theory of the original law, and that must determine what should be done.

"Mr. HAWES. And it is your opinion that all of these patents ultimately are to be restored to the original German nationals who own them, is it not?

"Mr. GALLOWAY. I should not like to express my official opinion on that, but my personal opinion is that it is contrary to the enlightened policy of international law to confiscate private property, of course."

AUSTRIA-HUNGARY.

The situation of Austria-Hungary to-day is pitiful. Formerly a great nation of 52,000,000 people, its territory has been divided into six different nations. Its capital city—Vienna—has a population of 2,000,000 people. The balance of its territory is largely mountainous and without sufficient tillable land to feed its population and with substantially no coal deposits.

After the division of its original territory into six different parts, the property held by the Alien Property Custodian of those nations which were carved out of the original territory was all returned to these nationals, so that to hold any property belonging to what is now but a fraction of the former Austria-Hungarian Empire is to make one-sixth of the country responsible for five-sixths of what was the former country.

This may be best illustrated by the following answers made by Mr. Whitman:

"Mr. HAWES. Mr. Whitman, in the examination of the custodian the other day, he emphatically recommended the return of all property held by him, coming under his jurisdiction, from Austria-Hungary. Now, if the committee should make such provision in this bill for the absolute return of all such property, will that include the matter you have specially in hand?

"Mr. WHITMAN. I take it it would; yes sir.

"Mr. HAWES. So I have been able to ascertain no one, unless the State Department interposes some objection, who desires to hold any of the property of Austria-Hungary, and if such a general amendment is placed in the bill by the committee that would cover your case as well as the special amendment?

"Mr. WHITMAN. It would; yes, sir. And now that I am on my feet, may I say a word in behalf of that particular suggestion? I need not say to this committee anything about the deplorable condition in which little Austria is left. I think perhaps they are familiar with it, and if not, I have taken the liberty of making a very short printed brief which I think will concisely call the attention of the committee to the situation; but there are now, as the Alien Property Custodian tells us, between eight and nine million dollars only of Austrian funds and some $2,000,000 of Hungarian funds held by him. That is only a fraction of what he originally held, because under an amendment to the trading with the enemy act moneys and properties which belonged to former citizens of the old Empire who are now citizens of some of these other fragments, such as Czechoslovakia, Yugoslavia, Rumania, etc., their money has been returned to them, so that the situation comes down to the question of whether the United States proposes to make this little Austria, distressed as it is, the goat. In other words, to load upon that little country the obligations and burdens which grew out of the war.

"Mr. GRAHAM. By what process was the money returned to these other fragments of countries which are friendly to us?

"Mr. WHITMAN. Under the amendment to the trading with the enemy act persons who had become citizens of these new States were entitled to apply to the Alien Property Custodian, and on approval of their claims by presidential authority to have the property returned to them."

* * * * * * *

"Mr. HOCH. At the close of the war there were carved out of the old Austria-Hungarian Empire how many States—five or six?

"Mr. WHITMAN. It made seven in all.

"Mr. HOCH. Which you call the succession States?

"Mr. WHITMAN. That is what they are called in Europe; yes, sir.

"Mr. HOCH. The population of the whole Austria-Hungarian Empire was something like 50,000,000, as I remember.

"Mr. WHITMAN. Yes, sir.

"Mr. HOCH. And the present Austria has a population of something like six or seven million?

"Mr. WHITMAN. A trifle over 6,000,000.

"Mr. HOCH. Now, those nations that were carved out of the old Austria-Hungarian Empire were during the war as much enemies of this country as the present Austria?

"Mr. WHITMAN. Yes.

"Mr. HOCH. And the nationals of those sections which are now parts of these succession States were in every sense enemies of the United States as much as the present nationals of Austria?

"Mr. WHITMAN. Absolutely.

"Mr. HOCH. Do you know any reason in equity why there was a discrimination in favor of the nationals of the section with 44,000,000 as against the 6,000,000 people? Was it simply a matter of name, because the 6,000,000 retained the name of Austria?

"Mr. WHITMAN. It was largely a feeling of European prejudice. They retained the name and somebody had to be made responsible for reparations, and the result is that the treaties provided very heavy reparations on Austria, which nobody ever expects will ever be paid, and when the Reparation Commission arrived in Vienna the first thing they did was to demand the surrender of 6,000 cows, and on practically the same day they facilitated the importation of 25,000 cases of condensed milk, and even the Austrians saw the joke of that situation.

"Mr. HOCH. In other words, here were about 50,000,000 people who were enemies of this country; and merely because 44,000,000 of them had been set apart into new States, they have released all the claims of these people?

"Mr. WHITMAN. We have.

"Mr. HOCH. But with reference to the 6,000,000 who remain in what is technically Austria, we have not released them?

"Mr. WHITMAN. That is exactly the situation."

The personal position of Mr. Miller, Alien Property Custodian, is illustrated by the following questions and answers:

"Mr. HAWES. And Austria-Hungary is the only nation in Europe that did not seize American property during the war?

"Mr. MILLER. They are. Now, I do not want to get in conflict with the Department of State, which may come back and say, 'Here is something they did do.' I have it informally from the representatives of these governments here, and they are the ones that should know.

"Mr. HAWES. So the status of the Austria-Hungary portion of this bill is this: In the first place, they did not seize the property of Americans during the war, and, in the second place, what was Austria-Hungary is now six different republics or monarchies; and we are trying to hold the Austrian Government responsible, in an indirect way, for the conduct of five other governments over which they have no control.

"Mr. MILLER. Yes, sir. That is the situation, and I have recommended to the chairman, in response to his letters to me, as chairman, action on the Austrian-Hungarian property as I have outlined.

"Mr. HAWES. And you would recommend an amendment in this bill which would release all property of the former Empire of Austria-Hungary that is held?

"Mr. MILLER. I do; and a number of those cases are pathetic cases. We hold hundreds of death benefits which we have collected on account of their nationals who were killed out in the steel mills and in the mines of the West, and we would like to give that back to them.

"Mr. HAWES. So we are violating the traditions of international law, the opinion of Marshall, and the dictates of humanity, and all spirit of equity in holding these claims?

"Mr. MILLER. May I put in there so anyone reading this testimony will understand my position? I am willing to recommend this, but, on the other hand, if the State Department comes to the hearings and through their representatives say that there are claims against Austria, I do not want to be criticized for suggesting this, but I have done it personally."

* * * * * * *

"Mr. HAWES. As to the character of those claims against the Austrian Government, are not nearly all of these made by insurance companies?

"Mr. MILLER. I think they are, sir; but I am not certain."

Former Austria-Hungary comprised an area of 261,107 square miles and had a population of about 52,000,000 people.

The present Republic of Austria has an area of only 32,400 square miles and a population of about 6,500,000 people.

These questions and answers prove conclusively the following things:

1. That Austria-Hungary did not seize any American property during the war.

2. That Austria-Hungary has been reduced from a population of 52,000,000 to 6,500,000, and that all property formerly held by the Alien Property Custodian of those people, composing the 45,500,000 taken from the whole empire of Austria-Hungary, has been returned.

3. That if this property is held, it is holding 6,500,000 people responsible for the acts committed by 52,000,000 people.

4. That the original sum seized from the Empire of Austria-Hungary was approximately $30,000,000; that $20,000,000 of this has been returned to the citizens of the new States carved out of the old empire; and that $10,000,000 is still retained by the custodian.

5. That there are practically no American claims against Austria-Hungary excepting those of insurance companies, and these are in dispute.

If American precedent, if the opinion of our statesmen, if our national policy and all appeal against the brutal, savage, and medieval doctrine of confiscation apply to Germany, how much stronger are the equities and justice in the claim for the restoration of the Austria-Hungarian property?

FAITH WITH THE PEOPLE.

President Wilson always contended that our war was not against the people of Germany but against the German Government and the military autocracy controlling that Government.

On April 2, 1917, Mr. Wilson said: "We have no quarrel with the German people. We have no feeling toward them but one of sympathy and friendship. We are but one of the champions of the rights of mankind. We shall be satisfied when those rights have been made as secure as the faith and the freedom of the nation can make them."

Now, Mr. Hughes, four years after the war has been fought and won, advances the novel doctrine of holding the private property of German citizens as security for the debts of the German Government.

Again Mr. Wilson said, on the same date:

"We are, let me say again, the sincere friends of the German people and shall desire nothing so much as the early reestablishment of intimate relations of mutual advantage between us, however hard it may be for them for the time being to believe that this is spoken from our hearts.

* * * * * * *

"The American people have suffered intolerable wrongs at the hands of the Imperial German Government, but they desire no reprisal upon the German people, who have themselves suffered all things in this war which they did not choose."

Are we now to engage in bad faith? If the President of the United States could say these things upon entering a war and during the war, now that we are at peace with Germany and this last act is to settle our remaining disputes we should proceed quickly.

THE LARGER VIEW.

Can we afford at this time to announce a new American doctrine which would be notice to the world that we had abandoned the old?

Turning for a moment from the contemplation of our relations with European nations we must think of Mexico, the Central American and South American Republics.

It has been frequently stated in the press that the reason we have withheld recognition from Mexico was because of the treatment accorded the private property and personal investments of Americans situated in Mexico, and we have demanded that Mexico should change her laws in relation to American investments before she would be given recognition in this country.

We are increasing our business, we are tightening the bonds of friendship, and making a special endeavor to make more close and cordial our relations with the Latin American nations.

If Congress announces the new doctrine of holding private property for security for public debt, what is to prevent any other nation from adopting the same policy, and even in time of peace will some one not arise and urge that we take over the private property of French citizens in this country for the purpose of liquidating French obligations, that we shall take over the private property of Italians in this country to liquidate the Italian obligations, take over the private property of the English in this country to liquidate the English obligations?

Once we start a new precedent we do not know where it will stop.

We must remember that this property was not seized on the battle field but was the private investment of the peaceful citizens in a country which had invited them to invest.

We must divorce entirely the idea of Government obligations from private obligations.

When the Mixed Claims Commission has made its award the claims arising out of the loss of life on the Lusitania, the Sussex, and Essex must be paid.

There can be little doubt when that claim has been adjudicated and determined that our State Department, if it lives up to its best traditions, will demand the payment of the award by the German Government. And there can be little doubt of the result of such demand. Self-interest alone will cause payment.

The United States stood aside while England, France, Italy, and all of our allies have demanded reparations and have acquired vast new territories from the former German Empire, and it seems it would be a State Department of little efficiency and small courage which could not secure from Germany a quick and satisfactory settlement of an award made by a commission in which she had equal representation with the United States.

It is inconceivable that there should be opposition, or even unnecessary delay, in the payment of the awards made by the Mixed Claims Commission.

Year after year great conventions have been held composed of earnest American men and women, delegates have been sent to The Hague, that humane American doctrines might be impressed into international law.

The principles contained in the Prussian treaty presented by Franklin, Adams, and Jefferson, indorsed by Hamilton, sustained by Chief Justice Marshall, recognized and approved by every international law writer in America, emphasized by every President of the United States who has discussed the subject, down to and including Taft and Wilson, should not be set aside four years after the conclusion of the war.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. BANKHEAD. As I understand it, on Saturday at the hour of adjournment the House had ordered the previous question on the then pending bill from the Committee on Banking and Currency. As I understand the matter of the order of business, immediately after the reading of the Journal to-day it was in order to call up that bill for passage, with the possible exception of taking up first some conference reports.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks it would be in order to do that if the bill was called up, but the Unanimous Consent Calendar is also in order. The Chair understands that it is the intention of those in charge of the bill referred to to bring it up to-morrow instead of to-day.

Mr. BANKHEAD. But as a matter of order it must come up to-day. As I understand it, under the rule it is mandatory.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will be glad to have that pointed out to him.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I call the attention of the Chair to a decision found in section 864 of the Manual, page 389, which holds that when the House adjourns before voting on a proposition on which the previous question has been ordered, either directly or by the terms of a special order, the question comes up the next day immediately after the reading of the Journal, regardless of the requirement of the rule for the order of business.

The SPEAKER. That decision was rendered before the rule was adopted, which the Chair will now read:

> On days when it shall be in order to move to suspend the rules the Speaker shall, immediately after the approval of the Journal, direct the Clerk to call the bills which have been for three days upon the Calendar for Unanimous Consent.

The decision to which the gentleman refers was rendered before this rule was adopted, which directed the Chair to immediately call the Calendar for Unanimous Consent.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I just wanted to get a clear understanding of the question.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks that either of these things is in order, that both are privileged, that either could be taken up. On the suggestion of gentlemen in charge of the bill to which reference has been made, it has gone over until to-morrow. The Clerk will call the next bill on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent.

RELIEF OF CERTAIN HOMESTEAD ENTRYMEN.

The next business in order on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (H. R. 2347) for the relief of certain homestead entrymen.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of this bill?

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, two weeks ago this bill was passed over that it might be given further consideration to-day. I wish to have some information from the chairman of the committee reporting the bill as to what the effect will be.

Mr. SINNOTT. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman who reported the bill and who was to obtain the information is not present, and if the gentleman is not satisfied I will ask to have it temporarily passed.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman asks unanimous consent that the bill be temporarily passed. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

INVESTIGATION COLUMBIA BASIN AND OTHER IRRIGATION PROJECTS.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (S. 3808) authorizing the Secretary of the Interior to investigate and report to Congress upon the Columbia Basin irrigation project.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of this bill?

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, this bill is a rather important bill to be considered under the Unanimous Consent Calendar call. I reserve the right to object.

Mr. SUMMERS of Washington. Mr. Speaker, we have been endeavoring to get this bill up for a considerable length of time and enact it into legislation, but we were not able to do so earlier. It has had very full hearings and consideration by the committee and part of the bill has passed the Senate. The committee will move to strike out one item of $100,000 and will move to reduce another item $125,000, cutting out half of it. The main item of the bill is a matter that the State of Washington has been working on in the interest of the development of that great State for the past five years. The State legislature appropriated $100,000 and later $50,000 and later expended a considerable sum, so altogether the State and her citizens have expended from $300,000 to $500,000. This is an international and interstate navigable river that we are dealing with, and we have to have a Federal investigation before we can accomplish anything further. This is to authorize an appropriation, and I trust the gentleman will withdraw his objection and let us consider the bill on its merits.

Mr. McARTHUR. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SUMMERS of Washington. I will.

Mr. McARTHUR. How much has the State of Washington expended?

Mr. SUMMERS of Washington. The State itself about $200,000, and the citizens at least $200,000.

Mr. McARTHUR. The State made the appropriations through the legislature?

Mr. SUMMERS of Washington. Yes. Of $100,000 four years ago, and $50,000 two years ago, and has expended other moneys out of the reclamation fund in addition to these appropriations.

Mr. McARTHUR. If the gentleman will yield further. This proposition involves also a survey of the Umatilla Rapids?

Mr. SUMMERS of Washington. Yes; it does.

Mr. McARTHUR. It might be interesting to the gentleman to know that the State Legislature of Oregon has appropriated $10,000 to cooperate with the Government to carry forward this survey.

Mr. SINNOTT. If the gentleman will yield just a moment, this bill is merely an authorization. It merely gives them an opportunity to go before the Committee on Appropriations and make good their claims. Now, this is about the only and about the last opportunity in this Congress to do something for irrigation. Both parties in their platforms have advocated legislation favorable for irrigation, and the President himself, and I hope the gentleman will withdraw his objection.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, if the gentleman will allow me just a moment. There are two great irrigation basins in the West, the Columbia and the Colorado. We have already made provision for dealing with the State of Colorado. It is being carried on now. We made that provision the same way that the provision for the study of the Columbia is now being proposed. It is one of those things which must be done sooner or later, and I think it is a good time, a very good time to begin the study and investigation of that great watershed, that great empire which is drained by the Columbia River.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, as I intimated when this bill was last under consideration, the committee, instead of confining the subject matter to the project that was submitted to the House by the Senate, added two or three diverse provisions. I do not think it is good practice, especially in the closing days of a Congress when a bill comes from the Senate involving one project, to couple two or three other projects of a diverse character.

Mr. McARTHUR. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STAFFORD. Now, I wish to know from gentlemen who will be conferees on this bill what assurance we will have that if a recession is made to this provision providing for a general survey, an authorization for a survey, the $125,000 will be agreed to? I am not in favor in the closing days of Congress, when the bill has been lying dormant in the committee for months and months, to have general legislation coupled on for an authorization of $250,000. What assurance can we have, if the House accepts the committee amendment of $125,000, that the conferees on the part of the House will insist on that amount? I am opposed to that provision. Now, the committee has seen fit to add on to this bill, providing for individual projects, a general authorization for surveys for all time.

Mr. SINNOTT. As one of the conferees I am sure I would stand with the House provision.

Mr. SUMMERS of Washington. The chairman of the committee assures us that he would do the same.

Mr. RAKER. This committee gave the matter full consideration, and one of the reasons why all the rest of the committee unanimously joined in agreeing that the third provision should remain in the bill for the investigation of the feasibility of reclamation projects was that $250,000 was added as an authorization. A number of members of the committee were able to show that there were a number of projects in their States where the States and counties and individuals were progressing and that by cooperation with the Federal Government we would be able to get valuable results.

Mr. STAFFORD. Well, the gentleman does not appreciate the peculiar legislative condition which characterizes the situation of this bill. You add something that is extraneous—something that has never been considered by the Senate.

Mr. RAKER. The gentleman would have no objection to the $125,000?

Mr. STAFFORD. No; provided I can get the assurance of the conferees that they will stand on that amount. Under those circumstances, Mr. Speaker, I will withdraw the reservation of an objection.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the right to object in order to ask a question. I understand that this provision for new surveys is going to be left in the bill, but reduced in amount.

Mr. SUMMERS of Washington. Yes; but an amendment will be offered to cut it.

Mr. BLANTON. How much?

Mr. SUMMERS of Washington. To cut it $125,000—half of it.

Mr. BLANTON. In that connection I want to call attention to what is known as the Red Bluff proposition in New Mexico, on the Pecos River. There is a proposition where, with the expenditure of the least amount of money that has ever been expended on any other project, there could be impounded sufficient water to properly irrigate thousands and thousands of acres all the way down the Pecos River, not only in New Mexico but in western Texas, where all they need to make a paradise of the location is water. Now, if the amount is cut down, it should be understood that it is not to be at the expense of such a worthy project as that. It is not in my district, but it affects quite a large portion of western Texas, a portion of my State, in the district of my colleague [Mr. HUDSPETH]. If it is cut down it will afford diminished chances for the completion of that survey.

Mr. SINNOTT. You will have another chance. There is $100,000 in the Interior Department appropriation bill. This doubles the amount, and doubles the assurance.

Mr. BLANTON. The gentlemen from the Northwest who have had the private conference over there will not exclude those investigations in the Southwest, but will permit some of the money to be used there?

Mr. SUMMERS of Washington. It will provide for investigations where they are needed.

The SPEAKER. The reservation of objection is withdrawn. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior is authorized and directed to investigate and report as early as possible, and not later than the 1st day of January, 1924, on the essential features of the proposed Columbia Basin irrigation project referred to in the act of the Legislature of the State of Washington entitled "An act providing for the survey of the Columbia Basin irrigation project, creating a commission therefor, defining its powers and duties, and making an appropriation, and declaring that this act shall take effect immediately," approved March 1, 1919, in the following particulars:

Its water supply and the permanency and sufficiency thereof; the approximate watershed from which said water supply is to be derived and what, if any, natural reservoirs, such as lakes, are available for the storing of surplus water for the irrigation of the land, the reclamation of which is contemplated by the said act, and any other lands capable of being irrigated by the waters to be conserved through such project in the said State of Washington or any other State; the character of the climate as it affects the agricultural development of the said land; the transportation facilities available therefor; the prospects and means of settlement; the engineering features of the proposed project, stating point of diversion of the water to be used in the said project and from what streams; the principal dam or dams which may be needed therefor and the general location, nature, length, and character of such aqueducts or canals as may be necessary for conveying the water to the lands to be irrigated thereby; the cost and feasibility from an engineering and physical standpoint of such work as may be required to accomplish the purposes of the said project, both in the aggregate and the ultimate cost per acre to the land to be benefited thereby; and the views of the Secretary of the Interior as to the general benefits to be derived from the completion of the said project in the way of markets for manufactured products, of increased agricultural productions, of opportunities for home building, and the effect of the same, both upon the communities immediately affected and upon the Nation at large, and such other matters as in the judgment of the said Secretary may be of importance and pertinent to the proposed development.

SEC. 2. That for the purpose of carrying out the provisions of this act there is hereby authorized an appropriation, from any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, of the sum of $100,000, to be expended under the direction of the Secretary of the Interior in making such investigation, studies, and report.

With a committee amendment, as follows:

On page 1, strike out all of lines 3 to 10, inclusive. On page 2, strike out all of lines 1 to 25, inclusive. On page 3, strike out all of lines 1 to 13, inclusive, and insert in lieu thereof the following:

"That the following sums are hereby authorized to be appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to be immediately available for expenditure by the Secretary of the Interior, namely:

"For investigations of the feasibility of irrigation by gravity or pumping, water sources, water storage, and related problems on the Columbia River and its tributaries, including the Columbia Basin project, $100,000; the Umatilla Rapids project, $50,000; in all, $150,000.

"For continued investigation of the feasibility of irrigation, water storage, water sources, and related problems on the Colorado River, $100,000.

"For cooperative and miscellaneous investigations of the feasibility of reclamation projects, $250,000 annually."

Amend the title so as to read: "An act authorizing the Secretary of the Interior to investigate the feasibility of reclamation projects on the Columbia River, the Colorado River, and various other irrigation projects."

Mr. SUMMERS of Washington. Mr. Speaker, I move to amend the amendment by striking out lines 23, 24, and 25, on page 3.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Washington offers an amendment to the amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. SUMMERS of Washington: Page 3, from lines 23 to 25, inclusive, strike out the paragraph.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Speaker, I am not going to oppose this amendment, because provision has already been made for this authorization on the general appropriation bill. This matter had full and extended hearings before the Committee on Irrigation of Arid Lands, and before that committee appeared some of the most distinguished engineers in the world. We heard General Goethals before the committee, and also some distinguished men from the State of Washington relating particularly to the Washington Columbia River Basin. Some evidence at that particular time was also had in regard to the Colorado River, but that was provided for in the bill.

The third provision, on lines 1 and 2 of page 4, is an authorization for secondary projects in the future. I understood—and I am not going to break an understanding—that for the purpose of bringing the bill up, so that there would be no objection, so that we might get some legislation, my friends on the committee have agreed to an amendment cutting down the $250,000 authorization to $125,000. Of course, it is going to disappoint a number of members of the committee who presented this matter and who heard the evidence; the fact that there are a few large projects getting all the attention of Congress and getting all the money, whereas there are a number of A No. 1 projects in the West of minor importance, but important so far as irrigation development of the country is concerned, whereby men may go and make splendid homes and the desert land may be utilized. The small projects ought to be considered, and in the opinion of the committee here was an opportunity for us to bring forward and give these people who have expended their money an opportunity to cooperate with the Federal Government and with the States, which, in many instances, have expended their own money on the development of these projects.

What we want now is the benefit of this great organization that has been built up in the Reclamation Service, for the purpose of assisting and developing this great work. Many of us feel that the small projects, the projects that are bound to make good, that are sure to be brought into utilization within a short time, should be developed as soon as possible, so that the land which is now barren may be utilized and the water that is now going to waste may be placed upon the land, to cause it to give a hundred-fold return. We are compelled to take $125,000 instead of $250,000. I am sorry that the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. STAFFORD] could not in the largeness of his heart make it $250,000.

Mr. STAFFORD. In the largeness of my heart I allowed this bill to be considered.

Mr. RAKER. And for that I thank the gentleman from the bottom of my heart. If the gentleman will go out and see the benefits that will be bestowed and the good that will be accomplished from this he will not even feel like objecting to this kind and character of legislation.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, I do not quite understand the gentleman's position. He is not objecting to the striking out of the Colorado River amendment?

Mr. RAKER. Oh, no. I am just simply calling the attention of the House to the fact that we would have liked to have $250,000; but under the circumstances we can not get it. We are taking the best we can get. We are going to make the best of it, and we are coming back to ask further consideration, because we know we will develop something worth while, of the value of which we can convince you.

Mr. BLANTON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RAKER. I yield to the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. BLANTON. Is not the gentleman afraid that he might cause us to chop off another chunk of it?

Mr. RAKER. Oh, no.

Mr. BLANTON. The next time you come back they might refuse it all.

Mr. RAKER. I am in favor of economy, but I am against make-believe economy and idle talk that brings nothing. We want results. When you develop your country you have got to spend a little money for that purpose.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman has expired. The question is on the amendment to the amendment.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SUMMERS of Washington. Mr. Speaker, I offer another amendment, in line 2, page 4, strike out "$250,000" and insert "$125,000."

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Washington offers an amendment which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. SUMMERS of Washington to the committee amendment: Page 4, line 2, strike out "$250,000" and insert "$125,000."

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Speaker, I move to amend the committee amendment, on page 3, line 15, by striking out the words "any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated," and inserting in lieu thereof the words "the reclamation fund."

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Michigan offers an amendment which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment by Mr. CRAMTON: Page 3, line 15, strike out the words "any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated," and insert in lieu therefor the words "the reclamation fund."

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Speaker, there is a fund devoted to the development of reclamation projects, which originated with appropriations of many millions of dollars from the Federal Treasury. That money is devoted to the development of reclamation projects. When a project is fully developed and the water is put on the land and the land is turned over to settlers, it is sold to them, and the water rights are sold to them, to be paid for in 20 annual payments without interest. So that in effect they pay 5 per cent of the cost of the project each year for 20 years, which is in effect a reasonable rate of interest for 20 years, and then the principal is wiped out without any charge. I call attention to this to emphasize the fact that Congress has been reasonably liberal in furnishing money for these projects. In the current appropriation act for the Interior Department we are appropriating for just such propositions as that which the gentleman now proposes.

These appropriations are to be taken from the reclamation fund for such purposes. Then, if the project is any good, eventually that money comes back into the reclamation fund through the development of irrigation on that project, and the reclamation fund does not lose from it. And, of course, if a project is not a good one, we ought not to make any appropriations for it.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CRAMTON. In one moment I will. In the current appropriation for reclamation there is an item "for the continued investigation of the feasibility of irrigation, water storage, and related problems on the Colorado River, and for the investigation of the water sources of said river, $100,000." This is the second year of that, or $100,000 each year for investigation of that great Colorado River project, to be paid out of the reclamation fund, and there has been no protest against that from any Member of the House interested in that project. There is a further item "for cooperative and miscellaneous investigations, $100,000," out of the reclamation fund. That has been carried, I think, for several years, and perhaps always, paid for out the reclamation fund. It is proposed here to change that policy.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. MCARTHUR). The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. CRAMTON. I ask unanimous consent to proceed for five minutes.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Michigan asks unanimous consent to proceed for five minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. CRAMTON. It is proposed here to saddle the expense of developing these projects upon the Federal Treasury without making it reimbursable. I hope therefore that the amendment I have offered will be adopted as a reasonable protection to the Treasury of the United States.

Mr. SINNOTT. Mr. Speaker, I hope the amendment will not be adopted, because it would practically nullify the purpose of the bill. It is true that appropriations are made out of the reclamation fund, but the reclamation fund is a small and limited fund; and, as I said before, all of our platforms have promised additional legislation for reclamation purposes. The President himself has advocated this, and this is the only opportunity this Congress will have to show its friendliness to the reclamation of the West.

Now, there is a difference between the projects covered in this bill and the ordinary projects taken up under the Reclamation Service. The Columbia River in part is an international stream. It is an interstate stream. In addition to that it is a navigable stream. We shall have to use the services of the Secretary of War and the Federal Power Commission, and we need this money out of the Federal Treasury to make this investigation. We can not make it out of the reclamation fund. That fund is too limited.

Mr. BLANTON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SINNOTT. I yield to the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. BLANTON. I think the gentleman is correct; but the gentleman speaks of it being a platform promise. May I ask the gentleman how long after election is a platform promise to be kept alive?

Mr. SINNOTT. The statute of limitations is running rapidly and this will partially stop it running against both platforms. [Laughter.]

Mr. CRAMTON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SINNOTT. Yes.

Mr. CRAMTON. The Columbia River, as well as the Colorado River, each of them, if successful, will bring in many million dollars through the water rights, the water power, and so forth, and ought not that project to take care of its own expenses? If it is necessary to spend $200,000 or $300,000 on preliminary work, should not the irrigation project itself take care of that expense instead of burdening it on the taxpayers of the country?

Mr. SINNOTT. The projects will ultimately take care of 99 per cent of the expense that is for investigation purposes.

Mr. CRAMTON. Would the gentleman agree that this amount should be reimbursable to the Treasury of the United States?

Mr. SINNOTT. It will be.

Mr. CRAMTON. There is no such provision in the bill.

Mr. SINNOTT. I have no objection to making it reimbursable.

Mr. CRAMTON. It will be reimbursable if you adopt my amendment.

Mr. SINNOTT. I have no objection to making it ultimately reimbursable. You can put that in the appropriation bill. I hope, Mr. Speaker, that the amendment of the gentleman from Michigan will be defeated.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Michigan.

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question now is on the committee amendment.

The question was taken, and the committee amendment was agreed to.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question now is on the third reading of the Senate bill.

The question was taken, and the bill was ordered read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

The title was amended.

On motion of Mr. SUMMERS of Washington, a motion to reconsider the vote whereby the bill was passed was laid on the table.

Mr. VAILE. Mr. Speaker, I ask to return to a previous number on the calendar which was passed temporarily.

The SPEAKER. Bills passed temporarily go to the foot of the calendar. The Clerk will read the next bill.

RETIRED PAY OF CERTAIN ENLISTED MEN IN THE COAST GUARD.

The next bill on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (H. R. 2187) to regulate the retired pay of certain enlisted men in the Coast Guard.

The Clerk read the title to the bill.

Mr. MERRITT. Mr. Speaker, the circumstances governing this bill have changed, and I ask that the bill may be stricken from the calendar.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Connecticut can object, and that will strike the bill from the calendar.

Mr. MERRITT. I object.

Mr. MCARTHUR. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD on the bill just passed.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Oregon asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

TO AMEND THE GRADE PERCENTAGES OF ENLISTED MEN.

The next bill on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (S. 4037) to amend the grade percentages of enlisted men as described in section 4(b) of the national defense act as amended.

The Clerk read the title to the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the consideration of the bill?

Mr. BLANTON. I object.

SALE OF MONTREAL RIVER LIGHTHOUSE RESERVATION.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (H. R. 13032) to authorize the sale of the Montreal River Lighthouse Reservation, Mich., to the Gogebic County board of the American Legion, Bessemer, Mich.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. STAFFORD. Reserving the right to object, I do not like the policy of the National Government granting away its property to individuals or associations, even though it is to be used for charitable or humanitarian purposes. I am afraid if we launch on that policy the Government will be asked to transfer too much of its land gratuitously to charitable institutions and other associations.

Mr. MAPES. Mr. Speaker, the information which came to the committee from the Department of Commerce and from others familiar with the situation is to the effect that this property is of no practical value. It has been set aside for lighthouse purposes, but the Bureau of Lighthouses informs the committee that it has never been used for that purpose, and that it is doubtful if it ever will be used for that purpose. It is rough land that has no particular value for any agricultural purposes or for any other purpose.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, if it is of little or no value, as the gentleman from Michigan has stated, I shall not press the objection. I do not wish, however, that this bill shall be taken as a precedent of the policy of the Government to give away its domain to private individuals or associations; no matter how worthy the purpose may be, they should pay the value of the land. If the land is valueless and will revert to the Government if the purpose is not being carried out, as this bill provides, I withdraw the reservation.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Wisconsin withdraws his reservation of his objection. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of Commerce, for and on behalf of the United States, is hereby authorized and directed, in his discretion, to sell and convey to the Gogebic County Board of the American Legion, Bessemer, Mich., for the sum of $1, that certain piece or parcel of land known as the Montreal River Lighthouse Reservation, Mich., with all the rights, easements, and appurtenances thereto belonging, which is all that parcel of land situate at the mouth of the Montreal River in the county of Gogebic, State of Michigan, comprising lot 2, section 10, township 48 north, range 49 west, and containing 40.85 acres more or less, no longer required for lighthouse purposes: Provided, That said Gogebic County Board of the American Legion shall use this site for park purposes and as a home for invalid members of the American Legion: And provided further, That in the event of the discontinuance by the said Gogebic County Board of the site for park purposes and as a home for invalid members of the American Legion, then the title to the premises hereunder transferred shall revert to the United States, and the $1 consideration paid by said Gogebic County Board shall be retained by the United States in consideration of the provisions hereof.

SEC. 2. That the right to alter, amend, or repeal this act is hereby expressly reserved.

The following committee amendments were read:

Page 2, line 5, after the word "less," insert the words "the same being."

Page 2, line 8, after "Legion," strike out the balance of the paragraph and insert in lieu thereof the following:

"Provided further, That the deed of conveyance shall be upon the express condition that if at any time the Secretary of Commerce shall determine that the site hereby authorized to be conveyed is not being maintained by the said Gogebic County Board of the American Legion as a site for park purposes and as a home for invalid members of the American Legion, and shall file and cause to be recorded a certificate to that effect in the office of the official custodian of the records pertaining to real estate in the county in Michigan in which said lands are located, then the estate thereby conveyed shall immediately terminate and revert to the United States, which may thereupon reenter into and upon said premises as of its first and former estate.

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MAPES. Yes.

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. What is the value of this land?

Mr. MAPES. It is of no practical value.

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. How much would it be worth in the market?

Mr. MAPES. I do not think there would be any market value for it at all.

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. I call attention to one other thing. The gentleman provides a sale and conveyance for $1, with the right to repeal the act. What good would the repealing of the act have after the sale was actually made?

Mr. MAPES. Probably not any.

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. Ought there not to be a provision for reentry if it is needed for lighthouse purposes?

Mr. MAPES. The bill provides that the conveyance be made upon condition that the title revert to the United States in case the property is no longer used for the purposes stated in the act.

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. It provides simply that it must be used for certain purposes. There is no proviso that if they want it again for lighthouse purposes they can have it back again.

Mr. MAPES. That is true, but the Bureau of Lighthouses informed the committee that it will probably never be needed for lighthouse purposes.

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. Probably, but it might be.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

INCOME TAX OF NONRESIDENT ALIENS.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Mr. Speaker, by direction of the Committee on Ways and Means I present a privileged report upon the bill (H. R. 14050) to amend the revenue act of 1921 in respect to the income tax of nonresident aliens.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Iowa presents a privileged report from the Committee on Ways and Means on the bill H. R. 14050. It will be referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union and ordered to be printed.

TO AMEND THE GRADE PERCENTAGES OF ENLISTED MEN.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to withdraw the objection which I made to the consideration of the bill S. 4037, to amend the grade percentages of enlisted men, as prescribed in section 4(b) of the national defense act, as amended.

The SPEAKER. The bill being objected to, it can not be taken up until we finish the rest of the calendar.

Mr. BLANTON. Upon explanation, I find that it will not do what I thought it would.

The SPEAKER. The Chair regrets that the gentleman objected; but it can not be taken up until the end of the calendar.

Mr. BLANTON. Then I ask unanimous consent to withdraw the objection and that the bill retain its place on the calendar.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

DISTRIBUTION OF CAPTURED WAR DEVICES, ETC.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (S. 674) to provide for the equitable distribution of captured war devices and trophies throughout the States and Territories of the United States and to the District of Columbia.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, this is too important to be considered on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent, and I object.

NATIONAL MILITARY PARK AT YORKTOWN, VA.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (H. R. 13326) in reference to a national military park at Yorktown, Va.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, directed to investigate the feasibility of establishing a national military park in and about Yorktown, in the State of Virginia, for the purpose of commemorating the campaign and siege of Yorktown in the fall of 1781 and the preservation of said battle field for historical purposes, and to prepare plans of such park and an estimate of the cost of establishing and acquiring the same, and obtain such further information as may enable Congress to act upon the matter after being fully advised. To aid and assist him in this undertaking the Secretary of War is authorized to appoint a commission of not to exceed three persons, one of whom shall be a member of the Daughters of the American Revolution and one a member of the Society of the Sons of the American Revolution: Provided, however, That they shall serve without compensation or expense to the Government.

SEC. 2. That the expense of the investigation herein directed to be made shall be paid from the appropriation, "Contingencies of the Army."

With the following committee amendment:

Page 2, after the word "person," strike out "one of whom shall be a member of the Daughters of the American Revolution and one a member of the Society of the Sons of the American Revolution: Provided, however, That they," and insert in lieu thereof the word "who."

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. TILSON). The question is on agreeing to the committee amendment.

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

Mr. NEWTON of Minnesota. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD upon this bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

AMERICAN BATTLE MONUMENTS COMMISSION.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (H. R. 14087) for the creation of an American Battle Monuments Commission to erect memorials commemorating the services of the American soldier in Europe, and for other purposes.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, I am in sympathy with the general purposes of the bill, but I think it is too important to be considered on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent.

Mr. PORTER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman withhold his objection for a moment?

Mr. STAFFORD. Yes.

Mr. PORTER. Mr. Speaker, there is an imperative necessity for the immediate passage of this bill. It has been recommended by the President, by the Secretary of War, the president of the Budget Commission, by the American Legion, the Veterans of Foreign Wars, and a number of other organizations. It is before this House as the result of the unanimous vote of the Committee on Foreign Affairs. If we are unable to secure consideration at this time, it is quite probable that it will fail of passage. The importance is this: We must have some control over the erection of memorials in France. We do not want a repetition of some of the things that have occurred in our own national cemeteries. The bill vests in the President the power to name a commission of seven to perform this work, subject to the approval of the Commission of Fine Arts.

A number of the States, a number of municipalities, a number of counties, and voluntary organizations are awaiting the passage of this bill so that they can construct memorials. The other day there was a dispute between the Thirty-seventh Division and the Seventy-ninth in regard to which division won a certain battle. This commission, vested with the powers that it has, will be able to determine from records in the War Department the exact justice in these matters. Moreover, the tentative plan—and it is only tentative, though I believe every member of the committee and every man who is at all familiar with it approves of it—provides for the erection of about 125 memorial markers, granite blocks about waist high, with a bronze relief map on top, placed in such a position on the battle field that a visitor may look at the map and secure an accurate idea of how the battle was fought.

Now, that is helpful, because it will protect the tourists from misinformation from guides. Moreover, it will aid all of these organizations in the construction of their memorials, because they will have the exact line of battle, and I say very frankly that if we do not get this bill through at this time it will fail of passage and very much retard the construction of memorials in France.

Mr. BLANTON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PORTER. I will.

Mr. BLANTON. This is practically the same idea we carried out on the battle field of San Jacinto, Tex. There are markers all over that field. Tourists visiting there can find out exactly the various points of interest, and I think it is a good matter. I want to call the attention of the membership to this fact: As the gentleman says, if this bill does not pass now—the President assures us there will be no extra session of Congress—it will go over until next December, and I hope the gentleman from Wisconsin will not press his objection.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, I will say to the gentleman if this bill is not given consideration to-day it is going to be given consideration before the end of the session under a rule.

Mr. PORTER. I do not think there is a possibility of it. There are enough rules before the Rules Committee now to keep the House busy for two months.

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. PORTER. I will yield.

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. Is not time rather the essence of the thing because the physical conditions are changing, and unless you can have these markers placed very speedily and have the photographs taken speedily, as contemplated by the bill, after a while there may be uncertainty as to the various situations and what occurred in those situations?

Mr. PORTER. The gentleman from Virginia is entirely right.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I wish to inquire about the matter referred to by the gentleman from Virginia, and that is the authorization providing for the taking of photographs of the terrain of the various battle fields. I had understood that the War Department, through the Signal Corps, had already complete photographs of the various battle fields of Europe.

Mr. PORTER. These photographs are about 90 per cent complete. It will require some additional work, and hence there is a provision in the bill authorizing the completion of the photographic record of the war.

Mr. STAFFORD. Then it is not in any way, so far as that provision is concerned, a duplication of the work already performed by the Signal Corps of the Army?

Mr. PORTER. Not at all. If the gentleman will read the bill closely, he will observe the limitation.

Mr. STAFFORD. I wish to see whether the bill is properly confined or not, with the idea of withdrawing the reservation.

Mr. FAIRCHILD. Will the gentleman yield for a further suggestion?

Mr. STAFFORD. I will.

Mr. FAIRCHILD. If the gentleman had been with me in December, going over the battle fields, he would have been impressed with the necessity of action not only to secure proper historical markings but also to prevent improper historical markings. At the present time unauthorized people, with no man in authority to prevent, are erecting monuments both for individuals and organizations that create a false historical statement as to the events and location of troops. In addition to that private individuals who happen to have a lot of money are going over there and erecting monuments at different points entirely exaggerating the position of any one individual in the Army.

Mr. STAFFORD. I will say to the gentleman I do not dispute the need of having this legislation at this session. I have read the report very carefully, but I thought it was a matter of such importance it should not be considered under the Unanimous Consent Calendar in the unanimous consent way, where we do not have a very close scrutiny. Let me ask the chairman of the committee, What is the necessity of having this bill extend to battle fields in Asia?

Mr. PORTER. We had a number of troops in Siberia, and we thought it fitting and proper that some memorial should be erected at Vladivostok and at Harbin.

Mr. STAFFORD. Of course, the gentleman knows when you are going to grant a blanket authority to a commission they are going to exercise it. Of course, something must be done in a united way, but why extend it to Asia because we had some troops in Asia? Why not confine it to Europe? We had troops at Archangel, true. It was all right to commemorate the services of men in the frozen north, but why should we go and allow this commission to travel over Asia? Would it not be sufficient merely to confine it to Europe?

Mr. PORTER. Well, of course, if the gentleman insists upon an amendment of that sort I will be compelled to accept it, but my study of the Siberian situation has convinced me that the American soldiers in Siberia performed a great service for their country and suffered intensely in so doing.

Mr. McKENZIE. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PORTER. Yes.

Mr. McKENZIE. There were no conflicts. They did not fight any battles.

Mr. PORTER. There were no conflicts or battles in the sense the gentleman understands those words.

Mr. STAFFORD. Without the gentleman thinking that I am too insistent, I would like to have the Asia provision withdrawn.

Mr. PORTER. Very well.

Mr. STAFFORD. Then I will have no objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That a commission is hereby created and established, to be known as the American Battle Monuments Commission (hereinafter referred to as the commission), to consist of seven members who shall be appointed by the President, who shall also appoint one officer of the Regular Army to serve as its secretary. The members and secretary shall serve at the pleasure of the President, who shall fill any vacancies that from time to time occur.

The members of this commission shall serve without compensation except that their actual expenses in connection with the work of the commission may be paid from any funds appropriated for the purposes of this act, or acquired by other means hereinafter authorized.

Upon the request of the commission the President is authorized to designate such personnel of any department or of the Army, Navy, or Marine Corps as may be necessary to assist in carrying out the purposes of this act, and the commission is authorized to employ such further personnel as may be necessary to carry out the purposes of this act, within the limits of any appropriation or appropriations made for such purposes.

With a committee amendment, as follows:

Page 1, line 10, after the word "occur," insert the words: "The secretary shall also serve as disbursing officer of the commission, who shall make disbursements upon vouchers approved by its chairman."

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the committee amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the next committee amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 2, line 3, after the word "of," strike out the word "this" and insert the word "the."

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the committee amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I offer an amendment on page 1, line 3, preceding the word "commission," to insert the word "nonpartisan."

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Texas offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. BLANTON: Page 1, line 3, before the word "commission," insert the word "nonpartisan."

Mr. PORTER. Mr. Speaker, I rise in opposition to the amendment.

Mr. BLANTON. I want to be heard in favor of the amendment.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Texas will be recognized first in favor of the amendment.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, ordinarily the amendment which I have offered would be considered superfluous, because when a commission of seven—an important commission of this kind—which, from its very nature is nonpartisan, is appointed to serve the country we would presume—everybody would presume—that it would be nonpartisan; that the chairman or the President or anybody else who had any connection with its appointment would say that in a commission of seven Americans there should be at least four members of the dominant party and three members of the minority party. But so many instances have arisen here lately where, in the appointment of such commissions of Americans, where there is no issue of partisanship, the minority party has been allowed no representation whatever that I think attention should now be called to that subject.

Take the Debt Funding Commission, one of the most important that has ever been appointed in this Nation.

Mr. SNYDER. Did they do a good job——

Mr. BLANTON. And one of the most important that ever will be appointed.

Mr. SNYDER. Did they do a good job?

Mr. BLANTON. I will leave it to the gentleman from New York to answer to his people on his vote whether they have done a good job. My vote did not say so.

Mr. FAIRCHILD. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLANTON. Yes.

Mr. FAIRCHILD. Does not the gentleman realize that the introduction of his amendment would of itself introduce a political aspect to a nonpolitical project?

Mr. BLANTON. No; but it will call the attention of the President to the fact that this commission should be American, made up of Republicans and Democrats alike. If Army officers or members of organizations are appointed, let there be a representation of the minority party upon that commission.

I know we are treading along in ruts, some of them new ruts and some of them old. This is one of the new ruts that I object to being formed, into which we may get and out of which we may not be able to remove ourselves. You gentlemen had better watch these propositions just as we are watching them. The time will come when you Republicans will be in a minority, in the near future, where you might be prevented from sitting in important conferences connected with the service of your country. Do you want us to point to the precedents that you have set and are setting in this regard, and which may harass you hereafter? I am in favor, so long as I am a Member of Congress, of giving members of the minority party, whether they be Republicans or Democrats, a voice in the affairs of this Nation.

We should look after these things with a little closer scrutiny. The safeguarding of the best interests of the American people, after all, lies in the fact that there are two parties watching each other, the minority watching the majority, and vice versa. That is the only way the rights of the American people are amply protected. We do not want to drift into these dangerous ruts where the minority party is forgotten. What harm will it do to put the word "nonpartisan" in front of this commission? This is an important commission. Numerous men in this Nation would like to serve on it. It is a commission that can accomplish great good for the future history of this country and for the civilization of the world.

Mr. VAILE. The gentleman would not want all the members of this commission to be members of the Nonpartisan League, would he?

Mr. BLANTON. Oh, it would be an insult to the commission to even mention the "Nonpartisan League" in connection with it.

Mr. VAILE. The word is a little irritating in connection with this subject.

Mr. BLANTON. The term "Nonpartisan League" means to me simply disloyalty to the Government.

Mr. SNYDER. You are right about it.

Mr. BLANTON. Republicans and Democrats alike should not stop until they wipe out of existence all evidence of the Nonpartisan League. But the word "nonpartisan," as I submit it in this matter, means just the opposite to that organization. A nonpartisan commission means something in which all Americans as Americans are interested.

I appeal to my colleague to let this word go in there, for the future protection of the gentleman's party as well as of my own party.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. TILSON). The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. PORTER. Mr. Speaker, I rise in opposition to the amendment. When this bill was first recommended by the President it provided for the appointment of the Secretary of War, the General of the Army, the national commander of the Veterans' Legion, the national commander of the Veterans of Foreign Wars, one Member of the House, and one Member of the Senate, but after consideration the committee concluded to leave the matter entirely to the President for the reason that the tenure of office of all these men is very uncertain, and the proposed commission above all things must be a permanent one. This is not the ordinary commission. Its members will serve without compensation except their actual expenses, and I have not the slightest doubt that the President, when he appoints the commission, will follow the recommendations that he made to Congress.

Mr. BLANTON. Will the gentleman permit me to ask him——

Mr. PORTER. Pardon me just a moment, to show you where you will get with your amendment. Let us assume that the President says to the American Legion, "Name a member," and to the Veterans of Foreign Wars, "Name a member," and perhaps to the gold-star mothers, "Name a member," and it should turn out that the persons named are all Democrats or all Republicans, does not the gentleman see the embarrassment that this nonpartisan amendment would cause the President?

Mr. BLANTON. Will the gentleman permit me to ask that that word be changed to "bipartisan" instead of "nonpartisan"?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Texas asks unanimous consent to modify his amendment as stated by him. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the amendment to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLANTON].

The question being taken, on a division (demanded by Mr. BLANTON) there were—ayes 10, noes 36.

Accordingly the amendment was rejected.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 2. That the commission shall prepare plans and estimates for the erection of suitable memorials to mark and commemorate the services of the American forces in Europe and Asia and erect memorials therein at such places as the commission shall determine.

The commission shall control as to materials and design, provide regulations for and supervise the erection of all memorial monuments and buildings in the American cemeteries in Europe and Asia.

The commission shall cause such photographs to be secured or taken of the terrain of the various battle fields of Europe and Asia, upon which units of the armed forces of the United States were actively engaged with the enemy, as will complete the historical photographic record of the operations of such units; and the commission shall transmit such record when completed to the Secretary of War for permanent file with the records of the War Department.

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, I offer an amendment.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Virginia offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. MOORE of Virginia: Page 2, line 20, after the word "determine" substitute a comma for the period and add the following: "including works of architecture and art in the American cemeteries in Europe."

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, I understand that that amendment has the approval of the chairman of the committee.

Mr. PORTER. We have no objection to the amendment.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. PORTER. Mr. Speaker, I move to amend, on page 2, line 19, by striking out the words "and Asia," and also to strike out the same words in line 24, and also to strike out the same words in line 3, on page 8.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the amendment offered by the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. PORTER: Page 2, line 19, strike out the words "and Asia." Page 2, line 24, strike out the words "and Asia." Page 3, line 3, strike out the words "and Asia."

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HUSTED. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I introduced the first bill on this subject about a year ago. That bill is practically identical with the one now under consideration. The matter was brought to my attention by Colonel Hayes, the son of ex-President Hayes, who has done this work for the Government on other battle fields. Now I realize the great need for immediate action. I am sorry the legislation has not gone into effect long before this. I do not care to take further time of the House at this time and I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from New York asks unanimous consent to revise and extend his remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection, the pro forma amendment will be withdrawn and the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 3. That before any design or material for memorials constructed under the provisions of this act is accepted by the commission, the said design or material shall be approved by the National Commission of Fine Arts.

With the following committee amendment:

Page 3, line 10, strike out the words "constructed under the provisions of this act."

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Also with the following committee amendment:

Page 3, line 11, strike out the words "said design or material" and insert the word "same."

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the committee amendment.

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 5. That the commission is authorized to receive funds from any State, municipal, or private source for the purposes of this act, and such funds shall be deposited by the commission with the Chief of Finance of the United States Army and shall be kept by him in separate accounts and shall be disbursed upon vouchers approved by the commission.

With the following committee amendment:

On page 3, line 22, after the word "the," insert the words "chairman of the."

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the committee amendment.

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 6. That authority is hereby given for the preparation of models and designs and the fabrication of memorials, and the materials for such memorials, at arsenals or navy yards or by other governmental agencies, if the commission shall so determine.

Authority is hereby given for the use of captured war materials, not otherwise disposed of by congressional action, in the fabrication of not to exceed 10,000 pounds of bronze to be used on the memorials constructed under the provisions of this act: Provided, That in the selection of materials the commission shall refrain from utilizing material which might otherwise be available for decorative or memorial purposes.

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. Mr. Chairman, during the discussion of this matter in the committee there was some question as to whether the limitation contained in line 6 on page 4 should be adopted. The limitation is that the bronze used shall not exceed 10,000 pounds. It has been suggested to me by relatives of some of the young men who are buried in the cemeteries of Europe that the limitation should be removed, inasmuch as 10,000 pounds of bronze would suffice only to construct the outside memorials and would not suffice for memorials to be made for location in the cemeteries. I ask the gentleman if he can not see his way clear to agree to omit the limitation of 10,000 pounds? I shall not propose an amendment, but I hope the gentleman will agree to that.

Mr. PORTER. Mr. Speaker, the War Department assured the committee that 10,000 pounds of bronze was ample to make these relief maps. The committee did not feel inclined to give the War Department the right to use unlimited quantities of these materials. We thought it should be limited, as there is legislation now pending for the disposition of the war relics. For that reason I do not care to agree to the amendment.

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. The gentleman thinks the matter can be taken care of hereafter, does he?

Mr. PORTER. Oh, certainly.

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. By the War Department itself?

Mr. PORTER. Certainly.

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. Under the general discretion that is or will be vested in the Secretary of War?

Mr. PORTER. I am inclined to agree with the gentleman.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection, the pro forma amendment will be withdrawn and the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 8. That the commission is authorized and directed to cooperate with American citizens, States, municipalities, or associations desiring to erect war memorials in Europe and Asia in such manner as may be determined by the commission: Provided, That no assistance in erecting any such memorial shall be given by any administrative agency of the United States unless the plan has been approved in accordance with the provisions of this act.

Mr. PORTER. Mr. Speaker, I offer the following amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 4, line 20, strike out the word "Asia."

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 12. That the records and archives of the commission shall, upon the termination of its duties, be deposited with the Secretary of War.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I offer the following amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment by Mr. BLANTON: Page 5, line 15, after the word "War," strike out the period, insert a colon, and add the following proviso, to wit: "Provided, That the life of this commission shall terminate on January 1, 1924, and the said commission shall make its final report before that date."

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I think whenever Congress creates any kind of a commission it ought to provide for its termination. It is the hardest thing in the world to get rid of a commission once authorized by Congress.

Mr. PORTER. That is where the members of the commission draw salaries.

Mr. BLANTON. Oh, there is something connected with this commission that is equal to a salary. The way the bill was drawn the commission could not only travel all over Europe and some other countries but they could travel all over Asia. Of course, under the insistence of our alert friend from Wisconsin he has forced the chairman to forego travel in Asia. They have stricken that out. I imagine that when the commission gets through with its real work—and there is real important work to be performed, and I am willing for them to travel in the performance of that work—but when they get through with the work and the Congress lasts on and on and the commission still remains alive, I imagine there could be some very elaborate and extensive junketing parties under this authority that we are granting. We ought to watch that and stop it in its incipiency.

Mr. TINCHER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLANTON. I will.

Mr. TINCHER. Agreeing with the gentleman that the life of the commission should be terminated at some time, does not the gentleman think that the 1st of next January is too short a time?

Mr. BLANTON. Not if they will get to work and get busy—they have 10 months. Whatever there is that ought to be done, it ought to be done before the expiration of 10 months. I think the gentleman from New York [Mr. HUSTED] should have pushed his first bill which he introduced a little faster. I am glad his proposition has materialized, but he has waited too long already. We ought to stop the life of this commission when the work is done and not permit them to have authority for junketing all over the world after the work has been completed. I know there is great temptation for Members to take these trips. It is nice, pleasant, and instructive. They get to see the world, and it does not cost them anything—they think the knowledge is worth the public expense. But about the time they get the knowledge some fellow comes out in the district and defeats them, and they go home as lame ducks and the people do not get the benefit of the knowledge. I think the 1st day of January is long enough for the commission to last, and I hope the amendment will prevail.

Mr. PORTER. Mr. Speaker, I rise in opposition to the amendment. This is a permanent commission intended to supervise and control the material used in the construction of memorials. It is intended to supervise the construction of memorials by States, municipalities, and private individuals. Now, assuming that we accept the amendment of the gentleman from Texas, in four years from now the people of Texas may decide to erect a magnificent memorial to the soldiers of that State who died on the battle fields of France, the commission would be abolished and the State would not have its aid and advice. I would regret to see any limitation placed upon it. As to this matter of junketing, I doubt very much whether this commission will ever visit Europe. The work will be done in Washington, where the records are on file.

Mr. McKENZIE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PORTER. Certainly.

Mr. McKENZIE. Is it not a fact that the national cemeteries for soldiers are under the supervision of the War Department, and what is the argument based upon that it is necessary to have a special commission to do this work, when the War Department has all the maps and all the things necessary to carry out the plan?

Mr. PORTER. Many civilians feel that there should be some restrictions on the War Department.

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PORTER. Yes.

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. May I make this suggestion: The War Department itself approves of this proposition. The War Department, as I understand, does not care to take the entire responsibility, but wants the work done by a commission.

Mr. HUSTED. Mr. Speaker, this is not a new proposition. The Congress did the same thing in respect to the battle fields in other foreign wars. We created a commission which was in existence for years, of which Colonel Hays was the chairman, doing the same work; and we did it with reference to the Boxer rebellion, the Philippine insurrection, and in Cuba.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, I offer an amendment to the amendment. Strike out "1924" and insert "1928."

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment by Mr. STAFFORD to the amendment offered by Mr. BLANTON: Strike out the figures "1924" and insert in lieu thereof the figures "1928."

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment to the amendment.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment to ask the gentleman from Wisconsin whether he has conferred with the chairman of the committee with reference to this proposed amendment?

Mr. STAFFORD. I have not.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Of course, that is not necessary, but I want to inquire the reason for such an unusual limitation of time? I fear if we place that limitation upon it the commission will take that as an implication that they are supposed to take that much time to finish the job. It seems to me that is a pretty long time to which to defer this matter.

Mr. STAFFORD. It is four years and more now since the armistice was signed. The War Department in the Cemeterial Division is just about completing or will in the next fiscal year complete the work of the arrangement of our six cemeteries in Europe where our soldier dead are buried. January 1, 1924, is altogether too short a time. The State of Pennsylvania has provided a large sum of money with which to erect a monument. Other States will do likewise; States like Kansas, for instance, that lost many men on the foreign fields. They will want to erect memorials. I want to have in existence some commission that will be able to suggest to the various States and others interested in the erection of memorials the proper design and place of location. It seems to me that 1928 would be a reasonable time to fix. I think no objection could be made otherwise, unless you wish to make it permanent.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I have no desire to go into that controversy at all except it seems to me that this is rather an unusual length of time. Of course, if it meets with the approval of the chairman of the committee, I shall not object to it.

Mr. PORTER. I will say that it is unusual, but this is an unusual undertaking. A commission was created for the construction of memorials in China, in Cuba, and in the Philippines. Those commissions are still in existence. It is not a year since the State of Pennsylvania erected a magnificent monument to her soldier dead in Virginia. These memorial monuments will be in process of construction for years to come.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Does this amendment meet with the approval of the chairman of the committee?

Mr. PORTER. Indeed it does not.

Mr. BLANTON. Under the bill as now written, this will be a permanent commission. The limitation of the gentleman from Wisconsin is to prevent it from being permanent. He limits its life to four and three-quarter years.

Mr. BANKHEAD. That is all I want to say on the matter.

Mr. HUSTED. Mr. Speaker, I move to strike out the last word. As the chairman of the committee has stated, this is a permanent commission which is provided for in the bill, and it should be. It will have two kinds of work. The first is of a temporary nature, and that is the business of marking the battle fields, and that work should be cleaned up in 10 or 15 months. In addition to that it has to pass upon the designs, supervise the construction, and fix the location of all memorials that may hereafter be erected on any of the battle fields in France, and it is important that there should be a commission with jurisdiction over this work, because if you do not have a commission there is not going to be any uniformity about it and good taste will not always be displayed, and we will have memorials put up by irresponsible parties that will not be creditable or in harmony with any proper general plan.

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HUSTED. Yes.

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. Taking the practical view of the matter, as the commission is to make a report at the beginning of each fiscal year, will not its expenditures and also its tenure of service be really within the control of the Committee on Appropriations?

Mr. HUSTED. Entirely so, because it can not expend a dollar unless it is appropriated by Congress. That is provided for in the bill. The great expense they are talking of is the $500,000 for marking the battle fields. That will be all over probably within two years, possibly within 18 months. After that the expense will be practically nothing. The commissioners serve without any compensation. After this initial expense necessary to mark the battle fields, all they will have to do will be to pass on the plans and specifications for future memorials and to designate their locations. The bill provides also that those plans must have the approval of the Fine Arts Commission. We are under no danger of providing for unlimited junkets or unlimited expense. You must have a permanent commission if we are really going to do the work which is of most importance.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection, the pro forma amendment will be withdrawn, and the question is on the amendment to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Wisconsin.

The amendment to the amendment was rejected.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Texas.

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I offer another amendment, on page 5, line 15, to strike out the period, insert a colon, and add the proviso that the commission shall incur no traveling expenses other than those first authorized by Congress through the Commitee on Appropriations.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment by Mr. BLANTON: Page 5, line 15, after the word "work," strike out the period, insert a colon, and add: "Provided, That said commission shall incur no traveling expenses other than those first authorized by specific appropriations therefor."

Mr. SANDERS of Indiana. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the amendment and bill to final passage.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. BLANTON) there were—ayes 1, noes 51.

So the amendment was rejected.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

PROTECTION OF DECORATIONS AND SERVICE MEDALS ISSUED BY THE WAR DEPARTMENT.

The next business in order on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (S. 4036) to prohibit the unauthorized wearing, manufacture, or sale of medals and badges awarded by the War Department.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of this bill? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That hereafter the wearing, manufacture, or sale of the congressional medal of honor, distinguished service cross, distinguished service medal, or any of the service medals or badges awarded by the War Department, or the ribbon, button, or rosette thereof of the form as is or may hereafter be prescribed by the Secretary of War, or of any colorable imitation thereof, is prohibited, except when authorized under such regulations as the Secretary of War may prescribe.

Any person who offends against the provisions of this section shall, upon conviction, be punished by a fine not exceeding $250 or by imprisonment not exceeding six months, or by both such fine and imprisonment.

The bill was ordered to be read the third time, was read the third time, and passed.

BOISE BARRACKS MILITARY RESERVATION.

The next business in order on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (S. 3332) to provide for a grant to the city of Boise, in the State of Idaho, of the use of a certain part of the Boise Barracks Military Reservation under certain conditions.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of this bill?

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I think the gentleman should explain the bill.

Mr. HULL. Mr. Speaker, the bill is simply to allow the city of Boise the use of 5.45 acres of land of the military reservation. The part they are going to use is disconnected from the reservation, and it is not used in any way—the weeds are growing up there—and the city wants to use it as a park and keep it in repair and in good shape for the use of the public for recreation purposes, and this bill simply permits that to be done. It does not transfer title at all, but allows the city to use it for public purposes as long as it is used in that manner. As long as the Government finds it is unnecessary to use it, the city can use it.

Mr. BLANTON. The Government bought this 5 acres for reservation purposes?

Mr. HULL. I do not know the history of that, but I rather doubt it.

Mr. BLANTON. The point I am trying to get at is: Should the Government ever again need these 5 acres, it will have a controversy with this city on the transformation of these 5 acres of public park back into a military reservation.

Mr. HULL. Not at all; that is properly protected in the bill.

Mr. BLANTON. If the Government ever needs it——

Mr. HULL. It comes back automatically.

Mr. BLANTON. How much is the Government going to ask every year in maintaining this park?

Mr. HULL. Not a cent.

Mr. SMITH of Idaho. I will state to the gentleman there will be no demand for maintaining it. The city will take care of it. It is in an inexcessible portion of the reservation and can not be used in any way by the officers of the reservation.

Mr. BLANTON. Whenever the Government owns title to property and it is made into a public park, my experience in looking into these bills is that in two or three or four or five years afterwards gentlemen come in here and say, "Did not the Government expect to take care of its own property?" We are getting tired of maintaining them and having them ask for an appropriation.

Mr. McKENZIE. If the gentleman will yield, I simply wish to say to the gentleman from Texas that my recollection of this matter is that this particular parcel of land is cut off by a very large drainage canal and it is not being used by the War Department.

Mr. BLANTON. There are lots of reservations that the Government needed during the war, and for which it paid fabulous sums, which, of course, we do not need now in peace times. I notice there is hardly a week passes but what there are bills coming up in this House to cede back to some city for private use——

Mr. HULL. I would like to inquire of the gentleman there, What bill does he refer to in which we have ceded land back?

Mr. BLANTON. Oh, there are lots of them; several in Virginia; from Vermont down to Washington.

Mr. HULL. Now, in this case we simply allow the use of it until we need it, if we should.

Mr. BLANTON. At any rate, no fee has been granted the city——.

Mr. SMITH of Idaho. The bill originally proposed to transfer in fee, but the Secretary of War suggested an amendment.

Mr. BLANTON. The only thing is: Are the rights of the Government reserved by this bill to retake the use of this land without costing the Government anything when the necessity arises?

Mr. SMITH of Idaho. They are.

Mr. BLANTON. If that is the case, there is no objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to grant permission to the city of Boise, in the county of Ada, State of Idaho, to occupy and use a certain parcel of land constituting a part of the Boise Barracks Military Reservation, the property of the United States, situated in the said county of Ada, in the State of Idaho, described as follows: Beginning at the most westerly corner of the United States Military Reservation, thence north 69 degrees 35 minutes east 1,319.64 feet to the center of the Capitol Water Co. ditch; thence up said ditch south 26 degrees 29 minutes west 57.32 feet; thence south 69 degrees 41 minutes west 530.56 feet; thence south 35 degrees 42 minutes west 862.2 feet; thence south 70 degrees 3 minutes west 35.81 feet; thence north 20 degrees west 518.89 feet to the place of beginning, excepting therefrom any rights of said Capitol Water Co.; such occupative grant to be as and for a public park, and upon the agreement of said city of Boise to repair, maintain, and protect above-described part of the reservation and the public property thereon during the continuance of its occupancy at its own expense: Provided, That the said permission shall be subject to such conditions, restrictions, rules, and regulations as the Secretary of War may from time to time prescribe: Provided further, That the Secretary of War may terminate the said permission to use said grounds whenever and at such time as he may deem it expedient to do so.

SEC. 2. That any and all repairs, improvements, changes, and alterations in the grounds, buildings, and other appurtenances to above-described part of the reservation, made by the municipal authorities at Boise, shall be made only according to detailed plans submitted to and approved by the Secretary of War in each case prior to the commencement of any work under such plans, and all such repairs, improvements, changes, or alterations made by said city of Boise shall be made without expense to the United States, and in the event of the withdrawal of said permission such improvements as the Secretary of War may deem valuable to the military service shall become the property of the United States without cost to the Government; and such structures as may have been placed upon above-described part of the reservation by said city of Boise which are directed to be removed therefrom by the Secretary of War shall be removed forthwith and the grounds placed in a condition entirely satisfactory to him at the expense of the city, and no claim of any character whatever incident to the occupation by said city of such part of the reservation shall ever be made by it against the United States.

The bill was ordered to be read the third time, was read the third time, and passed.

EXTENSION OF CHARGES ON FEDERAL IRRIGATION PROJECTS.

The next business in order on the Unanimous Consent Calendar was the bill (S. 4187) to extend the time for payment of charges due on reclamation projects, and for other purposes.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, we have on prior occasions, when there has been failure of crops, extended the time of payment of reclamation charges, but I notice in this bill for the first time a provision providing for charging back payments to the principal of the indebtedness owing. I do not recall ever before whereby the Congress has enacted legislation to add the deferred interest of the indebtedness to the principal. In the letter of the Secretary of the Interior (Mr. Fall) he cites what he claims to be a parallel case, that in case the mortgagee, in Iowa, I believe he said, would force foreclosure on default of payment of the mortgagor it would result in hardship, and he justifies the practice in cases between private individuals as warrant for this bill, but in my limited experience in foreclosure cases in private dealings with farmers out in North Dakota, in the old frontier days when they had chinooks in successive seasons and crop failure, I do not remember ever of any mortgagee adding the interest of the indebtedness to the principal and keep on adding the default ad infinitum.

This bill, so far as that feature is concerned, seems to put a premium on the action of the debtor in postponing the payment of his honest debts. Why?

Mr. SMITH of Idaho. Mr. Speaker, referring to the particular objection urged by the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. STAFFORD] I will say that this extension will in no way impair the security the Government holds as a guaranty of the payment. It is just as it would be when a man owes a bank and it is impossible for him to pay the interest, and the banker gives him a new credit, including the interest, in a new note.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I demand the regular order.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, if we are going to have that kind of performance, I shall object.

Mr. SMITH of Idaho. I hope the gentleman from Texas will permit me to explain the bill.

Mr. BLANTON. I will withhold it.

Mr. STAFFORD. I will withdraw my objection and enter a reservation. I do not withdraw the original reservation.

Mr. SMITH of Idaho. Mr. Speaker, a year ago, because of the adverse conditions which confronted some of the farmers on these reclamation projects, we enacted legislation, which was approved on the 31st of March, to authorize the Secretary of the Interior to extend the time of payment if it were shown that the settlers were so absolutely embarrassed financially that they could not meet the payments.

Mr. STAFFORD. I know that the gentleman is interested in the welfare of those people on reclamation projects, and I would not set my judgment up against that of the Secretary of the Interior in favor of postponing the payments another year. But why add the interest to the principal?

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STAFFORD. Yes; I will yield, because I hope in the future that the gentleman and I both, being then in the same position, will have the pleasure of listening to each other on unanimous-consent days.

Mr. MONDELL. Their payments for constructive charges increase annually. The payments for what are known as operation and maintenance charges, which we are deferring, constantly continue about the same. They have reached this condition, that in some cases it will be hardly worth while, I think, to relieve the settlers for one or two years of the trying conditions which they are laboring under unless they can know that in connection with the deferring of that interest at the end of the period they will not be compelled to pay the cumulative charges, because in that case their condition at the end of the period would be practically hopeless. This legislation is proposed with the intention of holding out to those people the hope of saving their homes by not only relieving them of the necessity of paying at the end of the period, but of the additional obligation to meet the payment at the end of the year.

Mr. STAFFORD. Will not this be a dangerous precedent that will plague us in the future?

Mr. MONDELL. No. I think it will be the only businesslike thing to do. It seems to me that if we do not do it, it would be equivalent to saying to the settler, "You can only meet the payment of $7 or $8 per annum on construction and operation and maintenance charges. Now, we relieve you for two years of the operation and maintenance charges," and that piles up a charge at the end of the period. So that the settler, looking forward to it, will say, "Well, this relief does not hold out much hope. If I must add the cumulative charges at the end of the relief period, not only meeting those charges as they accumulate in their normal way but paying these deferred payments, I will be confronted with a situation that will be impossible to overcome."

Now, the Government loses nothing by making a very businesslike arrangement—and this is a departmental suggestion, I will say to the gentleman from Wisconsin, and I think it a very wise one——

Mr. STAFFORD. Oh, yes.

Mr. MONDELL. Of adding these deferred charges to the total, and thereby creating a condition under which a settler now relieved can have a reasonable hope and expectation of going on through with his payments.

Mr. SINNOTT. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield for a suggestion?

Mr. MONDELL. Yes.

Mr. SINNOTT. We compel them to pay interest, but at the rate of 6 per cent.

Mr. STAFFORD. I know that. You have on line 12 language to make the interest payable on these fixed charges.

Mr. SINNOTT. Yes.

Mr. STAFFORD. Now, further, is it the purpose to grant extensions only to the assessments in 1922, 1923, and 1924?

Mr. SMITH of Idaho. Yes. Those for 1922 and 1923 and those payable in December, 1924.

Mr. STAFFORD. What is the necessity of this language in the last proviso, found on page 3:

Provided further, That the applicant for the extension shall first show to the satisfaction of the Secretary of the Interior detailed statement of his assets and liabilities and actual inability to make payment at the time of the application and an apparent ability to make the deferred charges in 1924 and subsequent years.

Why "subsequent years"?

Mr. SMITH of Idaho. In order to enable the Secretary of the Interior to determine whether or not, if this extension is granted, he will be able to pay.

Mr. HAYDEN. I think the gentleman from Wisconsin misread the language "and apparent ability."

Mr. STAFFORD. Yes. "And apparent ability to meet the deferred charges in 1924 and subsequent years."

Mr. HAYDEN. If the farmer has good judgment and the Secretary thinks under the conditions that he can pay it, he will do it. If he is not making a success of his business, then he will not.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, in view of the statements made by those who have expressed opinions and who are acquainted with the conditions in their districts, I will withdraw the reservation.

The SPEAKER. The reservation is withdrawn. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 3. (a) That every charge, the date of payment of which has been extended under section 1 of such act of March 31, 1922, shall, in lieu of the rate of interest provided in such act, draw interest at the rate of 4 per cent per annum from the date of the passage of this act.

With a committee amendment:

Page 2, line 5, strike out lines 5 to 9 inclusive.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the committee amendment.

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

(b) That every charge, the date of payment of which is extended under the provisions of section 2 of this act, shall draw interest at the rate of 4 per cent per annum from the date from which it was so extended in lieu of any penalty that may now be provided by law, but in case such charge is not paid at the end of the period for which it is so extended any such penalty shall attach from the date the charge was originally due, as if no extension had been granted.

With the following committee amendment:

Page 2, line 10, at the beginning of the line insert "section 3" and strike out "(b)."

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Also the following committee amendment:

Page 2, line 12, strike out the figure 4 and insert the figure 6.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 4. That section 2 of such act of March 31, 1922, is amended by striking out the words "season of 1922" where they appear in such section and by inserting in lieu thereof the words "seasons of 1922, 1923, and 1924."

With the following committee amendment:

Page 2, line 22, after the figures "1922" insert the word "and" and after "1923" strike out "and 1924."

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the committee amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 2, after line 22, insert a new section, as follows:

"SEC. 5. That where an individual water user, or individual applicant for a water right under a Federal irrigation project constructed or being constructed under the act of June 17, 1902 (32 Stat. L., p. 388), or any act amendatory thereof or supplementary thereto, is unable to pay any construction or operation and maintenance charge due for the year 1922, or prior thereto, the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized, in his discretion, to add such accrued and unpaid charges to the construction charge of the land of such water user or applicant, and to distribute such accumulated charges equally over each of the subsequent years, beginning with the year 1924, at such rate per year as will complete the payment during the remaining years of the 20-year period of payment of the original construction charge: Provided, That upon such adjustment being made, any penalties or interest which may have accrued in connection with such unpaid construction and operation and maintenance charges shall be canceled, and in lieu thereof the amount so due, and the payment of which is hereby extended, shall draw interest at the rate of 6 per cent per annum, paid annually from the time said amount became due to date of payment: Provided further, That the applicant for the extension shall first show, to the satisfaction of the Secretary of the Interior, detailed statement of his assets and liabilities and actual inability to make payment at the time of the application and an apparent ability to meet the deferred charges in 1924 and subsequent years: And provided further, That in case the principal and interest herein provided for are not paid in the manner and at the time provided by this act, any penalty now provided by law shall attach from the date the charge was originally due."

Mr. SMITH of Idaho. Mr. Speaker, I wish to offer a committee amendment.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Idaho offers an amendment to the amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment to the amendment by Mr. SMITH of Idaho: Page 3, line 4, after the word "due" insert "excepting operation and maintenance charges for drainage on the Boise project."

Mr. STAFFORD. I reserve a point of order on that amendment.

Mr. SMITH of Idaho. This amendment is made necessary because of the fact that the settlers on this project are taking care of the operation and maintenance charges for drainage purposes incurred after the work was completed, and the representative of the settlers, Mr. L. J. Magee, is here and wishes these words inserted so as to require the payment of those charges regularly, instead of having the extension provided here.

Mr. STAFFORD. I have no objection to anything that will recoup the Treasury of the United States so far as reclamation fund projects are concerned. These projects are always in default and great amounts are always owing upon them. I withdraw the reservation of the point of order.

Mr. HAYDEN. I suggest that the gentleman should insert the word "Idaho" after the word "Boise."

Mr. SMITH of Idaho. I accept that amendment.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the modification of the amendment as suggested?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment to the amendment.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. STAFFORD. Is there any other project which the gentleman wishes to add that will relieve the settlers on any project from the effect of this act?

Mr. SMITH of Idaho. The committee wishes to offer another amendment, which is at the Clerk's desk.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Idaho offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. SMITH of Idaho: Page 4, line 4, after the word "due," insert:

"And provided further: That similar relief in whole or in part may be extended by the Secretary of the Interior to a legally organized group of water users of a project, upon presentation of a sufficient number of individual showings made in accordance with the foregoing proviso to satisfy the Secretary of the Interior that such extension is necessary."

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, I reserve a point of order on that amendment.

Mr. BLANTON. I make the point of order that it is not germane.

Mr. SMITH of Idaho. This amendment is simply a provision which was in the law passed last March——

Mr. BLANTON. I make the point of order that it is not germane.

Mr. STAFFORD. I hope the gentleman from Texas will let the gentleman from Idaho have his inning, so that he may make a statement.

Mr. FAIRCHILD. Will the gentleman reserve his point of order?

Mr. BLANTON. I do not think we ought to admit this amendment, but I will reserve the point of order for the purpose of letting the gentleman make his statement.

Mr. SMITH of Idaho. That sentence, which is lifted out of the existing law, is made to apply to water users' associations. If it were not carried in this bill the relief would not be afforded to settlers where they are organized into an association. The committee in reporting the bill inadvertently omitted that provision of the existing law.

Mr. BLANTON. Was that matter considered by the committee?

Mr. SMITH of Idaho. Yes, indeed.

Mr. BLANTON. And did the whole committee agree to it?

Mr. SMITH of Idaho. Yes; and I have here the minutes of the proceedings.

Mr. BLANTON. All of the committee come from reclamation districts, and, of course, they would not disagree to anything of that kind?

Mr. SMITH of Idaho. We have some members of the committee who are not from reclamation districts.

Mr. BLANTON. I withdraw the point of order.

Mr. STAFFORD. I reserve the point of order.

Mr. RAKER. I reserve a point of order against the amendment. I wish to ask the gentleman from Idaho when was that acted on by the committee?

Mr. SMITH of Idaho. This amendment was considered by the committee on the 9th day of February in the forenoon, and I have the verbatim report of the minutes of the meeting here.

Mr. RAKER. The matter was clearly gone into, and one of the objections was that this relief should not be extended to organizations but that we should give it to private individuals and let each man make a separate showing.

Mr. SMITH of Idaho. Yes; but we had a subsequent meeting to take up this question, because it was shown by the Director of the Reclamation Service and also by the representatives of the water users here that without this provision the relief would not reach the settlers who were organized into districts.

Mr. STAFFORD. Still reserving the objection——

Mr. BLANTON. I ask for the regular order.

Mr. SMITH of Idaho. It is simply a provision in the existing law. It does not extend any relief that is not in the existing law.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from California make the point of order?

Mr. RAKER. I make the point of order.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Idaho admit the point of order?

Mr. SMITH of Idaho. Oh, no. It seems to me it is germane to this bill. It is for the relief of settlers who are organized into districts rather than individual settlers.

The SPEAKER. The Chair is not familiar with the matter.

Mr. HAYDEN. Mr. Speaker, last year we passed a bill very similar to this, containing the very provision now offered as an amendment, and it was only omitted by the committee here inadvertently.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks this should be approached from the other direction. Will the gentleman from California state his point of order? The Chair does not know what it is.

Mr. RAKER. That it is not germane to this bill; that this bill provides for individual water users upon these projects.

The present amendment authorizes the projects and associations to seek relief. I do not want to be captious in this matter, but I thought it was distinctly understood and determined that the bill should provide only for relief of individuals.

The SPEAKER. The Chair overrules the point of order.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, let us see about this. When a bill on the Unanimous Consent Calendar passes the objection stage it is always understood that there is not going to be any material amendment offered by the committee or anyone else. We are not considering this bill under the rules of the House. It is being considered because as reported it is not objectionable to any Member. There is nothing in the report accompanying this bill that relates in the slightest degree to this proposal. The gentleman says it is in the existing law. If it was the intention to offer this amendment, it should have been incorporated in the report. The gentleman is not proceeding according to the well-established practice of the House.

Mr. SMITH of Idaho. Mr. Speaker, is there anything unusual in amending a bill brought up under unanimous consent?

The SPEAKER. Of course, the bill can be amended, but the Chair does not think it is fair to give unanimous consent to the consideration of a bill and then make radical amendments.

Mr. SMITH of Idaho. This can not be considered a radical amendment.

The SPEAKER. Of course, the Chair knows nothing about the facts of this particular case; he was speaking in the abstract.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Speaker, I will say that I would have objected to the bill if it had contained this provision, although I am heartily in favor of giving private individuals relief. We worked on this measure, and it was understood that associations should not come in. The Reclamation Service has been against it; all parties interested in favor of this project have been against extending the right to organizations but in favor of letting the individuals have it.

Mr. SMITH of Idaho. This amendment is in the existing law.

Mr. STAFFORD. It is not in the existing bill, and the gentleman, in fairness to the Members, ought to withdraw the amendment.

Mr. RAKER. I think so; I do not think it is right to put it in.

Mr. SMITH of Idaho. Mr. Speaker, I have been instructed by the Committee on Arid Lands to offer the amendment, and I have done so. The fact that the gentleman from California did not happen to be at the committee meeting is not the fault of the committee.

Mr. RAKER. Let me say that I am there practically at every meeting unless I am at another meeting. It was decided at one meeting that this should not go in, and it was never called to my attention that you were going to offer it.

Mr. SINNOTT. Mr. Speaker, I will state that the committee held a subsequent meeting after the report was made on the bill, and it was ascertained that certain of these individuals entitled to relief and who needed relief could not get the relief without this provision being added to the bill, and therefore it was authorized. It is not that we are endeavoring to relieve these organizations—the settlers will get the benefit of it. As it is now, they act through the instrumentality of the associations.

Mr. RAKER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SINNOTT. Yes.

Mr. RAKER. Is it not a fact that any individual under any project can come in, whether he is in a district association or not, and get relief?

Mr. SINNOTT. No; I think not. Some act through irrigation districts. They pay their assessments through the county officers, and without this provision it is thought that the very men that we want to relieve could not get relief.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment to the amendment.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. STAFFORD) there were 26 ayes and 7 noes.

So the amendment to the committee amendment was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The question now is on the amendment as amended.

The question was taken, and the amendment as amended was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the third reading of the Senate bill.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. Craven, its Chief Clerk, announced that the Senate had passed bills and joint resolution of the following titles, in which the concurrence of the House of Representatives was requested:

S. 4146. An act permitting the State of Wyoming to reconvey certain lands to the United States and select other lands in lieu thereof, and providing for the patenting of certain lands to Natrona County, Wyo., for public-park purposes;

S. 425. An act authorizing the Attorney General of the United States to fix the salaries of United States attorneys and United States marshals of the several judicial districts of the United States within certain limits;

S. 4333. An act for the relief of Howard R. Gurney;

S. J. Res. 282. Joint resolution to amend the resolution of December 29, 1920, entitled "Joint resolution to create a joint committee on reorganization of the administrative branch of the Government"; and

S. 4071. An act for the relief of David C. Van Voorhis.

The message also announced that the Senate had insisted upon its amendment to the bill (H. R. 10003) to further amend and modify the war risk insurance act disagreed to by the House of Representatives, had agreed to the conference asked by the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. McCUMBER, Mr. SMOOT, and Mr. WILLIAMS as the conferees on the part of the Senate.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed without amendment bills of the following titles:

H. R. 2049. An act for the relief of the Delaware River Lightering Co.;

H. R. 3461. An act for the relief of Eugene Fazzi;

H. R. 3499. An act for the relief of the Atlas Lumber Co., Babcock & Willcox, Johnson, Jackson & Corning Co., and the C. H. Klein Brick Co.;

H. R. 3836. An act for the relief of Nolan P. Benner;

H. R. 4619. An act for the relief of the Link-Belt Co. of Philadelphia, Pa.;

H. R. 4620. An act for the relief of Th. Brovig;

H. R. 4622. An act for the relief of the Lloyd Mediterraneo Societa Italiana di Navigazione, owners of the Italian steamer Titania;

H. R. 5429. An act for the relief of Ephraim Lederer, collector of internal revenue for the first district of Pennsylvania;

H. R. 5475. An act for the relief of the Standard American Dredging Co.;

H. R. 5648. An act for the relief of Ike T. Boyles;

H. R. 6177. An act for the relief of the owner of the fishing smack Mary S. Dolbow;

H. R. 8214. An act to compensate the owners of the American steamship Vindal for damages and expenses in repairing the said steamship, and to make an appropriation therefor;

H. R. 9316. An act for the relief of Robert J. Ashe; and

H. R. 9887. An act for the relief of Pennsylvania Railroad Co.

SENATE BILLS REFERRED.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV Senate bills of the following titles were taken from the Speaker's table and referred to their appropriate committees, as indicated below:

S. 425. An act authorizing the Attorney General of the United States to fix the salaries of United States attorneys and United States marshals of the several judicial districts of the United States within certain limits; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

S. 3879. An act for the relief of William H. Lee; to the Committee on Claims.

S. 4071. An act for the relief of David C. Van Voorhis; to the Committee on Claims.

S. 4146. An act permitting the State of Wyoming to reconvey certain lands to the United States and select other lands in lieu thereof, and providing for the patenting of certain lands to Natrona County, Wyo., for public-park purposes; to the Committee on the Public Lands.

EXCHANGE OF CERTAIN SCHOOL LANDS IN WYOMING.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 11637) authorizing the Secretary of the Interior to approve indemnity selections in exchange for described granted school lands.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That upon the selection by the State of Wyoming under the provisions of sections 2275 and 2276, United States Revised Statutes, as amended by the act of February 28, 1891 (26 Stat. p. 796), and in accordance with the regulations of the Department of the Interior governing such selections of other lands approximately equal in area in exchange for tract No. 60, township 36 north, of range 69 west, of the sixth principal meridian in that State, which is a segregation by resurvey of granted school section 36 in said township, the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized to convey title to the State for the land so selected if found regular.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I move to strike out the last word. I would like to ask whether or not there is any opportunity for one owning land of little value under this bill to have it exchanged for mineral land or oil land or other valuable land?

Mr. VAILE. I will say that this takes care of only one section of land.

Mr. BLANTON. It is not a general provision?

Mr. VAILE. No.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

SUITS UNDER SOLDIERS AND SAILORS' CIVIL RELIEF ACT.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill H. R. 14144, to limit and fix the time within which suits may be brought or rights asserted in court arising out of the provisions of subdivision 3 of section 302 of the solders and sailors' civil relief act, approved March 18, 1918, being chapter 20, volume 40, General Statutes of the United States.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. BRIGGS. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, will the gentleman state what this bill is attempting to accomplish?

Mr. CHRISTOPHERSON. Mr. Speaker, the bill seeks to remove a doubt now existing as to all mortgage foreclosures by advertisement had while the soldiers and sailors' relief act was in force. Section 302, paragraph 3, of that act provides—

No warrant under a power of sale or under a judgment entered upon warrant of attorney to confess judgment contained in any such obligation shall be valid if made during the period of military service or within three months thereafter unless upon an order of sale previously granted by the court and a return thereto made and approved by the court.

It was perfectly proper for Congress to pass such an act, but the Supreme Court of Massachusetts in the case of Hoffman against Charlestown, reported in One hundred and twenty-first Northeastern Reporter, 15, extended its provisions beyond the intent of Congress, I believe, when it held that this act does apply to the equitable owner of the property as well as the record owner. Thereby the situation becomes such that any foreclosure conducted by advertisement while this act was in force is subject to this cloud; that is, the record does not disclose the equitable owner. Consequently every foreclosure that has been conducted during the time that this act has been in force is subject to that question, because there may be an equitable owner of that title not disclosed by the record, and not even known to the mortgagee.

The court held in this case that it made no difference whether the mortgagee knew of this equitable ownership. Therefore, under this holding in the Massachusetts case every title depending upon a foreclosure by advertising while this law was in force is subject to that attack. The purpose is by this bill to fix a reasonable time in which to assert any claim under said section 302 against a foreclosure. The bill fixes 90 days as a reasonable time. The statute has already run some two years since the soldiers and sailors relief act was repealed, and it seemed that 90 days would be sufficient time in view of the time that has already elapsed.

Mr. BRIGGS. This is the moratorium feature of the act, the one in which the Government granted moratorium to the soldiers.

Mr. CHRISTOPHERSON. Yes; and this bill requires those who have any rights against such foreclosures to assert them within the time specified in the bill.

Mr. BRIGGS. Does the gentleman think 90 days will be sufficient?

Mr. CHRISTOPHERSON. I believe so, in view of the time that the statute has already run. I think it is some two years now since this act ceased to be effective and repealed by the treaty of peace.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the bill as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That any person entitled to and claiming any right, title to, or interest in any real estate because of any failure to comply with the provisions of subdivision 3 of section 302 of the soldiers and sailors' civil relief act, approved March 18, 1918, being chapter 20, volume 40, General Statutes of the United States, in the foreclosure of a mortgage, or the sale upon a judgment, of such real estate shall be barred forever from asserting such claim unless the claim is successfully asserted in an action or proceeding, in a court of competent jurisdiction, commenced prior to the passage and approval of this act or within 90 days thereafter.

With the following committee amendment:

Page 1, line 3, strike out the words "and claiming" and insert the word "claim."

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the committee amendment.

The committee amendment was agreed to.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, I offer a formal amendment on page 2, line 4, to strike out the words "passage and."

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 2, line 4, strike out the words "passage and."

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

EASTERN BAND OF CHEROKEE INDIANS, NORTH CAROLINA.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (H. R. 5699), providing for the final disposition of the affairs of the Eastern Band of Cherokee Indians of North Carolina.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I am inclined to object to this, but will reserve my objection so that if the gentleman wishes to make some explanation of the bill he may do so. It is a bill of 18 pages. That is not the basis of my objection. I find upon reading the bill and the report that the United States Government at the present time has not and never has had any title whatsoever to these lands sought to be allotted to the Eastern Band of Cherokee Indians living in North Carolina. These lands were purchased from funds that this Eastern Band received out of moneys that were coming to them by reason of allotment to them as members originally of the Cherokee Band. They have lived in some sort of tribal relation. With the Government not having any title to the land and the bill providing that the Eastern Band shall convey the title to the National Government and then that the National Government shall allot the lands according to certain prescribed provisions, it seems we have a rather unusual arrangement. I have never known of the Government allotting any lands of Indians unless the title to those lands was in the National Government. I understand also that the State of North Carolina, exercising its sovereign rights over title to lands which was in individuals or tribes in that State, has legislated as to how these lands should be distributed. Why should the National Government now step in and determine the method of allotment over property over which it has no control whatsoever?

Mr. WEAVER. Mr. Chairman, to answer the gentleman would require a short statement of the history of the Cherokee people. When the Cherokee Indians were removed from western North Carolina and north Georgia under the treaty of 1835 a number of them refused to go. The United States Government by treaty with the Cherokee Indians in 1835 obligated itself to pay to those Indians about $5,000,000 for the land owned east of the Mississippi River. The Government finally had to resort to force in order to move some of those Indians west of the Mississippi. Some of them they were unable to get at all. They fled to the mountains and hid themselves in the hills and remained there for many years. Afterwards the Government of the United States collected these people together again and took the per capita money, their part of the $5,000,000 which the Government had obligated itself to pay for these lands, and through Col. W. H. Thomas, as agent for the Indians, it was invested in the present lands, about 60,000 acres, now owned and controlled by the Eastern Band of Cherokee Indians. It is true that in 1889 this band of Indians became incorporated under the laws of North Carolina, but this was for mere convenience, and they still maintain their tribal councils, elect their chiefs, and have held these lands as community property, and under the act of Congress of July 27, 1868, the Secretary of the Interior was authorized to take over and manage the affairs of the Eastern Band of Cherokee Indians, just as the affairs of all other Indians. The Government has so managed and exercised supervision over them by direct act of Congress. The council of these Indians met a year or two ago and asked the Government to partition this land among the Indians and allot to each member of the tribe his part in severalty. They are anxious to do this. They wish this legislation passed in order that they may settle up their affairs and relieve the Interior Department from supervision over them. It is one case where a large number of Indians, wards of the Government, will be allowed to hold their property severally and manage their own affairs. This legislation looks to that end. I do hope the gentleman from Wisconsin will not interpose an objection.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, there are many other objections involved in this bill. We should not in the closing days of Congress consider such bills. I have read it and also the report. It is too important for us to launch into this policy at this time.

Mr. DALLINGER. I call the gentleman's attention to the fact that this bill was drawn by the Indian Bureau, and it follows the general line of legislation passed in regard to the Five Civilized Tribes in Oklahoma.

Mr. STAFFORD. The report so states. It is too important to be considered, Mr. Speaker.

Miss ROBERTSON. Mr. Speaker, I hope the gentleman will withdraw his objection.

Mr. STAFFORD. I withhold the objection at the request of the lady from Oklahoma. I am always considerate of anything she may wish to suggest.

Miss ROBERTSON. Mr. Speaker, we have given this very careful consideration in committee. I know these Indian people. My grandparents went with those who went West when these stayed East.

Mr. STAFFORD. By reading the report it brings me to the conclusion these Indians are not very far advanced in intelligence; that is the trouble, that they have not reached the same stage of advancement as the Indians who have crossed into the Indian Territory. I want to do all possible in fairness to the gentleman who represents these Indians, but I could not see where it was proper for the bill to be considered by unanimous consent.

Miss ROBERTSON. I merely desire to say as a member of that committee we gave very careful attention to this bill and I agreed that it ought to come up. I believe it is right, but of course——

The SPEAKER. Objection is heard.

MUNICIPAL COURT, DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

The next business in order on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (H. R. 13998) making section 1535c of the Code of Law for the District of Columbia applicable to the municipal court of the District of Columbia, and for other purposes.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. HILL. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I would like to ask the chairman of the committee. This court is confined exclusively to civil cases and does not take up criminal cases?

Mr. VOLSTEAD. That is right.

Mr. HILL. And at one time they had six judges and now they have five?

Mr. VOLSTEAD. Yes.

Mr. HILL. And those judges do not engage in private practice, but devote their whole time to the service of the court?

Mr. VOLSTEAD. Yes.

Mr. HILL. I withdraw the reservation of the right to object.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I hardly think in the closing days of the session we ought to attempt to fix the salary of these five municipal judges. I am in favor of increasing their salary, but we have not the time to determine what should be their proper salary. It may be that the judges of the other courts should have their salary raised also.

Mr. VOLSTEAD. Yes.

Mr. STAFFORD. If the gentleman will agree to eliminate section 2 and only have the substantive legislative feature of the bill considered, I would have no objection.

Mr. VOLSTEAD. I think it is very unfortunate, but I am willing for the amendment to be offered, and I shall make no opposition to section 2 going out.

Mr. STAFFORD. With that understanding, I have no objection.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That hereafter section 1535c of the Code of Law for the District of Columbia, permitting equitable defenses to be interposed in actions at law, shall be applicable to proceedings now pending in the municipal court of the District of Columbia as well as to actions hereafter brought in said court.

SEC. 2. That hereafter each of the judges of the municipal court of the District of Columbia shall receive an annual salary of $5,000, payable monthly.

Mr. VOLSTEAD. Mr. Speaker, I move to strike out section 2.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 1, strike out all of section 2.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. McSWAIN. Mr. Speaker, I move to strike out the last word. I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD on the bill (H. R. 14300) regulating interstate commerce with respect to the transportation of coal.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The extension of remarks referred to above is as follows:

Mr. McSWAIN. Mr. Speaker, I feel it my duty to call to the attention of the Congress and to the country one more time before the Sixty-seventh Congress passes into history the tremendous issues involved in the just and righteous and permanent settlement of the coal problem.

I have introduced two bills relating to this matter, but am advised that there will be no action upon them nor upon any bills relating to this question until after the report of the Fact Finding Commission shall have been filed with the next Congress. The result is, Mr. Speaker, that the profiteers will continue to pile up their unconscionable profits upon coal that must be bought in order to keep American industries going and in order to keep the American "home fires burning." In this connection, I call attention to the preliminary report of the said commission made on January 15, 1923. There are some high spots in that report that are worthy to emphasize and to disseminate.

The first important proposition is that there is no logical reason why there should be a shortage of coal anywhere in the United States at any time. It is a fact that coal is to be found in all of the States except 13, and mines are being operated profitably in 29 of the States, and there is enough coal here to meet the needs of our own people for at least 1,000 years and maybe much longer. Another important fact is that there are only about two and one-half billion dollars invested in the coal mining industries as against about $80,000,000,000 in farms and about the same amount in manufacturing industries.

Still another striking fact is that the railroads use nearly one-third of all the coal produced in the United States and that only 10 per cent is used for heating the homes of the people and the balance is used in factories, in the making of gas, and in public utilities, and a small part is exported and for shipping. Consequently the argument we often hear made that the coal industry is not stable and the price fluctuates because people will not buy coal and store it in their cellars during the early summer is shown to be no reason for the fluctuations. Ten per cent of the production is too slight to cause such serious dislocation in the whole industry. The statement also is made that the charges of the railroad and the wholesaler or broker and the retailer usually exceed the price of the coal at the mines. This is a very conservative statement. With coal selling through the country at about $12 per ton for bituminous coal and $16 to $18 per ton for anthracite coal, we believe that the facts will show that the price of the coal at the mouth of the mine is only about one-third of what the ultimate consumer pays. This spread in the price of a commodity which does not have to be manufactured and only to be transported is entirely unjustifiable.

PROFITEERING CONCEDED.

We are therefore not surprised to find that this commission of impartial and disinterested men with wide experience in affairs of business and of state concludes with the statement that "large profits" have been made by coal operators, brokers, and retailers, and that these profits are so disproportionate to the cost of the coal and of the service rendered in connection therewith as to justify the use of the word "profiteer." It is very significant that the commission finds that the labor employed in the mining of coal has found employment for only about 66⅔ per cent of the time on an average for a period covering about 30 years. This seems to justify the statement that we have often seen, that the miners are demanding an opportunity to work a larger number of hours each week and, failing in this, that they are compelled to receive a generous wage per diem in order to maintain themselves and their families.

Mr. Speaker, I have been in some of the coal-mining districts and have been down in some of the mines and have been in some of the homes of the miners; and while their per diem wage seems to be large, yet when we realize that they are able to work only two-thirds of the time, and when we see the dangers that surround them, and when we read in the newspapers almost daily how the lives of miners are snuffed out by the score and by the hundred, and when we see the harsh and squalid conditions under which they and their families must live in order to be close enough to the mines to work, we must in all fairness concede that there is merit in their plea to be allowed to work more days during the year.

SPECULATION DESTROYS STABILITY.

Mr. Speaker, it is obvious from the report of these fair and impartial examiners that the trouble with the coal industry is that practically everybody connected with it is a speculator. We find the statement made that operators, as a general thing, will contract for the sale and delivery of only about 60 per cent of the output of their respective mines, and the balance of 40 per cent is left free to speculate on. As a matter of fact, Mr. Speaker, the whole 100 per cent of the output is practically free and not bound by contract, because what is called a "contract" is not properly so described. It does not bind the operator in a strict sense. He is given two loopholes through which he may jump at will. The first is that his deliveries upon contract are not to be made when his output is interrupted by strikes or other unavoidable occurrences, and he is left to be the judge of what is a strike and of what is unavoidable; and if it be found to his advantage to get rid of a contract by a strike, then he could deliberately and purposely bring on a strike. Then the contract also excuses the operator from performance if he can not get coal cars in which to make deliveries, and again he alone is in possession of facts and he alone is the judge, and when he wants to he can use coal cars to fill high-priced profiteering orders and let his contracts wait a more convenient season.

Another peculiar thing about these coal contracts is that they reserve to the operator the right to change the price of coal under contract if the wage scale should change. The result is that manufacturers and coal dealers in the South Atlantic States who had pieces of paper, which they supposed to be contracts, under which they innocently thought that they would obtain coal for the next 12 months at the price of $1.95 per ton, found coal coming to them—when it did come at all, when it suited the pleasure of the operators to send same, when the operators were unable to find buyers at the high and speculative prices that prevailed for a season—these same manufacturers and dealers found their coal being billed to them at $2.95 per ton and at $3.05 per ton, instead of $1.95 per ton.

MANUFACTURERS MAKE REAL CONTRACTS.

Now, these manufacturers in my section of the country can not exactly understand why it is that when they make a contract to manufacture and deliver cotton cloth at a given price per yard that they must keep their contracts and deliver the cloth, even though the price of labor should rise, and the price of cotton rise, and the price of coal rise. Mr. Speaker, what the coal industry needs is "stabilization." The American people are primarily interested in some standardization and fixity of price and quantity. While we should like to have our coal reasonably cheap, we are more vitally interested in a steady and sufficient quantity of coal and in some certainty as to price of coal than we are in mere cheapness of coal. Therefore, Mr. Speaker, we must proceed to eliminate the element of speculation. Speculation feeds upon uncertainty. Without variation in price and in quantity, the speculator would have to go out of business.

RAILROADS HOLD THE KEY.

Upon an intimate and analytic consideration of this coal problem we find that the railroad is the key to the problem. The 180 railroads that distribute the coal from the mouth of the mine to all parts of the country and ultimately to every home and fireside constitute the narrow neck of the bottle through which the contents of the bottle must pass. With so many men digging coal and so many coal mines open that they can supply all the needs of the country by working only two-thirds of the time, we see that scarcity of coal at any place is due to some defect in the distribution of coal.

A REMEDY SUGGESTED.

Therefore, Mr. Speaker, I introduced on September 19, 1922, a bill which I fully explained at the time as designed to stabilize the distribution of coal. Briefly, that bill contemplates conferring power upon the Interstate Commerce Commission to prescribe a uniform contract that must be employed by buyers and sellers of coal to pass through interstate commerce. It requires all such contracts when executed to be registered with the Interstate Commerce Commission and then requires the Interstate Commerce Commission to see that those contracts are carried out by requiring the railroads to furnish the cars and haul them. Then again, on February 12, 1923, I introduced a bill seeking to regulate another feature of the railroad problem that my investigations have uncovered. I have been induced to believe from facts and circumstances that the "bootlegging" of coal has been made possible by reason of some undue influence being exerted by coal speculators upon certain operating agents of railroads, such as superintendents, yardmasters, and so forth, having to do with the placing and movement of cars.

It may be that a school or a public utility has a prior order for coal, but unless the railroad furnishes a car in which to haul the coal the coal will not move. During the periods of scarce coal, when that scarcity is attributable to lack of coal cars, we find the "bootlegging" speculator going up and down the land offering those who are most in need of coal to insure deliveries to them if they will pay the necessary price. Now, Mr. Speaker, what I ask and what I have a right to ask in the name of the American people who love justice and fairness is this: How can this speculator, this bootlegger, get coal delivered when a man who has a contract six months old and has a prior order signed by Government authorities can not get coal? Consequently I introduced this bill on February 12, 1923, to punish any agent or employee of a railroad who shows illegal and improper preference to the movement of cars for any person, firm, or corporation, and requires every such agent or employee of an interstate railroad to see that cars are placed and moved in the order of priority fixed by law, and if there be no law then priority is fixed by the order of time in which demands for cars are filed.

BOOTLEGGING VERSUS FAIR BUSINESS.

Mr. Speaker, it is my firm belief that if the bootlegger of coal did not have some secret and improper influence over certain controlling and operating officials of railroads, then these bootleggers could not handle coal as they do, and therefore they should and would go out of business.

I am quite sure that the cotton-manufacturing business could not endure 12 months upon a speculative basis. It is stabilized and it is therefore sound and satisfactory. The cotton manufacturer places his contracts far in advance for the entire output of his mills. He can not continue manufacturing very long unless he has orders. He dares not pile up indefinitely in storage his manufactured product, because that would make him a speculator. But, when his contracts in advance are signed with responsible firms who can be compelled to keep their contracts, then the manufacturer goes into the market and buys from responsible sellers cotton enough to manufacture that cloth, and he knows with reasonable certainty what his labor will cost, and if he only knew what his coal would cost then practically every element in his process would be certain. I contend that he is entitled to know what the coal will cost him. Therefore, Mr. Speaker, why should not the coal operator be willing to contract by a binding contract for the delivery of 100 per cent of his coal? The American public expects to pay the coal operator a good profit on the coal in addition to the cost. If the coal operator would contract 100 per cent of his output, then he could keep the miners working 100 per cent of the time each year, rather than two-thirds of the time. If the bills I have introduced were enacted into law, then the coal operators would be of necessity required to contract for their entire output, and therefore their miners would be steadily and constantly employed and the business would be standardized and stabilized.

It is true that not every mine in the country would be kept working 100 per cent of the time. In fact the result would be that those mines that can be most economically operated, and therefore can underbid the others, would be kept at work 100 per cent of the time and the other mines would have to close, and they would stay closed until the supply in the most favorably situated mines should be exhausted, and then the digging would be resumed in the other mines. It is a simple and necessary law of progress; it is the survival of the fittest; it is the law of competition that prevails among manufacturers, among merchants, and among farmers. The farmer who does not hold down the cost of production soon finds that he is sold out by the foreclosure of a mortgage on his home. The merchant or manufacturer who does not hold down the cost of production soon finds himself in bankruptcy. Therefore, Mr. Speaker, the coal industry will not be stabilized and standardized until it is subject to the same inexorable and uniform law of competition.

PROFITEERING IN COAL, A NECESSITY, IS SINFUL.

Mr. Speaker, it is not just, it is not right, it is not reasonable that the coal operators and their allies, the speculators and the bootleggers, should be extorting from the American industries and from the American householders at least one thousand million dollars per year in unjustifiable and excessive profits in order that we may have a sufficient supply of coal to keep industries moving and to keep our homes warm. I submit that things that are wrong can not long endure. This fair, unbiased fact-finding commission says that there has been "profiteering," and we know that the profiteering will average at least $2 per ton on five hundred million tons of coal a year. Therefore, we find the families of the coal profiteers, the speculators and the bootleggers, rolling upon the sands of Palm Beach with their profuse diamonds glittering in the sunlight while their victims are suffering and shuddering and shivering around an insufficiently fed heater in New England and in other sections of the country.

We hear that these coal speculators and profiteers and bootleggers heap up unconscionable profits amounting into the tens of thousands of dollars within a short space of 30 days, while legitimate manufacturers of cotton and of furniture and of shoes and of machinery are happy if they are able to pay their taxes and to declare dividends of 8 or 10 or 12 per cent. Also we find the American farmers, with their $80,000,000,000 invested and with the work of 30,000,000 of men, women, and children in the fields through sunshine and rain, through summer's heat and winter's cold producing everything that our 110,000,000 people must have in order to live, must have in order to eat and wear, and yet these farmers for the last several years have made no profits and have in fact lost substantially of their investments and have lost their labor and their time, and, sad, though it may be, some of them have almost lost courage and have well-nigh lost confidence.

DELAY MEANS MORE PROFITEERING.

Mr. Speaker, this Congress should have taken up the coal proposition when it was convened in April, 1921. We knew then, as we had known for several years, that the specter of winter would breed its offspring of coal speculators and bootleggers. We knew the facts then just as this unbiased and disinterested commission has found them, but we could have appointed such a commission in April, 1921, and we should have then enacted legislation that would have saved the American people by this time at least $2,000,000,000. But we closed our eyes.

The majority Members of Congress have stood bound hand and foot by a system of rules that puts all power into the hands of a few men, and then, when the situation became acute, in the fall of 1922, these few men generously gave us a Fact Finding Commission. They gave us this commission to find out something which everybody knew. They simply wanted to prove that 2 and 2 make 4, and the result is that the coal speculators and bootleggers get by the present winter, and the commission will not report until December, 1923, and then no legislation can get by this oligarchy until late in the next winter to save the American people from the predatory methods of the coal speculators and the bootleggers. So these same despoilers of the public will for the next winter at least take the last $1,000,000,000 of unearned profits.

So, Mr. Speaker, we are compelled to ask: How long will the American people tolerate this endless-chain game of "hide and seek"? How long will they be tickled with this political manipulation and quieted by this political pacifier, which might be entitled "Now you see it and now you don't"?

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read the third time, was read the third time, and passed.

EXTENDING BENEFITS OF SECTION 14, PAY READJUSTMENT ACT.

The next business in order on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (H. R. 14077) to extend the benefits of section 14 of the pay readjustment act of June 10, 1922, to validate certain payments made to National Guard and reserve officers and warrant officers, and for other purposes.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of this bill?

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I wish to inquire whether the gentleman will agree to eliminate section 3. I will say to the gentleman that section 3 is included in a Senate amendment to the War Department appropriation bill, and before the bill comes out of conference there will be embodied the provision of section 3.

Mr. FROTHINGHAM. Mr. Speaker, so far as I am concerned, speaking for the committee, I have no objection——

Mr. STAFFORD. Of course, we do not want to have duplication. It is now included as a Senate amendment in the War Department appropriation bill, and while the conferees have not reached that item I do not think there will be any question it will be reached and agreed to.

Mr. McKENZIE. It is the only point involved, if the gentleman from Wisconsin can assure us that will be carried in the appropriation bill.

Mr. STAFFORD. Although we have not reached that item, I do not think there will be any question it will be carried. I also wish to inquire, under the reservation of objection, as to this first section applying to reserve officers, and particularly referring to reserve warrant officers. I do not see anything in the report which would extend the provision to reserve warrant offices or even reserve officers. What is the need of extending this provision of the national defense act to warrant officers?

Mr. FROTHINGHAM. Mr. Speaker, I brought this bill in originally and it applied merely to National Guard officers who have done their duty at camp, who were paid, and then under a subsequent decision of the Attorney General they were told they would have to give back the money that they received for quarters; that they were not on the same basis as the Regular Army officer; but when the bill came before the committee we felt that the reserve officers ought to be included and also warrant officers, who I did not know before existed anywhere except in the Navy, but apparently the only warrant officers are the bandmasters, and these reserve warrant officers and reserve officers, of course, when they go to camp they would be placed on the same basis as Regular Army officers and National Guard officers, so I was perfectly willing to have this section put in the bill.

Mr. STAFFORD. Well, the committee amendment will limit the applicability of the provisions of this section to reserve officers and reserve warrant officers. Without the committee amendment it would apply to warrant officers of any service mentioned in the table of the pay readjustment act.

Mr. FROTHINGHAM. I understand that that applies to the regular warrant officers, so that the only need in this legislation is to take care of the reserve National Guard.

Mr. McKENZIE. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FROTHINGHAM. Yes.

Mr. McKENZIE. I wish to say to the gentleman from Wisconsin—and I think he is perfectly familiar with the facts—that in the drafting of the service pay bill we put language into that bill to the effect that wherever the National Guard or the reserve rendered the same service and held similar grades to those in the Regular Army they should receive equal pay. Now, so far as warrant officers in the Army are concerned, the gentleman from Wisconsin will remember that the grade of field clerk was abolished in the Army reorganization bill and the grade of warrant officer created. However, in the National Guard and in the reserve the only warrant officers that they have are, as the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. FROTHINGHAM] has said, bandmasters. I presume they will have little to do; but in order that the legislation should be perfectly plain, and that no question should arise hereafter, this is an attempt to put them all on the same level, where they will receive the same compensation for the same service rendered. That is the only purpose.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, I wish to inquire of either gentleman whether under existing law reserve officers are entitled to a commutation or allowance for quarters?

Mr. McKENZIE. Well, that was the understanding that we had when they were called out for camp duty. As a matter of fact, not many of them will claim pay for that particular purpose. But we felt that the law should apply to them all alike. The comptroller, however, has held that it does not, and therefore they asked for this legislation. It is in the interest of the National Guard.

Mr. STAFFORD. I am inquiring more as to the effect on the reserve officers. My understanding was that when the reserve officers went into camp for summer training they did not get any allowance for quarters.

Mr. McKENZIE. The comptroller held they would not.

Mr. BRIGGS. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STAFFORD. Yes.

Mr. BRIGGS. Is it not a fact that these officers all understood that they would have these allowances, and that that was the construction the War Department put upon the act? On that assurance they went to the camps and underwent the expense, and now the comptroller holds that they were not entitled to the allowance.

Mr. HILL. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. STAFFORD. Yes.

Mr. HILL. I would like to ask the gentleman from Wisconsin not to object to any legislation that makes it clear that there is no difference between the National Guard and the reserve. The gentleman will remember that last year there was a difficulty about reserve officers receiving 15 days' pay, they only receiving pay for 14 days. On the appropriation bill there is a provision taking care of that for the National Guard, and the gentleman's subcommittee has taken care of it and put both the National Guard and the reserve officers on the same basis. I ask the gentleman that he will allow it to remain the same way in this bill.

Mr. STAFFORD. I question if we should change it, as suggested, as to reserve warrant officers. I withdraw the reservation.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That officers and warrant officers of the National Guard, while participating in exercises or performing the duties provided for by sections 94, 97, and 99 of the national defense act, approved June 3, 1916, as amended, and reserve officers and reserve warrant officers of any of the services mentioned in the title of the pay readjustment act of June 10, 1922, while on active duty, including duty for training purposes, shall receive the allowances prescribed for officers and warrant officers of the Regular services under sections 5, 6, and 11 of the said pay act, and payments heretofore made for rental allowances to officers and warrant officers of the National Guard or reserves while attending camps of instruction or service schools are hereby validated.

SEC. 2. That service rendered by National Guard officers during temporary Federal recognition, prior to December 15, 1922, shall be deemed to have been rendered in compliance with the provisions of section 75, national defense act, approved June 3, 1916, and all payments heretofore or hereafter made therefor are hereby validated and authorized.

Mr. TILSON. Mr. Speaker, there seems to be a committee amendment to section 1 of the bill. Should not that be acted upon?

The SPEAKER. This is the first reading of the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

Committee amendment: Page 1, line 7, after the word "and," insert the word "reserve."

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 3. That the laws providing for land-grant deductions shall not apply to travel at 4 cents per mile heretofore performed under the War Department appropriation act, approved June 30, 1922 (Public No. 259, 67th Cong.), by members of the Officers' Reserve Corps.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, I move to strike out section 3.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Wisconsin moves to strike out section 3. The question is on agreeing to that motion.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 4. That hereafter the payments authorized by section 3, act of September 14, 1922 (Public, No. 299, Sixty-seventh Congress), may include the entire amount lawfully accruing to such officers as pay, allowances, and mileage on account of such service, and, including pay and mileage for their return home, may be paid to the officers during said period and prior to their departure from the camp or other place at which such service is performed.

Committee amendment: "SEC. 5. That payments heretofore made to captains and lieutenants belonging to organizations of the National Guard for drills provided for in section 109, national defense act, at which at least 50 per cent of the commissioned strength and 60 per cent or more of the enlisted strength, but not less than 60 per cent of the required recognition strength, attended and participated for the required time be, and the same are hereby, validated."

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. FROTHINGHAM. Mr. Speaker, I ask that we be permitted to change the numbering of the sections. Section 3 was dropped out.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, the request will be agreed to.

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be read the third time, was read the third time, and passed.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the next bill.

AMENDING THE HOMESTEAD LAW.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (S. 3103) to amend section 2294, United States Revised Statutes, relating to homesteads.

The title of the bill was read.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of this bill?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 2294, Revised Statutes of the United States, as amended by the act of March 11, 1902 (32 Stat. p. 63), and the act of March 4, 1904 (33 Stat. p. 59), be amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 2294. That hereafter all proofs, affidavits, and oaths of any kind whatsoever required to be made by applicants and entrymen under the homestead, preemption, timber-culture, desert-land, and timber and stone acts may, in addition to those now authorized to take such affidavits, proofs, and oaths, be made before any United States commissioner or commissioner of the court exercising Federal jurisdiction in the Territory or before the judge or clerk of any court of record in the county, parish, or land district in which the lands are situated: Provided, That in cases where because of geographic or topographic conditions there is a qualified officer nearer or more accessible to the land involved, but outside the county and land district, affidavits, proofs, and oaths may be taken before such officer: Provided further, That in case the affidavits, proofs, and oaths hereinbefore mentioned be taken outside of the county or land district in which the land is located the applicant must show by affidavit satisfactory to the Commissioner of the General Land Office that it was taken before the nearest or most accessible officer qualified to take such affidavits, proofs, and oaths; but such showing by affidavit need not be made in making final proof if the proof be taken in the town or city where the newspaper is published in which the final proof notice is printed. The proof, affidavit, and oath when so made and duly subscribed, or which may have heretofore been so made and duly subscribed, shall have the same force and effect as if made before the register and receiver when transmitted to them with the fees and commissions allowed and required by law. That if any witness making such proof or any applicant making such affidavit or oath shall knowingly, willfully, or corruptly swear falsely to any material matter contained in said proofs, affidavits, or oaths, he shall be deemed guilty of perjury, and shall be liable to the same pains and penalties as if he had sworn falsely before the register. That the fees for entries and for final proofs when made before any other officer than the register and receiver shall be as follows:

"For each affidavit, 25 cents.

"For each deposition of claimant or witness, when not prepared by the officer, 25 cents.

"For each deposition of claimant or witness prepared by the officer, $1.

"Any officer demanding or receiving a greater sum for such service shall be guilty of misdemeanor and upon conviction shall be punished for each offense by a fine not exceeding $100."

The SPEAKER. The question is on the third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be read the third time, was read the third time, and passed.

MINING ON THE PUBLIC DOMAIN.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the next bill.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (S. 3794) to amend section 35 of the act entitled "An act to promote the mining of coal, phosphate, oil, oil shale, gas, and sodium on the public domain," approved February 25, 1920.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. BLANTON. I object, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. Objection is made. The Clerk will report the next bill.

Mr. SMITH of Idaho. Mr. Speaker, I will ask the gentleman from Texas to withhold his objection a moment until I can explain this bill.

Under the existing law, the money coming from royalties on oil is held in the Federal Treasury until the end of the fiscal year. This bill simply provides that the money shall be paid out at the end of each quarter, so that the States, counties, the reclamation fund, and the Federal Treasury who are entitled to this division of the fund may have it quarterly instead of annually. It will be a very great convenience.

Mr. BLANTON. Are the States that hard up?

Mr. SMITH of Idaho. They can utilize this money advantageously, and it will be very acceptable for roads and schools. There is no occasion for it to remain in the Federal Treasury nine months beyond the time when it might be divided.

Mr. BLANTON. I know that individuals get hard up sometimes, but I did not know that the States of the great West ever did.

Mr. SMITH of Idaho. Some of the States need this money for road building and schools. It is legislation suggested by the Secretary of the Interior and is a departmental bill. I have no personal interest in it.

Mr. BLANTON. Is it recommended by the Secretary of the Interior?

Mr. SMITH of Idaho. Yes; as very wise legislation.

Mr. BLANTON. I withdraw my objection.

Mr. STAFFORD. Reserving the right to object, are these reclamation funds under the control of the Secretary of the Interior or of the Secretary of the Treasury?

Mr. SMITH of Idaho. The funds are under the control of the Secretary of the Treasury, but of course they can only be paid out on an appropriation by Congress.

Mr. STAFFORD. I have no objection to the fund being paid quarterly if it is not going to inconvenience the Treasury officials. The question I should like to ask is whether it is feasible from the administrative standpoint for the Treasury to determine each quarter the amount of money that is coming to the respective States under the allotment of the reclamation fund.

Mr. SMITH of Idaho. The only additional trouble will be the issuance of a warrant, after adding up the receipts, each quarter instead of at the end of the year.

Mr. STAFFORD. There is nothing in the report to show whether it is practicable from an administrative standpoint. This amount is changing continuously, as I understand.

Mr. SMITH of Idaho. It accumulates.

Mr. STAFFORD. It accumulates continuously? It is an ever-receptive fund?

Mr. SMITH of Idaho. Yes.

Mr. STAFFORD. The Treasury Department at the end of the year will know how much should be paid to each State under the percentage plan?

Mr. SMITH of Idaho. Yes.

Mr. STAFFORD. But I have some doubt whether the Treasury Department will know how much should be paid to each State at the end of each quarter.

Mr. SMITH of Idaho. It is just a matter of adding up the accretions each quarter.

Mr. STAFFORD. But the accretions do not come in every quarter.

Mr. SMITH of Idaho. Oh, yes; they come in constantly.

Mr. STAFFORD. They are coming in all the time. Now let me ask the gentleman how soon after the fiscal year is ended does the Treasury Department issue its warrant to the respective States? How long does it take the Secretary of the Treasury to determine just how much each State is entitled to under the law?

Mr. SMITH of Idaho. I could not answer that definitely, but I do not think it is over a week or 10 days.

Mr. STAFFORD. In the Post Office Department it takes several weeks and months before the department is able to tell how much the salary of a postmaster will be.

Mr. SMITH of Idaho. That is a different proposition.

Mr. BLANTON. I ask for the regular order. We have found out what the bill is.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. STAFFORD. I object.

Mr. SMITH of Idaho. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that this bill may retain its place on the calendar.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman asks unanimous consent that the bill retain its place on the calendar. Is there objection?

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. When again could this bill be brought up?

The SPEAKER. The Chiar is unable to answer.

Mr. BLANTON. Never.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. That is what I thought.

Mr. BLANTON. But the gentleman would rather have it die on the calendar than to die somewhere else.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Reserving the right to object, I should like to ask the gentleman from Idaho a question. I notice, in lines 5 to 10, inclusive, of page 2 of this bill, there is a provision that 37½ per cent of the amounts derived from royalties, bonuses, and rentals shall be paid by the Secretary of the Treasury to the States in which the leased lands are situated. Would that cover the Teapot Dome lease?

Mr. SMITH of Idaho. If the Teapot Dome lease comes within the provisions of the oil leasing law, it would.

Mr. STAFFORD. That is the existing law. The gentleman will notice that the last proviso of this bill says that all moneys which may accrue to the United States under the provisions of this act from lands within the naval petroleum reserves shall be deposited in the Treasury as "miscellaneous receipts." The Teapot Dome lease is a naval petroleum reserve, and the original enactment did not provide for the allotmnet of those funds to the various States. It excepted those funds in the original leasing law.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Inasmuch as this was proposed by the Secretary of the Interior, and inasmuch as the proposition is to give such percentage of the royalties of leased oil lands to the different States, I am unwilling so late in the session to permit anything to be done which will look like a ratification by the House of Representatives of that Teapot Dome lease. Therefore I object.

The SPEAKER. Objection is made. The Clerk will report the next bill.

SOLDIERS AND SAILORS' HOMESTEAD ENTRIES IN ALASKA.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill H. R. 7762, to provide for soldiers and sailors' homestead entries in Alaska.

The Clerk read the title to the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There was no objection.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the substitute be read in lieu of the original bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Wisconsin?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the substitute bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That from and after the passage of this act officers, soldiers, sailors, or marines who served in the Army or Navy of the United States in the war with Germany, or in the war with Spain, or during the suppression of the insurrection in the Philippines, and have been honorably separated or discharged therefrom, or placed in the Regular Army or Naval Reserve, in addition to the rights and privileges at present provided by the homestead laws, shall be entitled, in the event of making homestead entry in the Territory of Alaska, to a period of one year from date of entry within which to begin residence upon the land and thereafter show compliance with the homestead law: Provided, That in the event such an entry shall be relinquished at any time prior to actual residence upon the land by the entryman, for not less than one year, lands so relinquished shall not be subject to entry for a period of 60 days after the filing and notation of the relinquishment in the local land office, and shall, after the expiration of such 60-day period, be subject to entry by the first qualified applicant.

SEC. 2. That the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized to make any and all regulations necessary to carry this act into effect.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the committee amendment.

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read the third time, was read the third time, and passed.

GRANTING CERTAIN LANDS TO THE CITY OF SKAGWAY, ALASKA.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill H. R. 12171, to grant certain lands to the city of Skagway, Alaska, for a public park.

The Clerk read the title to the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

A bill to grant certain lands to the city of Skagway, Alaska, for a public park.

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to convey to the city of Skagway, Alaska, for use as a public park, that certain portion of unsurveyed public land adjacent to the city of Skagway, Alaska, which is bounded on the east by the Skagway River, on the south by Lynn Canal, on the west by Lynn Canal and Long Bay, an arm of Lynn Canal, and on the north by a line running from a point approximately 400 feet north of Alpine Bridge, on the west bank of the Skagway River, in an approximately westerly direction to Long Bay, on Lynn Canal, the land embraced in these boundaries containing approximately 250 acres: Provided, That the grant hereby made is, and the patent issued thereunder shall be, subject to all legal rights heretofore acquired by any person or persons in or to the above-described premises or any part thereof and now existing under and by virtue of the laws of the United States: Provided further, That there shall be reserved to the United States all coal, oil, or other mineral deposits that may be found in the lands so granted and all necessary use of the lands for extracting the same: And provided further, That the lands hereby authorized to be conveyed, as hereinbefore set forth, and all portions thereof, shall be held and used by or for the said grantee for the purpose herein specified, and if the lands shall cease to be so used for a period of three years at any one time, they shall revert to the United States, and this condition shall be expressed in the patent to be issued under the terms of this act:

With the following committee amendment:

Page 2, line 18, strike out the period at the end of the line, insert a colon, and add the following:

"And provided further, That the land to be conveyed to the city of Skagway, Alaska, shall be paid for at the rate of $1.25 per acre."

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the committee amendment.

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read the third time, was read the third time, and passed.

AMENDING SECTION 2 OF THE LEGISLATIVE, EXECUTIVE, AND JUDICIAL APPROPRIATION ACT, APPROVED JULY 31, 1894.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill H. R. 13434, to amend section 2 of the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation act, approved July 31, 1894.

The Clerk read the title to the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, this is included in a Senate amendment to the War Department bill, and as some action will be taken by the conferees, I object.

DAM ACROSS POTOMAC RIVER, NEAR WILLIAMSPORT, MD.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill H. R. 13554, authorizing the construction, maintenance, and operation of a dam and other structures across or in the Potomac River, at or near Williamsport, Washington County, Md.

The Clerk read the title to the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I think there ought to be some explanation of this bill, and I reserve an objection.

Mr. DENISON. This bill is to authorize the Williamsport Power Co. to construct a dam across the river near Williamsport, Md. The dam is to be used to impound water for a power plant which is to be built on the banks of the Potomac and connected in some way with a coal company at some distance away. This is not to be used for the creation of a water power, but only in connection with the steam power.

Mr. STAFFORD. Where is Williamsport?

Mr. DENISON. It is 75 or 80 miles up the river from Washington, near Hagerstown.

Mr. STAFFORD. It is unusual to authorize such legislation, but on reading the bill it seems to safeguard the interests of all concerned.

Mr. DENISON. I will state to the gentleman that the Committee on Interstate Commerce gave the bill very careful consideration. The attorney general of the State of Maryland and Mr. ZIHLMAN, the author of the bill, came before the committee and made full statements with regard to the matter. All public rights are reserved and safeguarded. The company that is going to put this plant there owns the land between the canal and the river. It is located between the Potomac River and the Cumberland Canal, where the canal bends out somewhat from the river. The company owns the land and they are going to put a power plant there, and they want to put in this dam with an intake and an outtake connection with the river, so as to hold a fresh supply of water for steam purposes. We give them no right to construct a water-power plant, but if at any time the Government wants to utilize that part of the river for water purposes, they have a right to submerge the dam or destroy or remove it without payment of damages to anyone.

Mr. STAFFORD. I presume the reason they do not exercise their power under the general dam law is because that requires the dam to have provision made for navigation?

Mr. DENISON. I suppose so.

Mr. STAFFORD. This has no navigable feature connected with the project?

Mr. DENISON. None whatever.

Mr. BLANTON. And this bill will not cost the Government anything?

Mr. DENISON. No; not a cent.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I withdraw my reservation of objection.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Williamsport Power Co., a corporation organized and existing under the laws of the State of Maryland, its successors and assigns, is hereby authorized to construct, maintain, and operate, at a point suitable to the interests of navigation, a dam and other structures across or in the Potomac River at or near Williamsport, Washington County, Md.: Provided, That the work shall not be commenced until the plans therefor have been submitted to and approved by the Chief of Engineers, United States Army, and by the Secretary of War: Provided further, That this act shall not be construed to authorize the use of such dam and/or other structures to develop water power or generate hydroelectric energy.

SEC. 2. That the authority granted by this act shall cease and be null and void unless the actual construction of the dam and other structures hereby authorized is commenced within one year and completed within three years from the date hereof: Provided, That from and after thirty days' notice from the Federal Power Commission, or other authorized agency of the United States, to said company or its successors, that desirable water-power development will be interfered with by the existence of such dam and/or other structures, as the case may be, the authority hereby granted to construct, maintain, and operate such dam and/or other structures designated in such notice shall terminate and be at an end; and any grantee or licensee of the United States proposing to develop a power project at or near such dam and/or other structure shall have authority to remove, submerge, or utilize such dam and/or other structures under such conditions as said commission or other agency may determine, but such conditions shall not include compensation for the removal, submergence, or utilization of such dam if the water level to be maintained in said power project is higher than the level of the crest of said dam.

SEC. 3. That the right to alter, amend, or repeal this act is hereby expressly reserved.

With the following committee amendments:

In the second line of the title eliminate the word "other" and insert "appurtenant intake and outlet."

Page 1, line 3, change the letter "t" in the first word "the" to a "T."

Page 1, line 7, strike out the word "other" and insert "appurtenant intake and outlet."

Page 2, line 10, strike out the word "hereof" and insert the words "of approval of this act."

Page 3, line 1, after the word "dam" eliminate the words "if the water level to be maintained in said power project is higher than the level of the crest of said dam."

The committee amendments were agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

The title was amended.

GLACIER NATIONAL PARK.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill S. 3593, to authorize an exchange of lands with owners of private land holdings within the Glacier National Park.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior, for the purpose of eliminating private holdings of land within the Glacier National Park, is hereby empowered, in his discretion, to obtain for the United States the complete title to any or all of the lands held in private ownership within the boundaries of said park by accepting from the owners of such privately owned lands complete relinquishment thereof and by granting and patenting to such owners, in exchange therefor, in each instance, like public land of equal value situate in the State of Montana, after due notice of the proposed exchange has been given by publication for not less than 30 days in the counties where the lands proposed to be exchanged or taken in exchange are located.

SEC. 2. That the value of all patented lands within said park, including the timber thereon, offered for exchange, and the value of other lands of the United States elsewhere situate, to be given in exchange therefor, shall be ascertained in such manner as the Secretary of the Interior may direct; and the owners of such privately owned lands within said park shall, before any exchange is effective, furnish the Secretary of the Interior evidence satisfactory to him of title to the patented lands offered in exchange; and lands conveyed to the Government under this act shall be and remain a part of the Glacier National Park.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

UNITED STATES COAL COMMISSION.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill H. R. 13882, to amend the act entitled "An act to establish a commission to be known as the United States Coal Commission for the purpose of securing information in connection with questions relative to interstate commerce in coal, and for other purposes," approved September 22, 1922.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I object.

SCHOOL FUND OF CHEROKEE NATION IN OKLAHOMA.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was House Resolution 393, directing the Attorney General to make an immediate investigation of the school funds of the Cherokee Nation in Oklahoma.

The SPEAKER. Is there any objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, at the instance of the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. CARTER], I object to the consideration of the bill. He states that all of the information that would result from the proposed investigation can now be furnished by the Commissioner of Indian Affairs.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Virginia objects.

Mr. CHRISTOPHERSON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the bill may retain its place on the calendar.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

CEDING CERTAIN LANDS IN MICHIGAN TO THE STATE OF MICHIGAN.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (H. R. 8625) to provide for the cession to the State of Michigan of certain public lands in the county of Isle Royal, State of Michigan.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. BLANTON. I object.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman reserve his objection?

Mr. BLANTON. Is the gentleman in favor of this bill?

Mr. STAFFORD. We have done this same thing in the State of Wisconsin. Years ago the National Government ceded all of the islands in the northern lakes to the State of Wisconsin, so that the State could conserve them for State park purposes and thereby prevent private individuals from preempting on them. This relates only to a very few islands, in extent only 33 acres of land, in Lake Superior. It safeguards the State and the Government.

Mr. BLANTON. There was just one question involved, and that is this: Suppose there should be governmental uses for this in the future, we will have ceded them away.

Mr. STAFFORD. Any private person can now enter on these islands and get title to them. How much better is it not to allow the National Government to establish a park, but the State to establish a park? This is public land not utilizable for any other purpose, and the bill seeks to cede the lands to the State of Michigan so as to allow it to establish parks. There is no future burden upon the National Government. If we do not do that, it will permit some private individual to enter and preempt the land.

Mr. BLANTON. But it is left to the Government after all to determine whether or not it will pass title.

Mr. STAFFORD. Oh, no; these lands are open to entry now, and people will enter on them for pleasure resort purposes. We considered that question many years ago in Wisconsin in reference to the islands in the lakes there.

Mr. BLANTON. If the matter has passed the eagle eye of the gentleman from Wisconsin, I have no objection.

Mr. HUDSPETH. How much land is involved?

Mr. STAFFORD. Only 33 acres.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. TILSON). Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the following-described lands located in the county of Isle Royal, State of Michigan, be, and they are hereby, ceded to the State of Michigan for public park purposes: Isle No. 1, section 4, township 66 north, range 34 west; Isle No. 2, section 4, township 66 north, range 34 west; Isle No. 2, section 2, township 66 north, range 34 west; Isle No. 1, section 36, township 67 north, range 34 west; Dean Isle, sections 31 and 36, township 67 north, ranges 33 and 34 west; Green Isle, sections 25 and 36, township 67 north, range 34 west; Isle No. 1, section 32, township 67 north, range 33 west; Isle No. 2, section 32, township 67 north, range 33 west; Isle No. 3, sections 29 and 32, township 67 north, range 33 west; containing, in all, 33.71 acres: Provided, however, That in case the State of Michigan shall at any time use the said described lands, or any portion of them, for other than public park purposes, the title thereto shall revert to the Government of the United States.

The following committee amendments were severally reported and severally agreed to:

Page 1, line 4, strike out the words "Isle Royal" and insert the word "Keweenaw."

Page 2, line 11, strike out "thirty-three and seventy one-hundredths" and insert "thirty-three and seventy-five hundredths."

Page 2, line 12, strike out the word "however" and insert:

"That any grant hereby made shall not defeat any prior valid settlement claim initiated when the land was subject to settlement and legally maintained: And provided further."

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

The title was amended to read as follows:

A bill to provide for the cession to the State of Michigan of certain public lands in the county of Keweenaw, State of Michigan.

UNITED STATES COAL COMMISSION.

Mr. LEA of California. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that Calendar No. 491 (H. R. 13882), relating to the United States Coal Commission, retain its place on the calendar without prejudice.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. BLANTON. Reserving the right to object, may I ask the gentleman what purpose there can be in keeping it on the calendar?

Mr. LEA of California. I do not know that the purpose is very material.

Mr. BLANTON. We are now approaching the end of the Congress, and there will hardly be another unanimous-consent day.

Mr. LEA of California. If there is any advantage, I would like to retain it.

Mr. BLANTON. I would like very much to do the gentleman a personal courtesy, but if there is any chance for any advantage to be derived by this legislation I shall object, because I do not want to see it have any advantage at all.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. BLANTON. I object.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Texas objects, and the bill is stricken from the calendar.

PAYMENT OF PER DIEM EMPLOYEES, ETC.

The next business in order on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was H. J. Res. 256, proposing payment to certain employees of the United States.

The Clerk read the title of the joint resolution.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the joint resolution?

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I notice from the report this would involve the expenditure of $333,000, and more. What character of employees will this extend the payment of a day's wage to?

Mr. VOLSTEAD. All per diem employees. Of course, there are a good many of those.

Mr. STAFFORD. As to those who were employed on regular salaries it would be impossible to deduct their day's pay?

Mr. VOLSTEAD. Yes; those who are paid by the month or year get their pay just the same. Of course, nearly all of these holidays, I think, in every instance, they are paid for the day. This was passed without any mention made of the question of pay and subsequently the comptroller has held that they were not entitled to pay and they went upon the supposition that the ordinary rule would prevail. The departments went on and paid. Now, the question is, Shall we attempt to collect that back or allow it to go?

Mr. STAFFORD. I notice in reading the report the War Department has attempted in a good many instances——

Mr. VOLSTEAD. Some instances.

Mr. STAFFORD. To have the Treasury reimbursed. Perhaps it was the intention of Congress that all employees of the Government should have a holiday and not pay it back, whether they were per diem or salaried employees.

Mr. VOLSTEAD. Of course, that was the understanding of the department because they allowed it and paid them.

Mr. STAFFORD. That is the question, whether it was the intention of Congress or not.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, is this a unanimous report of the Committee on the Judiciary?

Mr. VOLSTEAD. I think so; I do not remember of any opposition to it. There is no minority report.

Mr. BLANTON. If it is a unanimous report, I think the gentleman from Wisconsin ought to go into it a little more thoroughly.

Mr. VOLSTEAD. I do not remember there is any minority report.

Mr. BLANTON. It had about the same consideration that the murder bill which the gentleman brought in here had?

Mr. VOLSTEAD. No; this was up and considered very carefully, and we had before us the comptroller to explain it to us quite fully. I can say that the bill which the gentleman refers to——

Mr. BLANTON. Slipped by the chairman——

Mr. VOLSTEAD. Well, it was sent to us twice, and it was assumed that it was all right because it came from hands which ought to have seen that it was in proper shape.

Mr. STAFFORD. Did the comptroller hold it was the intention of Congress to allow all these employees to have their salary on this holiday?

Mr. VOLSTEAD. No; I can not say the comptroller said that; but it was evident the department so understood it because they allowed these employees to be paid and did pay them.

Mr. STAFFORD. I withdraw the reservation of objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

Whereas under the terms of House Joint Resolution 212, approved November 4, 1921, and the proclamation of the President, dated November 7, 1921, Armistice Day, November 11, 1921, was declared a legal public holiday; and

Whereas it was understood such action by Congress automatically carried with it payment for such holiday to per diem as well as annual salaried employees; and

Whereas the Comptroller General has ruled that per diem employees can not be legally paid for the holiday, November 11, 1921: Therefore be it

Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That all per diem employees of the several departments and independent establishments of the Government who were carried on the rolls as employees and excused from work on November 11, 1921, shall be allowed pay for that day.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, I move to strike out the preamble.

The motion was agreed to.

The joint resolution was ordered to be engrossed and read the third time, was read the third time, and passed.

EXPENSES OF SUBSISTENCE, OFFICERS AND ATTORNEYS, DEPARTMENT OF JUSTICE.

The next business in order on the Unanimous Consent Calendar was the bill (H. R. 13430) to amend section 370 of the Revised Statutes of the United States.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I object.

Mr. FOSTER. Will the gentleman withhold his objection?

Mr. BLANTON. I will withhold.

Mr. FOSTER. Mr. Speaker, the purpose of this bill is to secure for the officers of the Department of Justice, when on travel on Government business, an allowance more in keeping with the present prices. When the per diem of $4 was fixed in 1914 we had different conditions from those we have now. The Army, Navy, and Marine Corps when on duty are allowed $7 per day; Federal judges are allowed $10 per day; the general appraisers of the Government engaged under the tariff act of 1922, $10 per day; and even the stenographic force is allowed $8 per day. The Senate recently passed a similar bill allowing the Department of Justice $7 per day. The Judiciary Committee of the House, after hearings and full consideration, amended the Senate provisions to make it read $6 per day, in lieu of actual expenses. In view of the fact that even the stenographic force draw $8 per day and judges $10 per day, we consider the allowance of $4 per day, made before the war, an injustice to the Department of Justice and should raise this amount.

Mr. BLANTON. I will state when this practice first started of raising this allowance for subsistence in various departments my colleague [Mr. BLACK] and myself and several others called attention to where it would lead, that it would be an excuse for raising the allowance for subsistence all the way up the line and down the line. But gentlemen said, "No; it would be confined to that particular bill."

Mr. FOSTER. Does the gentleman from Texas think that representatives of the Department of Justice going out on official business, say, to Chicago or to Dallas, Tex., can subsist upon $4 a day? Instead of the $10 allowed to the judges, we propose to cut what the Senate put in and make it $6.

Mr. BLANTON. Well, under another bill we passed the other day some employees are allowed $8 a day. Now, you are coming in and granting a raise in this department, and some others will come in with bills granting raises to others, and I think we should stop these raises. There was a time when a man could live on less than $4 subsistence where he had his salary and traveling expenses allowed. There was a time in the country when he could do it, and we may get back to those normal conditions. But the gentleman will never be able to amend the future bills downward; it will always be upward.

Mr. FOSTER. That question came before our committee whether we should agree to the Senate bill, making it $7, and your Judiciary Committee unanimously agreed to make it $6, realizing that would hardly reimburse. Now, if this is passed all expense accounts must be itemized and must not exceed $6 per day.

Mr. BLANTON. I want the distinguished gentleman to look back into the RECORD of probably about three weeks ago, to the list of the special attorneys employed in this department, on the Government pay roll, drawing a large salary, and the history of some of them that was given at that time, and the class of services they were giving to this Government. Some who used to be messenger boys a short while ago are now special attorneys employed at large salaries.

Mr. FOSTER. I do not hold against them the fact they were once messenger boys. I myself for seven years sold newspapers.

Mr. BLANTON. But before a man is employed by the Government to represent the Government in the Department of Justice cases, where he will be pitted against highly paid private attorneys, he should have some legal education and training and at least some practical training in the courthouse as well as in the theory of pleading and practice.

Mr. FOSTER. I am conscious of the fact that the gentleman from Texas is a good enough lawyer and realizes that the exception does not prove the rule. But if the Department of Justice sends an Assistant Attorney General out, for example, to Columbus, Ohio, he ought not to be asked to subsist on $4 a day under present prices and conditions. The hotel bill alone is frequently that much. This law does not fix it at $7, or $10, or at $8, such as the stenographic force may get, but it fixes the reasonable maximum price of $6 a day to be itemized, which the gentleman admits is reasonable. I am not asking any special favor for this department.

Mr. BLANTON. There is one more trouble. The gentleman, if he will investigate these expense accounts as I have done, and will go down into them and look at the different items that are put into these various expense accounts, will find out that where you have made a big allowance for subsistence besides traveling expenses the trips have been prolonged over 40 or 50 or 60 days, which sometimes could have been ended in probably a week; and it is an incentive to make the trips last when they are drawing $6 or $8 a day for subsistence, for every day they can prolong the trip is so much money in their pockets.

Mr. FOSTER. I do not question but that the gentleman from Texas has rendered a great service to this House by making such investigations; but——

Mr. BLANTON. I have tried, but I have not been able to stop all waste.

Mr. FOSTER. This bill provides that it must not exceed $6.

Mr. BLANTON. The Post Office Department is more important to the people of the United States—our home people—than the Department of Justice just now. Why does not the gentleman raise the $4 allowance for traveling expenses for the inspectors and officials of the Post Office Department?

Mr. FOSTER. My belief is that a gentleman under the Post Office Department, going out on field duty, can no more live on $4 a day than can those from the Department of Justice.

Mr. BLANTON. The gentleman's party has one of the finest men in this Government down in the Post Office Department as Postmaster General, and you have not found Doctor Work, or his First Assistant, Governor Bartlett, who is slated for Doctor Work's place—you have not found them asking for $8 or $6 allowance. They are satisfied with $4.

Mr. FOSTER. I know that the gentleman from Texas realizes that if Doctor Work should go to-day to Denver on Government business he could not subsist on $4 a day.

Mr. BLANTON. Doctor Work knows present conditions. He is presumed to have and does have the interests of his post-office inspectors at heart. Why has he not asked for it?

Mr. FOSTER. I do not know as to that, but I do know, and the gentleman from Texas knows, that neither Doctor Work nor anyone else can subsist on $4 a day if placed subject to our city prices.

Mr. SWING. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FOSTER. Yes.

Mr. SWING. I remember a conversation that I had with the late lamented Franklin K. Lane while still Secretary of the Interior. I had occasion to present him with some California fruits. He said, "This will help out." He stated that it had been a subject of conversation in the Cabinet a few days before how the Cabinet members could travel on official business and live on the $5 per day allowed them. He said it could not be done.

Mr. BLANTON. I think there ought to be a special committee—not another committee appointed, because, God knows, we have enough already—but there ought to be some concerted action by your steering committee that will make these subsistence allowances more consistent. Until such a committee has worked out a consistent plan each bill will come in on its own footing, as it does now, and I do not think we ought continually to raise the amount.

Mr. FOSTER. I have observed the gentleman from Texas during the past four years—he as a persistent speaker; I as an interested listener. I believe that generally the gentleman from Texas tries to do what he believes is right.

Mr. BLANTON. But you will not vote with me.

Mr. FOSTER. I have voted with the gentleman, as an examination of the RECORD will disclose, more times than he may realize. I do not think the gentleman believes that these men can subsist on $4 a day. I think he believes in his own heart that this provision in the bill is a just one. The gentleman should realize that the House Judiciary Committee brought the amount down to $6 a day maximum, on itemized statements. I do not think the gentleman should object to the bill.

Mr. BLANTON. I saw in the paper this morning that the German mark is being stabilized. If they can do that, we certainly are getting back to normal.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I object to the consideration of this bill.

The SPEAKER. Objection is made.

Mr. FOSTER. Where does the objection come from?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Texas objects.

Mr. HUSTED. Will the gentleman withhold that objection for a moment?

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. I will reserve the objection——

Mr. BLANTON. I make it.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLANTON] objects. The Clerk will report the next bill.

UNITED STATES MARSHAL, SOUTHERN DISTRICT OF NEW YORK.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (S. 3614) relating to the official bond of the United States marshal for the southern judicial district of the State of New York.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the bill for amendment.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That whenever the business of the United States district court in the southern judicial district of the State of New York shall make it necessary, in the opinion of the Attorney General, for the United States marshal to furnish greater security than the official bond now required by law, a bond in an amount not to exceed $75,000 shall be given, when required by the Attorney General, who shall fix the amount thereof.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to a third reading, and was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

FOREIGN POSTAGE AND REVENUE STAMPS.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (S. 2703) to allow the printing and publishing of illustrations of foreign postage and revenue stamps from defaced plates.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the bill for amendment.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That nothing in sections 161, 172, and 220 of the act entitled "An act to codify, revise, and amend the penal laws of the United States," approved March 4, 1909 (35 Stat. L. p. 1118, 1121, 1132), shall be construed to forbid or prevent the printing or publishing of illustrations of postage or revenue stamps from plates so defaced as to indicate that the illustrations are not adapted or intended for use as stamps, or to prevent or forbid the making of necessary plates therefor for use in philatelic or historical articles, books, journals, or albums, or the circulars of legitimate publishers or dealers in such stamps, books, journals, or albums; but no such illustration shall be made in colors, and no such illustration or plate shall be of a stamp of the United States.

With the following committee amendment:

On page 1, line 8, after the word "illustrations," strike out the word "of" and insert the words "in black and white or foreign."

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the committee amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Also the following committee amendment:

Page 2, line 3, after the word "album," strike out the words "but no such illustration shall be made in colors, and no such illustration or plate shall be of a stamp of the United States" and insert in lieu thereof the following: "and nothing in said sections shall be construed to forbid or prevent similar illustrations, in black and white only, in philatelic or historical articles, books, journals, albums, or the circulars of legitimate publishers or dealers in such stamps, books, journals, albums, or circulars of such portion of the border of a stamp of the United States as may be necessary to show minor differences in the stamp so illustrated, but all such illustrations shall be at least four times as large as the portion of the original United States stamp so illustrated."

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the committee amendment.

Mr. VOLSTEAD. Mr. Speaker, I offer an amendment to the amendment.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Minnesota offers an amendment to the committee amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. VOLSTEAD: At the end of the committee amendment insert: "Provided, however, That no such postage or revenue stamp is printed or published without the printer or publisher thereof first having obtained the written consent of the Secretary of the Treasury for such purpose."

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment to the amendment.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The question is on third reading of the Senate bill.

The bill was ordered to a third reading, and was accordingly read the third time and passed.

CONSTRUCTING A DRAIN FOR SEWAGE ACROSS GOVERNMENT LAND AT MIAMI BEACH, FLA.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (H. R. 13272) granting a license to the city of Miami Beach, Fla., to construct a drain for sewage across certain Government lands.

The Clerk read the title to the bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. TILSON). Is there objection?

Mr. FOSTER. I object.

Mr. SEARS. Will the gentleman withhold his objection? I did not object to the gentleman's bill. This is simply a question of passing over 20 feet of Government land in order that they may put in modern sewerage. The War Department and the Interior Department reported favorably on it. It provides for the repeal of the law at any time, and unless this is granted now the system can not be put in. I hope the gentleman will not object.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. FOSTER. I object.

BRIDGE ACROSS THE MISSISSIPPI RIVER, MINN.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (H. R. 13996) granting the consent of Congress to the cities of Minneapolis and St. Paul, or either of them, to construct a bridge across the Mississippi River in section 17, in township 28 north, range 23 west of the fourth principal meridian in the State of Minnesota.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. NEWTON of Minnesota. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to substitute the Senate bill which is on the Speaker's table.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Minnesota asks unanimous consent to substitute the Senate bill of a similar import on the Speaker's table. Is there objection?

Mr. SEARS. I object.

Mr. NEWTON of Minnesota. Go ahead, then, with the House bill.

Mr. SEARS. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Minnesota being my good friend, I withdraw the objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the Senate bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (S. 4411) granting the consent of Congress to the cities of Minneapolis and St. Paul, Minn., or either of them, to construct a bridge across the Mississippi River in section 17, township 28 north, range 23 west of the fourth principal meridian, in the State of Minnesota.

Be it enacted, etc., That the consent of the Congress is hereby granted to the cities of Minneapolis and St. Paul, or either of them, to construct, maintain, and operate a bridge and approaches thereto across the Mississippi River at a point suitable to the interests of navigation in the northwest quarter of section 17, township 28 north, range 23 west of the fourth principal meridian, between the cities of Minneapolis and St. Paul, in the State of Minnesota, in accordance with the provisions of an act entitled "An act to regulate the construction of bridges over navigable waters," approved March 23, 1906.

SEC. 2. That the right to alter, amend, or repeal this act is hereby expressly reserved.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the third reading of the Senate bill.

Mr. NEWTON of Minnesota. Mr. Speaker, I move to amend, on page 1, line 7, after the word "in," insert the words "or near."

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment by Mr. NEWTON of Minnesota: Page 1, line 7, after the word "in," insert the words "or near."

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be read the third time, was read the third time, and passed.

The House bill was laid on the table.

CONSTRUCTION OF THREE BRIDGES ACROSS THE JUNCTION OF THE MINNESOTA AND MISSISSIPPI RIVERS.

The next bill on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (H. R. 14081) granting the consent of Congress to the Valley Transfer Railway Co., a corporation, to construct three bridges and approaches thereto across the junction of the Minnesota and Mississippi Rivers at points suitable to the interests of navigation.

The Clerk read the title to the bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. STAFFORD. Reserving the right to object, I would like to inquire what is the character of the railroad that is to be constructed on these three bridges authorized by this bill?

Mr. NEWTON of Minnesota. As I understand it, it is to be in the nature of a sort of industrial road. There is an island lying at the junction of the Mississippi and Minnesota Rivers, probably about 50 acres in extent. That has not as yet been developed in any way. There is no building upon it. The desire is to develop and make use of that island for industrial purposes. The only approach to the island is the approach on the southwest over the Dakota county side, and then the one on the west which is over the Fort Snelling Reservation side.

Mr. STAFFORD. What is the necessity of having the bridge extend over the Fort Snelling Military Reservation?

Mr. NEWTON of Minnesota. It is on the west side of the Mississippi River and at the junction. Minneapolis lies north of Fort Snelling, up the Mississippi River. The traffic is downstream. In order to get from Minneapolis to the island you must cross over the Fort Snelling Reservation.

Mr. STAFFORD. Why is it necessary to go onto the island from the Fort Snelling side?

Mr. NEWTON of Minnesota. You have got to go over the Fort Snelling Reservation in order to get upon the island from Minneapolis.

Mr. STAFFORD. I thought you could approach it from one side only.

Mr. NEWTON of Minnesota. Not from Minneapolis.

Mr. STAFFORD. It does not mean the spoliation of the land on the Government reservation?

Mr. NEWTON of Minnesota. Not at all. It is low flat land that has never been utilized and never will be for military purposes.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, I withdraw my reservation of objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will read the bill.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the consent of Congress is hereby granted to the Valley Transfer Railway Co., a corporation organized under the laws of the State of Minnesota, its successors and assigns, to construct, maintain, and operate three bridges and approaches thereto across the junction of the Minnesota and Mississippi Rivers at points suitable to the interests of navigation, at or near Pike Island in the State of Minnesota, said bridges to be constructed so as to connect the southwesterly shore of Pike Island with the west bank of the Mississippi River in Dakota County, Minn., the westerly shore of Pike Island with the Fort Snelling Military Reservation on the west bank of the said Mississippi River, and the southeasterly shore of Pike Island with the east bank of said river, in Ramsey County, Minn., in accordance with the provisions of the act entitled "An act to regulate the construction of bridges over navigable waters," approved March 23, 1906.

SEC. 2. That the right to alter, amend, or repeal this act is hereby expressly reserved.

The bill was ordered to be read the third time, was read the third time, and passed.

SEWAGE DRAIN ACROSS GOVERNMENT LANDS, MIAMI BEACH, FLA.

Mr. SEARS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to return to House bill 13272, granting a license to the city of Miami Beach, Fla., to construct a drain for sewage across certain Government lands.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Florida asks unanimous consent to return to Calendar No. 498.

Mr. FOSTER. Mr. Speaker, I object.

Mr. SEARS. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that there is no quorum present.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Florida makes the point of order that there is no quorum present. The Chair will count.

Mr. STAFFORD. Will not the gentleman withdraw his point of order? I think that later on we will be able to pass the gentleman's bill.

Mr. SEARS. But what assurance have we——

Mr. STAFFORD. Of course, I am not in control; but I shall use my good offices toward having the bill passed. I think some means will be devised whereby the gentleman's bill will be considered later. It is a meritorious measure.

Mr. SEARS. Mr. Speaker, I withdraw my point of no quorum.

Mr. FOSTER. Mr. Speaker, I withdraw my objection to the bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to returning to the bill?

There was no objection.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. VOLSTEAD] has made a statement to me that causes me to withdraw my objection to the bill (H. R. 13430) to amend section 370 of the Revised Statutes, and I do withdraw my objection to it.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the consideration of the bill H. R. 13272?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the bill as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the city of Miami Beach, Fla., a municipal corporation organized and existing under the laws of the State of Florida, be, and it is hereby, granted a license and permit to lay, construct, and maintain a drain for sewage from its sewage disposal plant across the lands of the United States Government known as the Government reservation and into the Government channel, which Government reservation lies in the extreme southern portion of said city and immediately adjacent to said Government channel, immediately south of said city, provided said drain is laid underground along the following described line: Begin with the intersection of the west line of Jefferson Avenue in said city, proceed south to the north line of said United States Government lands; thence run southeasterly parallel with the east shore of Biscayne Bay as said shore exists along the west boundary line of said United States Government land, to the low water mark in a cut between Biscayne Bay and the Atlantic Ocean; thence continuing under water at such a depth as will not interfere with navigation to the edge of the Government channel used for ships.

SEC. 2. That this act shall become and be effective immediately upon its passage and approval as provided by law.

The following committee amendments were severally reported and severally agreed to:

Page 1, line 9, strike out all of lines 9 and 10, and lines 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, 6, 7, 8, 9, 10, 11, and 12 on page 2 and insert in lieu thereof the following: "situated on the north side of the Government cut from Biscayne Bay to the Atlantic Ocean immediately south of the city of Miami Beach, at such location and in accordance with such plans as may be approved by the Chief of Engineers, United States Army, and by the Secretary of War."

Page 2, strike out all of section 2 and insert in lieu thereof the following:

"SEC. 2. That the right to alter, amend, or repeal this act is hereby expressly reserved."

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

EXPENSES OF SUBSISTENCE OFFICERS AND ATTORNEYS, DEPARTMENT OF JUSTICE.

Mr. FOSTER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to return to the bill H. R. 13430, to amend section 370 of the Revised Statutes of the United States.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr Speaker, reserving the right to object, I wish to inquire of the gentleman who has reported the bill whether the committee considered limiting the time to which the per diem allowance should be granted to these respective employees. Many years back in consideration of the Postal Service we found this abuse, which we sought to correct. Inspectors who were entitled to the $4 per day per diem allowance would leave their domiciles and depart for long periods of time for the sole purpose of getting the allowance. We provided that they would not be entitled to a per diem allowance for a period exceeding 15 days. I assume that it is not the purpose of the Government to grant this per diem allowance to these Department of Justice employees when they are assigned to some place in the field for a long period of time. I do not know whether the gentleman has considered that phase of the matter in connection with this bill.

Mr. FOSTER. No limit was suggested, because there was nothing to suggest such a thing to the committee. What would be a reasonable limit? Take the nature of the work of the Department of Justice, with the work that has been piled upon it in consequence of the war.

Mr. STAFFORD. I am not directing my inquiry to the amount carried, but I am directing my inquiry to the possible abuse that may be indulged in where the Department of Justice assigned some person in the field to stay one, two, three, four, or five months. It certainly should not be the purpose of the Government to pay him at those rates if he virtually takes up his abode there, even though he is engaged on Government work assigned by the department.

Mr. FOSTER. There surely would be no departmental O. K. for such a bill as that, and as long as he is there temporarily he can not make any money at $6 a day.

Mr. STAFFORD. This is not limited to temporary assignments, and it is that feature of it that I had in mind when I considered the bill.

Mr. FOSTER. I see no objection to such an amendment as that, if the gentleman can conceive what would be a reasonable limit, in view of the work of the Department of Justice.

Mr. STAFFORD. What would the gentleman say to a period not exceeding two months?

Mr. BLANTON. Oh, no; two weeks.

Mr. STAFFORD. Oh, no; we do not want to restrict them too much.

Mr. FOSTER. Suppose the Department of Justice sends a man to Chicago in the case pending out there, would two weeks be a reasonable time?

Mr. STAFFORD. It would not.

Mr. FOSTER. I would rather trust the common sense and good judgment of the department than to have such an amendment at this time.

Mr. VOLSTEAD. Some of these cases run along for two or three months.

Mr. FOSTER. I shall turn the inquiry back to the gentleman from Wisconsin. What would he suggest as a reasonable limitation for a Department of Justice employee going out to Chicago?

Mr. STAFFORD. I said two months.

Mr. BLANTON. May I make this suggestion: If you fix it at two months in this bill, the gentleman will find that most of them will have a period of two months in their accounts.

Mr. STAFFORD. I think there is a great deal in that. They will consider this an authorization of Congress.

Mr. BLANTON. I would rather leave it as it is without putting in the two months.

Mr. STAFFORD. I will not press the amendment in view of the great insistence of the gentleman from Ohio on this bill, but I really believe it is going to be the subject of abuse in certain limited cases.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. MACGREGOR. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER pro tempore. For what purpose does the gentleman rise?

Mr. MACGREGOR. I want to ask the gentleman why there were these differences in allowances. A short time ago I went out to St. Paul as a member of the joint committee on agricultural credits, and I put in a bill and the Comptroller General came back and said I was only entitled to $4 a day for all my expenses; and that trip cost me money. Why should there be this difference in allowances?

Mr. STAFFORD. That is the weakness of this bill. We are singling out one department and allowing a per diem of $7 when the law limits it in other activities to $4 and in some cases to $5. That is the objection to this bill; it is special legislation, because one department of the Government has been active in trying to press some needed legislation. It will naturally result in extending it to the rest of the departments.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none, and the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 370 of the Revised Statutes of the United States be, and the same is hereby, amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 370. Whenever the Solicitor General, an attorney, an assistant attorney, a special assistant to the Attorney General, or any other officer of the Department of Justice is sent by the Attorney General to any State, district, Territory, or country to attend to any interest of the United States the person so sent shall receive, in addition to his salary and the necessary expenses of travel, his actual expenses incurred for subsistence, not to exceed $7 per day, or a per diem of $6 in lieu of such actual expenses while absent from the seat of government, the account thereof to be verified by affidavit."

Mr. VOLSTEAD. Mr. Speaker, I move to amend, on page 2, line 3, by striking out the words "$7 per day or a per diem of" and the word "in" in that line, and in line 4 strike out "lieu of such actual expenses," so that the language will read "not to exceed $6 while absent from the seat of government."

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 2, line 3, after the word "exceed," strike out "$7 per day or a per diem of," and after "$6" strike out the word "in," and on line 4 strike out the words "lieu of such actual expenses."

Mr. SEARS. Mr. Speaker, I want to congratulate the Judiciary Committee, and now I simply desire to call attention to the fact that deputy United States marshals have only been receiving $4 a day. That is the question I desire to ask the gentleman just now, and suggest to him that the Judiciary Committee take up this matter and see that they get an additional per diem, because I know that they can not get by on that amount. I do hope the committee will take it up next session, for while this is in part cared for now in the appropriation bill, each year we have to thresh it out, and I would like their per diem not only increased but become permanent law.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The question was taken and the amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read the third time, was read the third time, and passed.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection, the spelling of the word "exceed" will be corrected.

There was no objection.

Mr. LANKFORD. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER pro tempore. For what purpose does the gentleman rise?

Mr. LANKFORD. I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. BEGG. Reserving the right to object, on what subject?

Mr. LANKFORD. A few days ago I made some observations on the race question and I wish to extend my remarks along the same line.

Mr. STAFFORD. I take it they are the gentleman's own remarks?

Mr. LANKFORD. No; I have some quotations which I wish to include.

Mr. STAFFORD. Are they the major or the minor part of the gentleman's remarks?

Mr. LANKFORD. A minor part.

Mr. STAFFORD. I hope they are the extreme minor part.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. LANKFORD. Mr. Speaker, some days ago I discussed the solution of the race question and urged that the best interest of both races demanded less bitterness and hatred. Several negro newspapers have carried my speech in full or practically so. Most of them differ very much with me. This was to be expected. In a few minutes I will refer to just one of these articles to show that many of the northern negroes believe that the negro will establish his place in this civilization by force, by laws enacted by sectional prejudice and hatred, and contrary to public opinion of the white or dominant race.

I repeat, the great desire of the Negro race should be to prove itself worthy of rights and privileges—not to seek to take those rights against public opinion of the white man. I again repeat, the future place of the negro is what the white man permits him to occupy because of his real merit, not what the negro gets temporarily by hatred and then abuses in order to show that he is holding it.

The lamented late Senator Watson, of Georgia, once said:

I regard public opinion as omnipotent. It can not be seen, but its pressure is despotic. The bravest man quails before the silent aversion of hostile public opinion. The stoutest leader weakens before its frowning face. It changes policies, customs, manners. It enforces an unwritten law, and the criminal who violates it swings from a limb. It nullifies a written law and bears home in triumph the man who broke it.

You think you hold your life at the mercy of the law. You do nothing of the kind. You hold it at the mercy of public opinion.

No Dyer antilynching law can stop lynchings. The negro, by staying in his place and by building up favorable public sentiment—not for his crimes and wrongs, for this can not be done, but for his people's courtesy, politeness, and merit—can stop lynchings of negroes.

Mr. Speaker, I promised that I would make some mention of one of the articles in which my speech was quoted. I am doing this to show some of the ideas held by negroes. I shall probably discuss more fully some of these ideas at a time when there is not such a rush as now exists here in trying to get ready for adjournment.

The Washington Tribune, a negro paper published here, carried my speech, practically in full, under a headline clear across the front page, as follows:

Negroes of Washington worry Georgia Congressman.

Again, the paper in a headline says, "Georgian's speech really paid tribute to northern negro." In other words, the paper says it is a tribute to the northern negro to be charged with being offensive, insulting, and impudent to the white race. I am glad this paper printed my speech on front page, as it in this way carried fully my message to the negroes of Washington and the North. It is far from my purpose to enter into an argument with a negro or a set of negroes who take a pride in being offensive, impudent, and insulting to the white race, and I only mention this article in this paper for the purpose of submitting additional evidence to Congress along the line that many of the negroes of Washington and the North believe that the way to gain for themselves a place in this civilization is by vicious, impudent, insulting conduct and not by merit.

They believe that the way to gain respect is by being disrespectful, and that the way to gain the good will is by being offensive, impolite, discourteous, and vicious. The Washington Tribune says, though, that I do not know "the negro who goes to Harvard" to school. Well, maybe I do not. I hope, though, that he is not much more impudent, insulting, and vicious than the ones who go to school here in Washington to Howard University at the expense of the United States Government. I always had an idea that education develops that which is best, not that which is worst, in a man or woman. If education of the negro means to make him more insolent, vicious, and insulting, then that same education means his destruction. He should develop the best of his nature, not the worst side. Whether the negro believes it or not, he needs the good will of the white man. I say for the third time what I have heretofore said here along this line:

The white race will determine what position in this great civilization the Negro race shall occupy. This will eventually be determined not by sectional hatred—not by partisan prejudice and not by political selfish narrowness. The white race will write the verdict of the negroes' rights in this Nation, and the white people of the South will help make, will agree to, and will approve the verdict. The verdict will be impartial. It will be fair. It will speak the truth. It will be made up, after a careful consideration of all the evidence submitted by the Negro race, in view of all the surrounding circumstances and under the laws of eternal fairness, justice, and right. The verdict will not be a directed verdict. It will not be a forced decision. The white race will decide what position the negro is worthy to occupy from the negro's own acts, from his merit or lack of merit, and not from demands made by negro propagandists of either the Negro race or white race, except that these propagandists by the creation of racial hatred are introducing a mass of evidence against the colored race.

The Washington Tribune, speaking of my speech, said:

LANKFORD's speech was aimed at the negroes in Washington in particular and the negroes in the North in general. However, his speech when thoroughly analyzed is more of a compliment to negroes in Washington and the North than it is a slur. Like most southerners, LANKFORD is obsessed with the idea that all negroes are like the Uncle Toms of slavery-time fame. A negro who can think, act, and fight is an impossible creature according to the Ku Klux and LANKFORD'S school of thought. So absorbed are the whites in this class in putting out propaganda about their great supremacy (?) until they have completely failed to see the great progress made by the Negro race; the only negroes they know are the ones who live in a little log cabin back of a big house and is perfectly contented to cook, wash, iron, and do everything else asked of them by the whites, and in return receive only a few paltry dollars a month and some cast-off clothing. This type of negro is known only in the South, and even now only in small towns and villages and in the rural sections. Not any of them can read or write, and freedom comes only to them when death closes their eyes.

This paper would leave the impression that only uneducated very poor negroes are courteous and polite and wish to build and preserve a good feeling between the races. The idea is again brought forward that education makes the colored man discourteous and insolent. There are thousands of negroes not poverty stricken and who have a reasonable education in the South, and some in the North, who are courteous and anxious for the best of feeling between the races and who strive for this good will. The Washington Tribune is very anxious for the negroes not only to ride on same cars, sit on same seats, use same waiting rooms, use same parks, but it wants negroes to use same bathing beaches, board at same dormitories, and do everything else that would enable them to sit with and live with white folks.

Why do some negroes object so much to being separated from the whites? If white people have separate space on trains, the negroes have the same privileges of separate space. If white people have separate waiting rooms, the negroes have the honor of a separate waiting room for them. Why do they object to a separate bathing place? Why do they not want to enjoy the society of their own folks unmolested by white people? The Washington Tribune has three complaints in the one issue. One was my remarks in Congress in favor of the "Jim Crow" rule and indorsing Professor Lowell's refusal to let a negro live with whites in the freshman dormitory of Harvard. This paper, in mentioning my speech, began as follows:

The recent refusal of the Harvard officials to permit the son of Roscoe C. Bruce to live in the freshman dormitory at that great institution of learning gave Representative LANKFORD of Georgia a great chance to deliver a regular cracker Congressman's speech in the House of Representatives last Saturday.

Not only is the paper concerned because a negro has been kept out of a white students' dormitory, but it is worried because negroes, who consider it a tribute to be charged with being offensive, disrespectful, and insolent to white people, are not permitted to use the same bathing beach with white folks. Again this paper is very much concerned about and objects very much to a bill by Senator CAPPER to make it unlawful for negroes and whites to marry. Here is what the same issue of the Tribune says about Senator CAPPER's bill:

Senator CAPPER of Kansas, who at times has been classed as a progressive and a friend of the negro, joined the ranks of those who desire to make racial segregation national by introducing a Federal marriage bill which is aimed at marriages between opposite races. Senator CAPPER introduced his bill in the Senate January 23, S. 4934, and it was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

The part of Senator CAPPER's bill that relates to marriages between races is found in section 4, page 3, and lines 3, 4, 5, and 6, which reads as follows: (No license to marry shall be issued to one) "where the applicants are members of different races; that is to say, marriage between members of the white and black or of the white and yellow races, shall not be valid."

Just why Senator CAPPER has decided to try to foster national segregation is not known. Such measures heretofore have been sponsored by rabid southerners and such organizations as the the Ku-Klux Klan.

I probably would not vote for a bill making a national divorce law. I believe each State should make its own divorce laws. Senator CAPPER's view that negroes and whites should not be allowed to marry is, though, absolutely right. I also quote the following from the editorial page of the same issue of the same paper:

SEPARATE BATHING BEACH—NEVER!

In the District bill which passed the Senate Thursday there is a provision for an appropriation of $25,000 "for the construction of a bathing beach and bathhouse for the colored population of the city, at the Virginia end of the Key Bridge."

That is the limit. C. O. Sherrill, of North Carolina, in charge of Federal buildings and grounds, the Jim Crow promoter of the District, has recommended to Secretary of War Weeks that he order this separate beach for colored people on the Virginia side of the Potomac River, despite the many protests made to him against a separate beach.

A number of civic and other organizations have signified their opposition to a separate beach and have informed Secretary Weeks of their opposition; and it is understood he has promised not to favor a separate bathing beach.

The colored people of Washington have decided that as citizens of the District they are entitled to bathe in the tidal basin and they will accept no other place as long as bathing is permitted there. That is their slogan now. There is plenty of room there and a regular filtering or purifying plant there, hence it is absolutely unnecessary to think of establishing a separate bathing beach for the colored citizens of Washington or any other group of the city's population.

The Tribune, along with the other colored papers in the District, will oppose a separate bathing beach for colored people. If the District authorities insist on establishing a beach at the Virginia end of the Key Bridge they will simply be wasting the public's money. This will be but the entering wedge for more Jim Crowism in the Capital of the Nation and with the stamp of the Federal Government upon it. If this is accepted then we may look for separate street cars, separate waiting rooms, separate libraries, and what not. We shall not sit idly by and see the Constitution of America aborted to race prejudice in the fair Capital of the Nation that claims itself a "democracy" and "the land of the free."

Every vestige of the principle of the Constitution of the United States will be destroyed when the Federal Government puts its stamp of approval upon a separate bathing beach for colored people of Washington. The Tribune and the public in general will oppose it to the last ditch and will boycott any Jim Crow bathing beach that may be established.

"We bathe at the Tidal Basin or no bathing at all" is our slogan.

That would be awful, would it not? They think surely they will be permitted to bathe with whites if they refuse to bathe at a separate beach. I see in the same paper where HAMILTON FISH, a Representative from New York State, made a speech to a negro gathering a Sunday or two ago and begged his negro hearers to honor him by believing that his grandfather long ago invited a negro to dine with him. He is quoted concerning the Harvard University matter as saying:

This is the opening wedge for every college or university in the North to turn down colored students. President Lowell is only catering to the possible white students from the South, and they see more of the colored man down there than they will at Harvard.

I hope Representative FISH is right about this. He is so seldom right, maybe he is right this time. I received a few days ago a circular letter from Marcus Garvey, of the Universal Negro Improvement Association, which contained several ideas along the right line as well as some at variance with my views. Listen to what he says some negroes advocate. Garvey says:

Some negroes, such as the faction of the mulatto, W. E. D. DuBois, believe that the problem will be solved by assimilation and miscegenation; at least they believe that the black race will become, through social contact and intercourse, so mixed up with the white race as to produce a new type, probably like DuBois himself, which will in time be the real American. It is for such a contingency that he and his associates are consciously or unconsciously working.

Here is what Garvey says about this impossible idea:

We of the Universal Negro Improvement Association believe in a pure black race, just as how all self-respecting whites believe in a pure white race as far as that can be.

Again Garvey says:

We believe that the negro has at least a social, cultural, and political destiny of his own, and any attempt to make a white man of him is bound to fail in the end.

Garvey speaks of the many political and industrial positions the negroes would like to hold, and then says:

All these are positions and jobs sought by the majority group of whites in America and elsewhere. As a negro becomes more insistent on these demands for constitutional rights and privileges and threatens the more to compete with the white man for the job that the latter seeks and believes worth while having, then the inevitable conflict will come, and the group that is not strong enough to hold its own will go down, irrespective of the law and of the Government, because the law and the Government are but executive expressions of the sober will of the people; but when the people, through prejudice or any mass opinion, become dissatisfied, the law and the Government are no longer able to control them in their action.

In this respect I would refer you to the industrial riots of East St. Louis and Chicago, the political riot of Washington, and the commercial riot of Tulsa, Okla. The things that the white majority want in their own countries they will not yield to the Negro or any other race, and that is natural.

The only sensible thing for the negro to do, therefore, is to "build" for himself. This can be done without friction or animosity between the races, and that is why the Universal Negro Improvement Association believes in the building up of Africa for the Negro race.

Those negroes who are too lazy to work and lay the foundation for such a government are among those who criticize us.

Pilgrim Fathers we had in America before we enjoyed the delights of New York, Chicago, or Boston. Pilgrim Fathers we must have if Africa is to rise from her slumber and darkness.

In another part of his letter Garvey says this:

How far the two races will travel together socially, industrially, and politically in America before a serious civil clash ensues is the speculation of all earnest, thoughtful people. It is because I personally want to prevent such a clash that I am advocating the cause of the Universal Negro Improvement Association.

Mr. Speaker, the race question can only be solved by the negro either returning to Africa or by him seeking his position in this civilization by his own merit and not by sheer force. He must get the white man's recognition by being worthy of it and not by pushing in where he is not wanted. He must recognize merit as a greater saving force than hatred.

Most of the negro papers carried my speech without comment. Some carried only quotations which left out much of the real argument of the speech. The Afro-American, of Baltimore, Md., carried the following item:

REPRESENTATIVE LANKFORD (DEMOCRAT, GEORGIA) URGES JIM-CROW STREET CARS, TRAINS, AND STATIONS IN DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

WASHINGTON, February 14.—Representative WILLIAM C. LANKFORD (Democrat, Georgia) told Congress last week he not only approved of President Lowell's stand of excluding negroes from Harvard but also excluding them from all white schools in the North.

Representative LANKFORD also took the occasion to discuss the race problem, urging Jim Crow street cars, trains, libraries, and parks for the city. Among other things he said were:

"The so-called 'Jim Crow' law which makes whites and negroes ride in separate coaches on trains, use separate seats in street cars, and use separate waiting rooms at the stations is a most excellent law for both races.

"The best thing the Negro race could do for itself would be to say: 'Give us separate cars, separate waiting rooms, separate parks, separate schools, separate libraries, and separate sections of town to live in. We do not want to offend the white people in the least. They are our friends. We are theirs.'

"I believe the negroes teach their children here to be as offensive to the whites as possible. The old and the young of the Negro race here are doing well their part of building up a contempt of the white race for the negroes.

"The negroes of the North are destroying the chance they have by attempting to force themselves where they are not wanted and by being insolent and offensive. Many negroes in the South would not under any circumstances come in at the front door of a white home unless specifically requested to do so. They do not want to use a white waiting room or ride on a train in the white coach if it offends the white man or white woman or white child in the least. These kind of negroes are the saving power of the Negro race."

Representative LANKFORD complained that there was no space in Union Station where colored people were prohibited.

"Millions and millions of the people's money have been spent and are spent each year on dozens of most beautiful parks here in Washington, and most splendid music is furnished—for whom? For only the whites who want to associate with negroes.

"Oh, the disgrace of the negro situation here in Washington! We have here in Washington a so-called reformatory for girls. It is filled up with negro girls and a few white girls. In other words, if a white girl makes a mistake or does some wrong for which she should be corrected she is forced to live with a bunch of negroes in order that she, a white girl, may be made better. The gang in authority in Washington who causes this to be done ought to be forced to eat with negroes, sleep with negroes, live with negroes, smell negroes, and work at hard labor with negroes in a penitentiary for and during the full end and term of their natural lives.

The Negro race, by endeavoring to get more than it is entitled to, will eventually lose many of its rights. By infringing on the rights of the white race, they built a resentment which will later deprive them of the rights of the negro.

In many sections where each race does not have well-defined rights and each stay strictly within them, extreme hatred will arise and negroes will be driven from their homes and even deprived of the right to live by the sway of race riots. The occasional lynching of a guilty negro will not hurt the Negro race, but the all-consuming flame of race hatred which is being kindled slowly but surely in many sections of the North, where the negro is attempting to push the white man aside, will hurt the Negro race.

The negroes are entitled to their own schools, churches, libraries, public gatherings, parks, bathing beaches, waiting-room accommodations, and railway and other transportation conveniences unmolested by the white folks, and the white people are entitled to the same conveniences without the interference of negroes.

The negro can not be white, neither will any considerable portion of the white race, either North or South, long consent to act the negro. The limitations fixed by the Almighty are steadfast and everlasting, and negro will remain negro and white will remain white. There should be rendered unto the negro the things that are his and unto the white man the things that are his. The white race, in all justice, will do this and only this, and the sooner the better.

Mr. ACKERMAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks on bill S. 2703, one of the bills which was passed this afternoon.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from New Jersey asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD in the manner indicated. Is there objection?

Mr. STAFFORD. I assume they are the gentleman's own remarks?

Mr. ACKERMAN. Certainly.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair hears no objection.

AUTHORIZING THE COINAGE OF 50-CENT PIECES IN COMMEMORATION OF THE THREE HUNDREDTH ANNIVERSARY OF THE SETTLING OF NEW NETHERLAND, ETC.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (H. R. 13809) to authorize the coinage of 50-cent pieces in commemoration of the three hundredth anniversary of the settling of New Netherland, the Middle States, in 1624, by Walloons, French, and Belgian Huguenots, under the Dutch West India Co.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. GERNERD. Mr. Speaker, I would like to substitute for the House bill the bill S. 4468.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Pennsylvania asks unanimous consent to substitute for the House bill the bill S. 4468, now on the Speaker's table. Is there objection?

Mr. BLANTON. Is the Senate bill identical?

Mr. GERNERD. Identical.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none, and the Clerk will report the Senate bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That in commemoration of the three hundredth anniversary of the settling of New Netherland, the Middle States, in 1624, by Walloons, French, and Belgian Huguenots, under the Dutch West India Co., there shall be coined at the mints of the United States silver 50-cent pieces to the number of 300,000, such 50-cent pieces to be of the standard troy weight, composition, diameter, device, and design as shall be fixed by the Director of the Mint, with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury, which said 50-cent pieces shall be legal tender in any payment to the amount of their face value.

SEC. 2. That all laws now in force relating to the subsidiary silver coins of the United States and the coining or the striking of the same, regulating and guarding the process of coinage, providing for the purchase of material and for the transportation, distribution, and redemption of the coins, for the prevention of debasement or counterfeiting, for security of the coin, or for any other purposes, whether said laws are penal or otherwise, shall, so far as applicable, apply to the coinage herein authorized: Provided, That the United States shall not be subject to the expense of making the necessary dies and other preparations for this coinage.

Mr. GERNERD. Mr. Speaker, I move to amend the bill by inserting after section 2 a new section 3 in accordance with the amendment which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

At the end of the Senate bill insert a new section as follows:

SEC. 3. That the coins herein authorized shall be issued only upon the request of the Fifth National Bank of New York, and upon payment of the par value of such coins by such bank to the United States Treasury.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I reserve a point of order for the purpose of getting some information. Why should this particular bank handle the matter?

Mr. GERNERD. Because the Treasury of the United States wants some responsible depository to do business with.

Mr. BLANTON. Is this particular bank going to give this enterprise that the gentleman is fostering the benefit of the premium or bonus at which these coins will sell?

Mr. GERNERD. The bank gets no interest out of it at all, except that it must make itself responsible to the United States Treasury, and being a member of the clearing house of New York City——

Mr. BLANTON. It will reap no benefit whatever, but carry out the purposes of this act?

Mr. GERNERD. Yes; and I wish to say that the President of the United States is the chairman of this celebration.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the third reading of the Senate bill as amended.

The Senate bill as amended was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. GERNERD, the similar House bill was laid on the table.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the next bill.

BRIDGE ACROSS THE NIAGARA RIVER.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (S. 4358) to authorize the American Niagara Railroad Corporation to build a bridge across the Niagara River between the State of New York and the Dominion of Canada.

The title of the bill was read.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. STAFFORD. Reserving the right to object, I would like to inquire where Grand Island is?

Mr. DEMPSEY. In the Niagara River between Buffalo and Tonawanda and Niagara Falls.

Mr. BLANTON. Is this island near Black Rock?

Mr. DEMPSEY. It is near Black Rock. The head of the island is opposite Black Rock.

Mr. STAFFORD. This island is not approximate to the Falls?

Mr. DEMPSEY. It comes down within 3 or 4 or 5 miles of the Falls.

Mr. STAFFORD. But it is not near the Falls themselves?

Mr. DEMPSEY. No; they are not in sight.

Mr. STAFFORD. What railroad companies are interested in this?

Mr. DEMPSEY. The Canadian Pacific and the New York Central. The purpose is to enable all through freight eastbound and westbound which does not stop at Buffalo to go over this bridge instead of going through the city of Buffalo.

Mr. STAFFORD. The purpose of my inquiry was to ascertain the location of the island, because I do not believe any Member of Congress would wish to pass a bridge act permitting a bridge to be placed over the island near the Falls.

Mr. DEMPSEY. This bridge would be 15 miles from the Falls.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, I withdraw the reservation.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the American Niagara Railroad Corporation, a corporation organized under the laws of the State of New York, its successors and assigns, be, and it hereby is, authorized to construct, maintain, and operate a bridge and approaches thereto for general railway purposes and with a way for the passage of pedestrians and of motor-driven and horse-drawn vehicles across the Niagara River at a point suitable to the interests of navigation, near the city of Tonawanda, N. Y., and across Grand Island, in accordance with the provisions of the act entitled "An act to regulate the construction of bridges over navigable waters," approved March 23, 1906: Provided, That before the construction of the said bridge shall be begun all proper and requisite authority therefor shall be obtained from the Government of the Dominion of Canada.

With a committee amendment, as follows:

Page 1, line 7, after the word "railway," insert the words "and highway."

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will read the next committee amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 2, line 4, after "1906," insert: "Provided, That said bridge shall contain and furnish adequate and suitable ways for the passage in both directions of horse-drawn and motor-driven vehicles and a way for pedestrians: And provided further."

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 2. That the right to alter, amend, or repeal this act is hereby expressly reserved.

Mr. MACGREGOR. Mr. Speaker, I move to strike out the last word.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from New York moves to strike out the last word.

Mr. MACGREGOR. I just wanted to explain, so that there would be no question as to the judicial or legislative intent in the passage of this bill.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield? I am going to make a point of order at 5 o'clock. I just want the steering committee to understand, so that they can send over and get enough men, so that we would not have a roll call.

Mr. MACGREGOR. I wanted it understood that this railroad bridge was to contain a highway passage for the benefit of the public, so that they could drive across from the mainland to Grand Island and from Grand Island to Canada; so that there would be no subterfuge or evasion on the part of these railroad companies which are to construct this bridge. It is for the benefit of the public.

That is all I want to say about it. It is a great contribution to the great industrial center of the world, as it is to be, and it will be pleasing to you when you come there. [Applause.]

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The pro forma amendment is withdrawn. The question is on the third reading of the Senate bill.

The Senate bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the next bill.

CHIPPEWA INDIANS OF MINNESOTA.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (H. R. 13953) authorizing, for the relief of the distress of the Chippewa Indians of Minnesota, the withdrawal of moneys from the tribal funds of said Indians.

The title of the bill was read.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of this bill?

Mr. STAFFORD. Reserving the right to object, what is the reason why we should have this additional appropriation over that carried in the Indian appropriation bill for the relief of these Indians?

Mr. LEATHERWOOD. The matter was heard before the Committee on Indian Affairs, and a very convincing showing was made that many of these Indians are in practically a starving condition, principlly because of the failure to get work in the places where they had formerly been able to get employment and on account of a shortage of crops and the general economic conditions surrounding them.

Mr. STAFFORD. Will the gentleman permit?

Mr. LEATHERWOOD. In just a moment. No money will be taken out of the Treasury of the United States. This is money that belongs to this tribe. The committee saw fit to reduce the amount asked for, because there are certain sums which are available already for their relief. So we cut it down to what we thought was the minimum amount that would be necessary to take care of them during the winter.

Mr. STAFFORD. Were the provisions of this proposed bill carried substantially in the omnibus Indian relief bill that passed the House a week ago Saturday?

Mr. LEATHERWOOD. I am not advised as to that.

Mr. STAFFORD. I think this bill had better be passed over without prejudice.

Mr. LEATHERWOOD. I am under the impression that this act was not included in the omnibus bill.

Mr. STAFFORD. My impression is that it was so included. I ask unanimous consent that the bill be passed over without prejudice.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Wisconsin asks unanimous consent that the bill be passed over without prejudice. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

MEDICAL SERVICES FOR THE COAST AND GEODETIC SURVEY.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (H. R. 9490) to provide for medical and hospital services for the officers and seamen of the Coast and Geodetic Survey.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. STAFFORD. I am inclined to object, Mr. Speaker, unless some explanation is made.

Mr. WINSLOW. Mr. Speaker, this is a very simple little proposal. It is that medical treatment be afforded to the officers and men on the Coast and Geodetic Survey ships when they are at sea and at a distance from any medical headquarters at which they could apply for attention. This is the only one of the branches of the sea service of the Government that does not have such medical attention at sea. It involves altogether perhaps five of six doctors or surgeons, as the case may be.

The ships of the Coast and Geodetic Survey frequently go into far-distant foreign waters, and according to the law as it stands to-day the only medical relief they can get is from some Public Health Service station which they may be able to reach. It is unfair for us to send out these ships without providing them with proper medical men. I think the present condition, which has existed for a good many years past, is the result of an oversight.

Mr. STAFFORD. What is the personnel on the Coast and Geodetic Survey ships?

Mr. WINSLOW. I think they run probably from 20 to 40. There are not many of them, and they will, under this bill, get from the Public Health Service a surgeon for a trip now and then, as the necessities of the case may require.

Mr. STAFFORD. It is not intended that they shall be permanently assigned to these ships?

Mr. WINSLOW. No; nor is that done in the Coast Guard. Both services have a lot of ships going out, which do neither have nor need any surgeons on board; but if they go into the Philippines, or to Asiatic ports, or to Alaska, or some other distant point, a physician should be assigned for each trip, and this bill will make such provision.

Mr. STAFFORD. I withdraw the reservation.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The reservation of objection is withdrawn. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the bill for amendment.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Public Health Service is authorized and directed to provide medical, surgical, and hospital services and supplies for the officers and seamen of the Coast and Geodetic Survey, including, when practicable, the detail of a medical officer on each of the vessels of the Coast and Geodetic Survey, in the same manner as and to the same extent that the Medical Corps of the Navy provides similar services and supplies for the officers and men of the Navy.

With the following committee amendment:

Page 1, line 3, strike out the words "and directed" and insert "in the discretion of the Secretary of the Treasury."

The amendment was agreed to.

Also the following committee amendment:

Page 1, line 7, after the word "of" strike out "a" and after the word "medical" strike out the word "officer" and insert the word "officers."

The amendment was agreed to.

Also the following committee amendment:

Page 1, line 8, after the word "on" strike out the words "each of" and in line 9, after the word "survey" strike out the remainder of the paragraph.

The amendment was agreed to.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time and was accordingly read the third time and passed.

BRIDGES ACROSS HUDSON RIVER AT ALBANY.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (H. R. 13978) granting the consent of Congress to the Hudson River Bridge Co. at Albany to maintain two bridges already constructed across the Hudson River.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the bill for amendment.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the consent of Congress is hereby granted to the Hudson River Bridge Co. at Albany, and its successors and assigns, to maintain and operate, in accordance with the provisions of the act entitled "An act to regulate the construction of bridges over navigable waters," approved March 23, 1906, a bridge and approaches thereto already constructed across the Hudson River at Albany, in the county of Albany, in the State of New York, in pursuance of the provisions of an act of the Legislature of the State of New York, entitled "An act authorizing the construction of a bridge across the Hudson River at Albany," passed April 9, 1856, and also a bridge and approaches thereto already constructed across the Hudson River in the State of New York, in pursuance of the provisions of an act of said Legislature of the State of New York, entitled "An act to amend the charter of the Hudson River Bridge Co. at Albany," passed May 10, 1869, or any act or acts of the said legislature now in force amending the said acts, or either of them, which bridges shall be deemed to have been constructed in accordance with the provision of the act entitled "An act to regulate the construction of bridges over navigable waters," approved March 23, 1906.

SEC. 2. That the right to alter, amend, or repeal this act is hereby expressly reserved.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, and was accordingly read the third time and passed.

CERTAIN LAND IN HURON COUNTY, MICH.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (H. R. 14296) to authorize the county of Huron, State of Michigan, to convey a certain described tract of land to the State of Michigan for public-park purposes.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. RAKER. Reserving the right to object, as I understand it the former act which we passed here turned this land over to the county of Huron, and the State now desires to take it over?

Mr. CRAMTON. The original act gave the county of Huron the authority to take up the land and pay the homestead price, and that was done. It is now proposed to give the same land to the State for use for park purposes.

Mr. RAKER. Under the same conditions?

Mr. CRAMTON. Under the same conditions, which are continued.

Mr. RAKER. I withdraw the reservation.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the bill for amendment.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the county of Huron, in the State of Michigan, is hereby authorized to convey to the State of Michigan all its title to and interest in the following tract of land, to wit: Lots 1 and 2, section 17, and the northeast quarter of the northeast quarter of section 20, township 18 north, range 11 east, in Michigan: Provided, That if the State of Michigan after such conveyance shall fail to use the land for public park purposes or shall devote the same to other uses, the title thereto shall revert to the United States.

SEC. 2. That the chairman of the board of supervisors and county clerk of the county of Huron, State of Michigan, when directed by the board of supervisors of said county, are authorized to execute such conveyance.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, and was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

ELEPHANT BUTTE IRRIGATION DISTRICT.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (H. R. 13550) authorizing the Secretary of the Interior to enter into a contract with the Elephant Butte irrigation district of New Mexico and the El Paso County improvement district No. 1, of Texas, for the carrying out of the provisions of the convention between the United States and Mexico, proclaimed January 16, 1907, and providing for compensation therefor.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, I am inclined to object. I think this bill is too large in its import to be considered by unanimous consent.

Mr. HUDSPETH. Will the gentleman withhold his objection?

Mr. STAFFORD. I reserve my objection.

Mr. HUDSPETH. Mr. Speaker, it is true that this is a very important bill. Owing to the near approach of the close of the session, it is necessary to place it upon the Calendar for Unanimous Consent in order to get it considered by this Congress. If the gentleman from Wisconsin will allow me to explain this bill, I do not believe he or any other gentleman will object to it.

When the Government built the reservoirs on the Rio Grande in Colorado and the northern part of New Mexico they dried up the river in parts and destroyed the crops of the Mexicans on the other side in the vicinity of El Paso. The Mexicans laid claim against the American Government for $35,000,000. At one time a bill was reported out of the Foreign Affairs Committee in the Senate providing for the building of a dam just north of El Paso, to cost, as I recall now, $2,900,000, in order to supply the loss of the Mexicans to this water. It was found that it would be necessary to move two railroad tracks and do other things to compensate private owners that would cost more than to build the dam. Finally it was decided to build the Elephant Butte Reservoir, 121 miles above El Paso. At that time, as you will see by reading the letter of the Secretary of the Interior embodied in this report, it was estimated that the reservoir would cost $7,218,000, or $40 an acre levied against the landowners of the Elephant Butte irrigation district of New Mexico and the El Paso irrigation district No. 1, of Texas. Mind you, this project cost double that amount, according to the notice now issued by the Secretary of the Interior, amounting to $14,500,000.

Now, I want to ask you, Why should the water users of the El Paso district and New Mexico pay for the delivery of this water to Mexico?

Under the treaty of 1906 between this country and Mexico this country obligated itself to furnish the Mexicans with 25,000 acre-feet of water, and the cost of that has been assessed against the El Paso water users and New Mexico at $1.50 an acre, Mr. Fall says. Now, I want to say to the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. STAFFORD] that when these hearings were had before the Irrigation Committee of the House, page 223 of the hearings, Mr. MONDELL, our present floor leader, chairman of the committee at that time, and Mr. Newell, chief engineer of the Reclamation Department, appeared before that committee and asked for an appropriation of $1,000,000 to pay for the cost of delivery of the water to Mexico. The chairman asked him what he estimated the cost of the storage of that amount of water to be, and he said it would supply 25,000 acre-feet and that the cost would be a million dollars. At that time Mr.

Newell asked for an appropriation of a million dollars out of the Federal Treasury and stated that he estimated the cost to be about $40 an acre. The American water users were to pay that. Mr. Fall says in his report on March 1 that the total cost has been $90 an acre, $50 more than when the contract was entered into to supply this water to the landowners of Mexico. Now, why should the water users be obligated to carry out this treaty between this country and Mexico? Is there any fair-minded man who will say that these water users should pay $1.50 an acre to deliver 25,000 acre-feet of water to Mexico? Should the American water users be forced to foot the bill to Mexico under the treaty entered into between the two countries? Does any gentleman on this floor rise and say they should? I pause for an answer, and no man rises.

Now, that is the case. It is recommended by the Secretary of the Interior. When we entered into the contract they said it would cost $40 an acre, and then on the 1st of March Secretary Fall says the cost was more than double—$90 an acre.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HUDSPETH. Yes.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. I understand the gentleman to say that on account of the damages sustained by the Mexican citizens this Government was obligated to pay damages to the citizens of Mexico?

Mr. HUDSPETH. Yes; they asked for $35,000,000, and there were many in favor of paying it.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. We had entered into obligations to pay them for damages which had been sustained by reason of the drying up of the river.

Mr. HUDSPETH. Yes.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. After they built the dam for the storage of the waters in Texas and New Mexico they were to pay damages to Mexico.

Mr. HUDSPETH. No; under the treaty of 1906 the United States agreed to supply Mexico with 25,000 acre-feet of water.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. And what the gentleman wants is that the Government make an allowance of $1,000,000 and have the two projects obligated to carry out the Government contract?

Mr. HUDSPETH. In perpetuity; yes. They agree in this bill to deliver this water to Mexico for all time to come if they are allowed $1,000,000 credit on the construction cost of the dam. You do not have to appropriate a dollar. They are paying for the drainage ditches also and they only ask that the Secretary credit the reclamation fund with $1,000,000. You understand, gentlemen, that the American water users are not only paying twice the estimated cost of the dam but in addition are paying over $3,000,000 for drainage ditches, and several thousand dollars each year for delivering this water from the main reservoir to the Acquia Madre, the Mexican ditch, at the head of the intake, where it flows onto the Mexican lands. Mr. Mack Thompson, representing the Reclamation Department before the Irrigation Committee, stated it would cost the American water users, to deliver this water to Mexico, several million dollars. It is not right and it is not fair. Read Secretary Fall's letter here and you will see he says so in plain words.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, under the reservation of objection I do not question but that some adjustment should be made by the Government in view of the obligations incurred in the treaty entered into between the United States and the Republic of Mexico, but this is too important a measure for us to determine here now what should be the amount.

Mr. HUDSPETH. I will state that the Secretary of the Interior has determined the amount.

Mr. STAFFORD. This is a million-dollar project and we can not go into the details. I believe that there should be some consideration given to the rights of these water users on the American side.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STAFFORD. I have read the report. The gentleman has not furnished any new information. I think he has only confirmed my position and the position of the House, that this is too important a measure to consider under unanimous consent. I yield to the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. BLANTON. The gentleman knows that it is a conceded fact almost that Doctor Work, the eminent gentleman from Colorado, is soon to be made Secretary of the Interior. Is not the gentleman from Wisconsin willing to risk his Secretary of the Interior in passing on a question concerning the rights of the people of the United States as against those of Mexico?

Mr. HUDSPETH. At the time this dam was constructed the Secretary of the Interior said that it would cost $40 an acre, and when they sent this notice out they say they must pay $90 an acre. Does the gentleman think that is fair?

Mr. STAFFORD. I say that there should be some adjustment.

Mr. HUDSPETH. But how are we going to get it unless the gentleman will let this bill come up on its merits?

Mr. STAFFORD. This bill comes from the Committee on Irrigation of Arid Lands. There have been more bills reported in the last few days from that committee than have been reported in months. I am not responsible. The Committee on Irrigation of Arid Lands is responsible.

Mr. SMITH of Idaho. The bill was introduced only on December 22.

Mr. STAFFORD. But a number of bills have been sleeping in the gentleman's committee for six months and just reported in the last few days.

Mr. HUDSPETH. This was given a thorough hearing.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HUDSPETH. Yes.

Mr. MONDELL. The gentleman knows that I am as friendly as any man can be to the irrigation projects.

Mr. HUDSPETH. Yes; I am sure of that.

Mr. MONDELL. I think, perhaps more than any other, I had to do with having the reclamation law applied to Texas. I am inclined to think this bill ought to pass, but I do say to my friend that I do not believe we ought to be asked to consider it by unanimous consent. I think there is too much involved in it.

Mr. HUDSPETH. I agree with the gentleman that there is a considerable amount involved, but I think we could thrash it out here. In fact, it is clearly shown that every Member here excepting the gentleman from Wisconsin agrees that there is equity and justice in this bill, and, in fact, the gentleman from Wisconsin has just admitted that this bill is meritorious. Now, let us consider it on its merits.

Mr. MONDELL. May I suggest to my friend that I have not anything on this calendar that I am interested in, but that a great many gentlemen have, and if we do not spend too much time on these very important matters we can get pretty well along with the calendar. I hope that an opportunity may be given to consider this bill, but I do not think the gentleman ought to ask us to consider it under unanimous consent.

Mr. HUDSPETH. Let me ask the gentleman from Wyoming if he can suggest how I could possibly get this bill before this House in any other way than to put it on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent at this time?

Mr. STAFFORD. The gentleman, I believe, is going to be in the next Congress—more fortunate than I am in that particular——

Mr. MONDELL. I make no promises, but I should be glad if any opportunity should be had to consider this bill during this Congress. I do not think it ought to be done on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent.

Mr. HUDSPETH. A measure was considered here to-day that involved $250,000, and I supported it.

Mr. MONDELL. This involves more than $1,000,000 and, in addition to that, a rather important decision in connection with reclamation projects. If it were my bill, I should not have any idea that the House would consider it on the Unanimous Consent Calendar.

Mr. HUDSPETH. I am undertaking to represent my people as best I can, and if there ever was a just measure introduced in this House it is this measure that asks the Federal Government to pay back to those who have gone down in their pockets and paid for the delivery of water to Mexico.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HUDSPETH. Yes.

Mr. RAKER. In the matter of the consideration of this bill, is it not a fact that it provides a final settlement between the United States and Mexico?

Mr. HUDSPETH. Yes.

Mr. MONDELL. I know, but I think objection would be made, and under those circumstances why would it not be better to go to the other bills that we can pass?

Mr. RAKER. I call the gentleman's attention to this. This matter has been presented to the committee, and it is the first time in a great many years where there has been a complete adjudication asked between the Government and any other parties whereby the two reclamation projects combine themselves in perpetuity—that is, all of their property—to continue the contract between the United States and Mexico. They will do it now, and it may cost this Government from $25,000 to $60,000 in perpetuity each year, whereby these reclamation districts agree now to complete and carry out forever these contracts and see to it that the water is delivered to Mexico.

Mr. MONDELL. All of which proves how important a bill it is, too important for consideration in connection with unanimous consent.

Mr. RAKER. I know, but when the Government has a good thing, why wait for somebody else to raise some other objection?

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, I object.

LOAN OF CHAIRS FOR THE USE OF UNITED CONFEDERATE VETERANS.

The next business in order on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was (H. J. Res. 437) a joint resolution authorizing the Secretary of War to loan 3,000 wooden folding chairs for the use of the United Confederate Veterans at their reunion to be held at New Orleans, La., on April 11, 12, and 13, 1923.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the joint resolution? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. DUPRÉ. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to substitute Senate Joint Resolution No. 279 for the House resolution.

The SPEAKER. Are they practically identical?

Mr. DUPRÉ. Practically identical.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause]. The Chair hears none. The Clerk will report the Senate joint resolution.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, etc., That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, authorized to loan, under such regulations as he may prescribe, 3,000 wooden folding chairs to William M. Garic, of New Orleans, La., for the use of the United Confederate Veterans at their reunion to be held in New Orleans, La., on April 11, 12, and 13, 1923.

The Senate joint resolution was ordered to be read the third time, was read the third time, and passed.

Mr. DUPRÉ. Mr. Speaker, I move to reconsider——

Mr. STAFFORD. I object to that.

The SPEAKER. Without objection the House joint resolution, similar to the Senate joint resolution, will be laid on the table.

There was no objection.

PRINTING ADDITIONAL COPIES SOIL SURVEY LAUDERDALE COUNTY, ALA.

The next business in order on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was House Concurrent Resolution 83, providing for printing additional copies of soil survey of Lauderdale County, Ala.

The Clerk read the title of the concurrent resolution.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of this concurrent resolution? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved by the House of Representatives (the Senate concurring), That there be printed 2,000 additional copies of the soil survey of Lauderdale County, Ala., for the use of the House document room.

The question was taken, and the concurrent resolution was agreed to.

LANDS IN SANTIAGO, CHILE.

The next business in order on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (S. 4522) authorizing the Secretary of State to convey certain land owned by the United States in Santiago, Chile, to the municipality of that city and to acquire or receive in exchange therefor other land located in the said city.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of this bill? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of State, acting as the agent of the Government of the United States, is hereby authorized to convey to the municipality of Santiago, Chile, the title to and interest in a portion, containing not more than 30 square meters, of that parcel of land located in the city of Santiago on which the American Embassy is situated, together with the building thereon, known as 206 Merced Street, and other appurtenances thereto, and to acquire with the proceeds thereof, which are hereby appropriated for that purpose, or receive in exchange therefor title to a parcel of land not exceeding 30 square meters in extent at the western end of Bueras Street and the appurtenances pertaining thereto.

The bill was ordered to be read the third time, was read the third time, and passed.

WATER RIGHTS, INDIANS OF THE BLACKFEET RESERVATION.

The next business in order on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (S. 4061) authorizing the Secretary of the Interior to enter into an agreement with Toole County irrigation district, of Shelby, Mont., and the Cut Bank irrigation district, of Cut Bank, Mont., for the settlement of the extent of the priority to the waters of Two Medicine, Cut Bank, and Badger Creeks, of the Indians of the Blackfeet Indian Reservation.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of this bill? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized to enter into an agreement, jointly or separately, with the Toole County irrigation district, of Shelby, Mont., and the Cut Bank irrigation district, of Cut Bank, Mont., and thereby to fix the extent of the prior right of the Indians residing and entitled to reside on the Blackfeet Indian Reservation, collectively, to the waters of Two Medicine, Cut Bank, and Badger Creeks: Provided, That said districts shall furnish in advance the entire cost to be incurred in determining the amount of the water of said streams to which such Indians are so entitled to priority.

The bill was ordered to be read the third time, was read the third time, and passed.

PROVIDING FOR HOLDING SESSIONS OF THE UNITED STATES DISTRICT COURT IN THE DISTRICT OF MAINE.

The next business in order on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (H. R. 14135) to amend an act approved September 8, 1916, providing for holding sessions of the United States District Court in the district of Maine, and for other purposes.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of this bill? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the act of Congress approved September 8, 1916, entitled "An act to provide for holding sessions of the United States District Court in the district of Maine and for dividing said district into divisions, and providing for offices of the clerk and marshal of said district to be maintained in each of said divisions, and for the appointment of a field deputy marshal in the division in which the marshal does not reside," be amended in the first section thereof by striking out the word "February" where it appears first in said section, substituting therefor the word "November," so that the said section, when amended, shall read as follows:

"That hereafter, and until otherwise provided by law, two sessions of the United States District Court for the district of Maine shall be held in each and every year in the city of Bangor, in said district, beginning, respectively, on the first Tuesday of November and the first Tuesday of June, and three sessions of said court shall be held in each and every year in the city of Portland, in said district, beginning, respectively, on the first Tuesday of April, on the third Tuesday of September, and on the second Tuesday in December."

Mr. HERSEY. Mr. Speaker, I offer the following amendment.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 2, line 12, after the word "December," insert "Provided, however, That in the year 1923 the session of said court at Bangor, beginning on the first Tuesday of November, shall be held in addition to the sessions in February and June now provided for by law."

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, I rise in opposition to the amendment. What is the necessity of singling out Bangor for having an extra session this year? You make provision to have it changed as desired, and now you are making a special regulation.

Mr. HERSEY. The bill provides for the change from June to November, and to make it clear I offered an amendment that at the time of the change the new term will commence with the next term.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read the third time, was read the third time, and passed.

ELEPHANT BUTTE IRRIGATION DISTRICT.

Mr. HUDSPETH. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the bill H. R. 13550 retain its place on the calendar.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

PAYMENT OF COST OF TRANSPORTATION, ETC.

The next business in order on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (H. R. 9408) to authorize the payment of the cost of transportation from the appropriation from which the supplies are purchased.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I object.

AMENDING AN ACT TO CODIFY, REVISE, AND AMEND THE LAWS RELATING TO THE JUDICIARY.

The next business in order on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (H. R. 14324) to amend section 107 of the act entitled "An act to codify, revise, and amend the laws relating to the judiciary," approved March 3, 1911, as heretofore amended.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of this bill?

Mr. LONDON. I reserve the right to object, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. STAFFORD. I reserve the right to object.

The SPEAKER. The gentlemen from New York and Wisconsin reserve the right to object.

Mr. STAFFORD. I would like to inquire of the gentleman how near are the present places for holding court to these additional places provided by this bill, Winchester and Columbia?

Mr. TURNER. Under 100 miles from Nashville.

Mr. STAFFORD. Does this bill have the approval of the local bars and communities?

Mr. TURNER. Yes.

Mr. STAFFORD. Has it been agitated by the members of the bar in the communities?

Mr. TURNER. They all know about it. It has been published in the newspapers.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, I withdraw the reservation.

Mr. LONDON. And I withdraw my reservation.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 107 of the act entitled "An act to codify, revise, and amend the laws relating to the judiciary," approved March 3, 1911, as heretofore amended, be, and it is, amended so as to read as follows:

"SEC. 107. The State of Tennessee is divided into three districts, to be known as the eastern, middle, and western districts of Tennessee. The eastern district shall include the territory embraced on the 1st day of July, 1910, in the counties of Bledsoe, Bradley, Hamilton, James, Marion, McMinn, Meigs, Polk, Rhea, and Sequatchie, which shall constitute the southern division of said district; also the territory embraced on the date last mentioned in the counties of Anderson, Blount, Campbell, Claiborne, Grainger, Jefferson, Knox, Loudon, Monroe, Morgan, Roane, Sevier, Scott, and Union, which shall constitute the northern division of said district; also the territory embraced on the date last mentioned in the counties of Carter, Cocke, Greene, Hamblen, Hancock, Hawkins, Johnson, Sullivan, Unicoi, and Washington, which shall constitute the northeastern division of said district. Terms of the district court for the southern division of said district shall be held at Chattanooga on the fourth Monday in April and the second Monday in November; for the northern division at Knoxville on the fourth Monday in May and the first Monday in December; and for the northeastern district at Greeneville on the first Monday in March and the third Monday in September. The middle district shall include the territory embraced on the 1st day of July, 1910, in the counties of Bedford, Cannon, Cheatham, Davidson, Dickson, Hickman, Humphreys, Houston, Montgomery, Robertson, Rutherford, Stewart, Sumner, Trousdale, Williamson, and Wilson, which shall constitute the Nashville division of said district, also the territory embraced on the date last mentioned in the counties of Franklin, Warren, Grundy, Coffee, and Moore, which shall constitute the Winchester division of said district; also the territory on the date last mentioned in the counties of Giles, Lawrence, Lewis, Lincoln, Marshall, Wayne, and Maury, which shall constitute the Columbia division of said district; also the territory embraced on the date last mentioned in the counties of Clay, Cumberland, Dekalb, Fentress, Jackson, Macon, Overton, Pickett, Putnam, Smith, Van Buren, and White, which shall constitute the northeastern division of said district. Terms of the district court for the Nashville division of said district shall be held at Nashville on the second Monday in March and the fourth Monday in September; for the Winchester division at Winchester on the first Monday in April and the third Monday in November; for the Columbia division at Columbia on the third Monday in June and the fourth Monday in November; and for the northeastern division at Cookeville on the third Monday in April and the first Monday in November: Provided, That suitable accommodations for holding the courts at Winchester, Columbia, and Cookeville shall be provided by the local authorities without expense to the United States. The western district shall include the territory embraced on the 1st day of July, 1910, in the counties of Dyer, Fayette, Haywood, Lauderdale, Shelby, and Tipton, which shall constitute the western division of said district; also the territory embraced on the date last mentioned in the counties of Benton, Carroll, Chester, Crockett, Decatur, Gibson, Hardeman, Hardin, Henderson, Henry, Lake, McNairy, Madison, Obion, Perry, and Weakley, including the waters of the Tennessee River to low-water mark on the eastern shore thereof wherever such river forms the boundary line between the western and middle districts of Tennessee, from the north line of the State of Alabama, north to the point, Henry County, Tenn., where the south boundary line of the State of Kentucky strikes the east bank of the river, which shall constitute the eastern division of said district. Terms of the district court for the western division of said district shall be held at Memphis on the fourth Mondays in May and November; and for the eastern division at Jackson on the fourth Mondays in April and October. The clerk of the court for the western district shall appoint a deputy who shall reside at Jackson. The marshal for the western district shall appoint a deputy who shall reside at Jackson. The marshal for the eastern district shall appoint a deputy who shall reside at Chattanooga. The clerk of the court for the eastern district shall maintain an office in charge of himself or a deputy at Knoxville, at Chattanooga, and at Greeneville, which shall be kept open at all times for the transaction of the business of the court."

The SPEAKER. The question is on the third reading of the bill.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I move to strike out the last word.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Texas moves to strike out the last word.

Mr. BLANTON. I do so to ask a question. As I understand it, the only change that this makes in the law is to provide for holding court at two new places. I would like to ask the gentleman why it is necessary, every time one of these bills is brought in, except in one instance, in the case of my colleague here [Mr. HUDSPETH], at numerous times, to rewrite the whole act. In my colleague's case a bill was finally brought in, making the change desired, without reenacting the entire law. Here is a bill covering several pages, when the only change in the law is to provide for holding court in two new places. Does the Judiciary Committee require that?

Mr. TURNER. They have done it in this case. I am informed that that is the legal way to get it up; that is the right way.

Mr. VOLSTEAD. We used to pursue the policy of just making the change desired, but when we came into the House we got "roasted" on several occasions for doing it. It is a great deal better to repeat the whole law, so that everybody could understand it.

Mr. BLANTON. When you repeat the whole law, no one can understand it. I think the gentleman's committee ought to instruct Members that it is not necessary to reenact the entire law.

Mr. VOLSTEAD. It would be more convenient to the committee to make only the change desired.

Mr. HUDSPETH. They did that in the case I was interested in, and they left out two courts.

Mr. BLANTON. Yes; but finally they drew the bill properly. I withdraw my pro forma amendment.

The SPEAKER. The pro forma amendment is withdrawn. The question is on the third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the next bill.

AMENDMENT OF THE TRANSPORTATION ACT, 1920.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (H. R. 14309) to amend section 206 of the transportation act, 1920.

The title of the bill was read.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of this bill?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 206 of the transportation act, 1920, is amended by adding at the end thereof two new subdivisions to read as follows:

"(h) Actions, suits, proceedings, and reparation claims, of the character described in subdivision (a) or (c), properly commenced within the period of limitation prescribed, and pending at the time this subdivision takes effect, shall not abate by reason of the death, expiration of term of office, retirement, resignation, or removal from office of the agent designated under subdivision (a), but may (despite the provisions of the act entitled 'An act to prevent the abatement of certain actions,' approved February 8, 1899), be prosecuted to final judgment, decree, or award, substituting at any time before satisfaction of such final judgment, decree, or award the agent designated by the President then in office. Nor shall any action, suit, or other proceeding heretofore or hereafter brought by any public officer or official, in his official capacity, to enforce or compel the performance of an obligation due or accruing to the United States arising out of Federal control, abate by reason of the death, resignation, retirement, or removal from office of such officer or official, but such action, suit, or other proceeding may (despite the provisions of such act of February 8, 1899), be prosecuted to final judgment, decree, or award, substituting at any time before satisfaction of any such final judgment, decree, or award the successor in office.

"(i) Orders providing for a substitution in such cases made before this subdivision takes effect by courts having jurisdiction of the parties and subject matter are hereby validated, anything in such act of February 8, 1899, to the contrary notwithstanding. Actions, suits, reparation claims, or other proceedings of the character described in subdivision (h) which have been abated or dismissed solely because of the provisions of such act of February 8, 1899, shall be reinstated upon reasonable notice to the adverse party, and upon proper motion therefor filed within one year from the time this subdivision takes effect."

Mr. SANDERS of Indiana. Mr. Speaker, I send two separate amendments to the Clerk's desk.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Indiana offers two amendments. The Clerk will report the first one.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. SANDERS of Indiana: Page 1, line 7, strike out "(a) or (c)" and insert in lieu thereof "(a), (c), or (d)."

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the other amendment offered by the gentleman from Indiana.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. SANDERS of Indiana: Page 1, line 11, after the word "the," insert the words "Director General of Railroads or."

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted as follows:

To Mr. STEVENSON, for to-day, on account of illness.

To Mr. KINDRED (at the request of Mr. DOWLING), indefinitely, on account of illness.

RECESS.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House stand in recess until 8 o'clock.

Mr. CONNALLY of Texas. Mr. Speaker, is the business to-night business on the Private Calendar?

The SPEAKER. It is. The gentleman from Wyoming moves that the House stand in recess until 8 o'clock this evening. The question is on agreeing to that motion.

The motion was agreed to; accordingly (at 5 o'clock and 28 minutes p. m.) the House stood in recess until 8 o'clock p. m.

EVENING SESSION.

The recess having expired, the House (at 8 o'clock p. m.) resumed its session.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the first bill on the Private Calendar, beginning where we left off the last time.

J. B. GLANVILLE AND OTHERS.

The first business on the Private Calendar was the bill (S. 854) to reimburse J. B. Glanville and others for losses and damages sustained by them through the negligent dipping of tick-infested cattle by the Bureau of Animal Industry, Department of Agriculture.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of this bill?

Mr. STAFFORD. I object.

The SPEAKER. Objection is made. The Clerk will report the next bill.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. Craven, its Chief Clerk, announced that the Senate had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 13793) making appropriations for the military and nonmilitary activities of the War Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1924, and for other purposes.

LOWE HAYDEN BIBBY.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (S. 3690) for the relief of Lowe Hayden Bibby.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of this bill?

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, will some gentleman explain the purpose of this bill?

Mr. KRAUS. Mr. Speaker, I will say to the gentleman from Wisconsin that about a year ago, and some three or four months before the last class graduated at the Naval Academy, there was much agitation in Congress as to whether or not the class would be permitted to graduate. As a result of this agitation a considerable number of the members of the class tendered their resignations to the department with a view of taking up some other vocation in life. None of these resignations were acted upon except this one, all the rest being withdrawn before they were acted upon. This young ensign, Bibby, made an effort to withdraw his resignation, but previous to his request for its withdrawal action was taken by the department accepting it. All the members of his class who received proper ratings—and, by the way, Mr. Bibby received proper ratings—were permitted to graduate, their resignations being withdrawn, but Mr. Bibby's resignation having been accepted, the department held that it was not empowered to allow him to withdraw it.

Mr. STAFFORD. Do I understand that this young officer was not on duty at all during this time?

Mr. KRAUS. Not since his graduation. He was permitted to graduate with his class, but has not been on duty since.

Mr. STAFFORD. Will the gentleman accept an amendment at the end of the bill providing that he shall not be entitled to pay or allowances for the time he has not been on active service?

Mr. KRAUS. Certainly; it was the intention of the committee to offer such an amendment.

Mr. BUTLER. It was understood that we would offer that amendment.

Mr. KRAUS. The gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. LOWREY] is interested in this bill and would like to make a statement.

Mr. LOWREY. I would like to discuss this briefly if the gentleman will withhold his amendment. The House passed a bill commissioning only 250 of this class out of over 500, and these young men, thinking they were not going to get commissions, resigned. After they had resigned the Senate failed to pass that bill, and they found they could get commissions. They then undertook to withdraw their resignations. All their resignations were withdrawn except that of this one young man.

Mr. STAFFORD. It is generally understood that we have too many naval officers, but this one young man should not be penalized just because he did not get under the tent in time. I withdraw the reservation of objection.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the bill.

Mr. LOWREY. I wanted to speak in opposition to the amendment if I could have a minute.

The bill was read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the President of the United States is hereby authorized to appoint, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, Lowe Hayden Bibby, who graduated from the United States Naval Academy on June 2, 1922, an ensign in the United States Navy, to rank next after Ensign Robert McCormick Peacher: Provided, That such appointment shall be regarded, to all intents and purposes, as having been made upon his graduation from the United States Naval Academy, and as though his resignation which became effective June 2, 1922, had not been accepted.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, I offer the following amendment if the Committee on Naval Affairs have no amendment prepared.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Wisconsin offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment by Mr. STAFFORD: At the end of the bill insert after the word "accepted" the following: "But that he shall not be entitled to receive any pay or allowances for the time he has not been in active service."

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the third reading of the bill.

The bill as amended was ordered to a third reading, and was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

CERTAIN ESTATES.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (S. 158) for the relief of certain estates.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, there is a minority report on this bill signed by four members of the committee. I do not think it should be considered by unanimous consent and therefore I object.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Wisconsin objects. The Clerk will report the next bill.

JOE T. WHITE.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 8533) for the relief of Joe T. White.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I wish to ask as to the facts in this case. As I recall it, this post office was first established as a fourth-class office.

Mr. GENSMAN. It may have been a fourth-class office to begin with, but it was in a town of 60,000 people.

Mr. STAFFORD. It was not in a town of 60,000 people when the office was first established.

Mr. GENSMAN. There were between 50,000 and 60,000 people on the ground. It was a tent town, of course, at first. There were no buildings there to begin with.

Mr. STAFFORD. I understand the chairman of the committee has some amendment to suggest.

Mr. EDMONDS. The amendment is to reduce the amount to $920.83.

Mr. GENSMAN. The post-office inspectors found the amount due to be $1,882.65.

Mr. EDMONDS. The department letter calls for $920.83.

Mr. GENSMAN. I think the first report showed something over $1,800. The committee cut it right square in two in the former Congress.

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to Joe T. White, late postmaster at Lawton, Okla., the sum of $1,882.65, as a reimbursement for extraordinary expenses incurred by the opening and conduct of said office.

I do not know why they did it, but the report of the department gave him $1,800.

Mr. EDMONDS. The department gives him $920; that is all that is due him, so they say.

Mr. STAFFORD. With the statement made by the gentleman from Oklahoma, Mr. Speaker, and the suggested amendment by the chairman, I have no objection.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to Joe T. White, late postmaster at Lawton, Okla., the sum of $1,882.65, as a reimbursement for extraordinary expenses incurred by the opening and conduct of said office.

Mr. EDMONDS. I offer the following amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Line 6, strike out the figures "$1,882.65" and insert in lieu thereof "$920.83."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

JACOB DIETCH.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill H. R. 10847, a bill for the relief of Jacob Dietch.

The Clerk read the title to the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the consideration of the bill?

Mr. STAFFORD. I will reserve an objection, so that the author of the bill may make an explanation.

Mr. BUTLER. Mr. Speaker, in June, 1921, the chemical department of the Army asked permission to make an exhibition, and this unfortunate lad was allowed to go to the grounds, as was everybody else. There was quite a collection of people. He was taken to a place where everybody supposed he would be entirely safe. A shell exploded. The War Department says the shell was overcharged and that it was overcharged against the direction of the department itself. It advised the officers not to overcharge the shells, not to fully load them for exhibition purposes. A piece of the shell struck an innocent child and he was badly hurt and finally died in the hospital. This is only for the purpose of paying the funeral expenses and the doctor's bill. The people are poor and have no other way for relief. The department says that the Government was not liable nor negligent.

Mr. STAFFORD. The difficulty I have in the case is that it was not the representative of the Chemical Warfare Service that requested this, but an officer of the Pennsylvania Military Academy, Major Bowman, who solicited an exhibition and agreed to be responsible for all damages that might occur by reason of this exhibition.

Mr. BUTLER. I do not so understand it.

Mr. STAFFORD. That is the trouble, and I will direct the attention of the chairman to the statement of Lieut. Joseph Batley in reference to these tactical maneuvers.

Mr. EDMONDS. Bowman was a Regular Army officer, selected from the Army as a military instructor.

Mr. STAFFORD. He was the representative of the military college.

Mr. EDMONDS. No; he was a representative of the Government.

Mr. STAFFORD. Let me read from the report:

On May 26, 1921, Maj. E. N. Bowman, military instructor of the Pennsylvania Military College, called at headquarters of Edgewood Arsenal to see the commanding officer. Major Atkisson being away at the time, Major Bowman asked me if I thought it possible to arrange a tactical maneuver using Chemical Warfare Service troops and matériel at the Pennsylvania Military College on June 13 in connection with other similar maneuvers by other branches of the Army. I told him that approval would have to come from Washington before we could assist him in any way, but that I would put his plans up to the commanding officer. Major Bowman then went into details regarding the range which we could use. I informed Major Bowman that I did not consider it safe to fire Stokes mortars or Liven projectors unless we had plenty of room, as we would use real ammunition and it would be dangerous used in a restricted area. Major Bowman then drew plans showing the two fields which we could use as a range. I told him that I thought they were inadequate as they were built up pretty close and in some instances buildings were right in line of fire. He appeared very anxious that we assist him. Then I told him if we sent men up there we would have to be relieved from all responsibility. Major Bowman stated to me in the presence of Miss Johnson, the commanding officer's secretary, that the college would make arrangements to assume all responsibility and pay all expenses and secure clearance on all property not belonging to the college that we would require for this maneuver.

That shows that the Government of the United States, the Chemical Warfare Service, was to be relieved of all responsibility. Here this military college wants an exhibition. An act happened as a result of their solicitation. Why should not the Pennsylvania Military College pay these damages?

Mr. BUTLER. I do not think the gentleman has read the facts stated in the Secretary's letter. Read the letter of the Secretary of War.

Mr. STAFFORD. I am reading the official report of the Chemical Warfare Service.

Mr. BUTLER. I will read from the letter of the Secretary of War.

Mr. STAFFORD. Let me read what was said——

Mr. BUTLER. I hope that the gentleman will not object to this; it is one of the most charitable things that I have ever known, and this father asks no more than the bare cost of the funeral expenses and the doctor's bill.

Mr. STAFFORD. I want to be as generous as possible. How many other claims are there?

Mr. BUTLER. Only one other, a very small one, the case of a woman who was badly hurt.

Mr. STAFFORD. How much does that amount to?

Mr. EDMONDS. It amounts to $1,400.

Mr. STAFFORD. With the finding of the board, which placed the responsibility upon the Pennsylvania Military College, I am wondering why some of these private institutions do not open up somewhat.

Mr. BUTLER. The coroner's jury held that there was no responsibility upon anybody.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I demand the regular order.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, I do not intend to object.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to Jacob Dietch, of Chester, Pa., the sum of $739.10 for medical attention and burial expenses of his minor son, Samuel Dietch, who was fatally injured when struck by fragments of an overcharged shell during a demonstration at the Pennsylvania Military College, Chester, Pa., by the Chemical Warfare Service, United States Army, operating in conjunction with the Pennsylvania Military College on the night of June 13, 1921.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

ESTELLA W. DOUGHERTY.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 10848) for the relief of Estella W. Dougherty.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, this is a bill that grows out of the same accident referred to in the last bill, but in reading the report I notice that somebody is trying to work the Government. The mother had a position at the Eddystone Print Works at the wage of $15.36 per week, and she files a claim for $1,400 for nursing her daughter from June 13 to October 24, 1921, at the rate of $150 per month. If she was receiving only $15.36 per week while she was engaged at the Eddystone Print Works, why should we pay her while nursing her daughter at the rate of $150 a month?

Mr. BUTLER. Mr. Speaker, if the gentleman thinks there is too much money called for, I suggest that we amend the bill and make it $500.

Mr. STAFFORD. Amend it by cutting it down one-half?

Mr. BUTLER. That will be satisfactory.

Mr. STAFFORD. And that will be even more than she was receiving while in the employ of the Eddystone Print Works.

Mr. BUTLER. Perhaps a little bit more, but that will pay the loss.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, I withdraw the reservation of objection with that understanding.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk read the bill as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to Estella W. Dougherty, of Chester, Pa., the sum of $1,400, for medical attention and for expenses incurred by her incident to being struck and injured by fragments of an over-charged shell during a demonstration at the Pennsylvania Military College, Chester, Pa., by the Chemical Warfare Service, United States Army, operating in conjunction with the Pennsylvania Military College on the night of June 13, 1921.

Mr. BUTLER. Mr. Speaker, it is understood that we will amend this bill by reducing the sum from $1,400 to $700, and I offer the following amendment which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 1, line 6, strike out the figures "$1,400" and insert in lieu thereof the figures "$700."

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

ALBERT H. WHITE, MARY E. FOWLER, ET AL.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 624) for the relief of Albert H. White, Mary E. Fowler, Lorena B. Winkler, E. E. White, and C. A. White.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, may we have the bill reported?

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the title to lot 271 and the west half of lot 286 in block 16 of the old city of Pensacola, Fla., according to map of said city of Pensacola, Escambia County, Fla., copyrighted by Thomas C. Watson in A. D. 1906, be, and it is hereby, confirmed and relinquished to Albert H. White, Mary E. Fowler, Lorena B. Winkler, E. E. White, and C. A. White: Provided, That this confirmation shall only operate as a relinquishment of the title of the United States in and to the said property to said parties.

With the following amendment:

Page 1, line 6, after the word "Florida" strike out the words "copyrighted by Thomas C. Watson, in anno Domini 1906" and insert in lieu thereof the words "platted by James W. Exum in 1827."

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the committee amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

ELEVATED SIDINGS FOR B. & O. RAILWAY, WASHINGTON, D. C.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (S. 3083) authorizing the construction of elevated railroad sidings adjacent the steam-railroad tracks in the District of Columbia.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I object.

Mr. A. P. NELSON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman reserve his objection?

Mr. BLANTON. Yes.

Mr. A. P. NELSON. Mr. Speaker, this bill is merely to grant to the owners of square 710 the same privileges exactly as are now enjoyed by the owners of squares 711 and 712. The bill has passed the Senate. It has been carefully investigated by a subcommittee and favorably reported by that subcommittee. It has been personally inspected by members of the committee. Personally I have carefully investigated it. It seems to me that in all fairness to the owners of square 710 the privilege asked for in the bill should be granted to them inasmuch as the owners of 711 and 712 have that privilege now.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, my only reason for objecting is that I do not believe we ought to grant either the Baltimore & Ohio or the Pennsylvania Railroad Co. any more benefits in the District of Columbia until they realize that the people of this District and the Government have some rights themselves.

Let the gentleman go out here to-night and get in his car, and he may have some of the best friends in his district coming here to visit Washington, and let him go down to the station to meet them. He can not drive up to the station proper. He has to let the first passageway go by because certain friends of the Baltimore & Ohio and the Pennsylvania have the right to that passageway; then he has to let the second passageway go by for the same reason, because these friends pay a certain amount of money for having that privilege. They only have the right of way. But the gentleman, a Congressman, meeting his constitutents, the people of the United States who are coming into this District over one of these systems, has to go into the third passageway, somewhat removed, and then he must park his car about four blocks away from the station sometimes if he wants to leave it. I say that whenever you grant another benefit to these two systems we should make them first understand that the people of the District and the Government have some rights.

Mr. A. P. NELSON. Mr. Speaker, I agree entirely with what the gentleman has said, but may I say this to the gentleman, that his objections raised has really nothing to do with this particular bill, because this square number 710 in question is half a mile north of the Union Station, and it does not grant the Baltimore & Ohio any special privileges? It merely seeks to grant to the owners of square 710 the same privileges which are now granted to the owners of squares 711 and 712 and give justice and square dealing to all concerned.

Mr. BLANTON. I will do anything on earth personally to accommodate my friend, who is a friend to everybody in this House, but this is a benefit specially to the Baltimore & Ohio Railroad.

Mr. A. P. NELSON. No; the gentleman is mistaken; it is not.

Mr. HICKS rose.

Mr. BLANTON. I want to say right now to the gentleman from New York that this very railroad association, when Congress is about to adjourn on March 4, and there are several thousand Government employees down here in all these hotels, has now made an order trying to force Congress to buy its property down here for these Government hotels for its employees and pay a fabulous price, and it is not right and I am not in favor of granting——

Mr. HICKS. If the gentleman will permit, does he not think after his speech of to-night that the railroads are sufficiently warned as to what will happen to them in the future?

Mr. BLANTON. I am opposed—— [Cries of "Regular order!"]

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. BLANTON. I will object if we are forced——

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the next bill.

Mr. STAFFORD. Just a minute. I would like to show the gentleman a map.

The SPEAKER. The regular order has been demanded.

Mr. STAFFORD. I have no interest in this but I want to call the gentleman's attention to block 711 immediately to the south——

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, if the gentleman from Wisconsin is willing to pass it I will pass it. [Applause.]

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Commissioners of the District of Columbia are hereby authorized, in their discretion, to grant to any steam railroad company authorized to have tracks in the District of Columbia permits to construct overhead or underground sidings from the lines of said railroad into such squares or parts of squares in the District of Columbia as may be included within any industrial area now or hereafter established under authority of law: Provided, That no grade crossings shall thereby be created; but such overhead or underground crossings may cross a street, avenue, or road within such industrial area.

The committee amendment was read, as follows:

Strike out all after the enacting clause down to and including line 2, on page 2, and insert:

That the Baltimore & Ohio Railroad Co. is hereby authorized to construct and maintain elevated sidings in the city of Washington, D. C., across N Street north, between First and Second Streets east, and across Second Street east, between N Street and Florida Avenue north, said sidings to be connected with and to spring from any of its tracks in square No. 711, or from any of its tracks south of Florida Avenue, and to connect with elevated tracks in square No. 710: Provided, That such sidings shall not be at a lower grade above the present grade of N Street than the siding in N Street constructed and maintained under authority of the act of Congress approved June 27, 1906.

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read the third time, was read the third time, and passed.

The title was amended to conform to the text.

Mr. A. P. NELSON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks on the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

STATEMENT REGARDING BILL S. 3083.

HISTORY OF PRESENT BILL.

Mr. A. P. NELSON. Mr. Speaker, bill S. 3083, as originally introduced by Senator BALL, chairman of the Senate District Committee, authorized the Baltimore & Ohio Railroad to construct and maintain elevated sidings across N and Second Streets NE. into square 710 in the District of Columbia. At the request of the District Commissioners the bill was amended by the Senate District Committee to give the commissioners general authority to grant, at their discretion, sidings across any streets within the industrial area. In this form the bill passed the Senate.

The House District Committee did not think it wise to transfer such authority to the commissioners, and, after inspecting the property, reamended the bill back to its original form and gave it a unanimously favorable report. In its present and orginal form it authorizes the construction of sidings only into square 710.

LOCATION OF SQUARE AND SURROUNDING PROPERTY.

Square 710 lies about one-half mile north of the Union Station and is just southwest of the intersection of Florida Avenue and the railroad viaduct. The properties to the north, east, and south of square 710 are all occupied with railroad tracks. To the north lie the Baltimore & Ohio Railroad freight yards; to the east is square 710 east, occupied partly by the District for storage purposes and by the main lines of the Pennsylvania and the Baltimore & Ohio Railroads; to the south is square 711, which is completely occupied by the Baltimore & Ohio Railroad coal trestles; farther to the south are squares 712 and 713, both of which have railroad facilities. Even N Street itself is partly occupied by an elevated railroad trestle used by the District for crushed-stone deliveries. In fact, square 710 is the only property directly west of the railroad tracks, for more than a mile north of the Union Station, that does not have railroad facilities.

APPROVED BY DISTRICT COMMISSIONERS; BALTIMORE & OHIO RAILROAD AND OWNERS OF SQUARE.

The District Commissioners have formally reported in a letter to the Senate District Committee that if they had the authority they would grant siding privileges to this square. The Baltimore & Ohio Railroad also approves and supports this legislation, as do the owners of the square. These three groups constitute all interests owning property which is directly affected by the proposed legislation.

NO LEGITIMATE OPPOSITION TO THE BILL IN ITS PRESENT FORM.

The only possible opposition is that which might be stimulated by the owners of similar and competitive property, already equipped with railroad facilities, who wish to retain their monopoly of this class of land.

WILL NOT OBSTRUCT USE OF STREETS.

The crossing with elevated sidings of N Street or Second Street NE.—one or both—will not interfere with their continued use. These streets—the southern and eastern boundaries of square 710—are used only to a minor degree, chiefly serve this square, and are in no sense general thoroughfares. They terminate at their intersection at the southeast corner of the square. N Street is already partly occupied by an elevated siding.

WILL NOT PERMIT DEVELOPMENT INIMICAL TO PUBLIC INTEREST.

The proposed sidings will necessarily be elevated and of heavy steel and concrete construction. They will be perfectly safe and will not block the streets. Railroad facilities in the square will not permit its use for any offensive or detrimental purpose. District building regulations will see to that.

NO DETRIMENTAL EFFECT ON SIBLEY HOSPITAL.

Alarm that the industrial development of the square might be detrimental to the best interests of Sibley Hospital is groundless, because already and for many years property lying one block nearer the hospital has had railroad facilities and has been industrially developed.

ESTABLISHES NO NEW PRECEDENT.

The passage of the proposed bill will not establish any new precedent. There are many places in the District where the main-line railroad tracks are carried across streets on elevated structures. This is particularly the case along Maryland and Virginia Avenues, in the southwest part of the city. In Georgetown, even for a considerable distance along Water Street, the tracks of the Pennsylvania Railroad occupy the center of the street. In the vicinity of the Government fuel yard several railroad tracks cross I Street on grade and a branch track also runs on grade along and across several streets in the southeast section of the city all the way to the navy yard.

DISTRICT COMMISSIONERS' ATTITUDE FAVORABLE FOR LONG PERIOD.

That the District Commissioners have long recognized the suitability of this square for industrial and railroad development and have looked forward to its ultimate use for such purposes is clearly shown by the following:

1914. FROM STATEMENT FURNISHED OWNERS BY ENGINEER COMMISSIONER.

The approval of such proposition (siding into square 710) would be in line with the past policy of the commissioners and in accordance with the plans of occupation laid out in conjunction with the establishment of the Union Station.

The railroad tracks formerly ran on First Street east, which is now the west boundary of square 710, and when the tracks were removed from this street to their present location in conjunction with the construction of Union Station it was the intention to reserve for railroad occupation those squares in the vicinity of the relocated tracks east of First Street.

Applications were made for siding extension into squares south of 710 at the time of the elimination of grade crossings, and were approved as part of that project, and had the question of the occupation of 710 been advanced at that time, either by the railroad or by other interested parties, this office would have recommended such occupation.

This square is well adapted for siding purposes and is practically in the same situation with reference to the railroad as the squares south, being separated from the railroad right of way only by a District property yard, and by a portion of First Street which is closed south of N Street.

1917. A bill practically similar to the present one, introduced in the House in February, 1917, was reported on by the District Commissioners. Their report made the following statement:

The commissioners believe that at some future time conditions may require the permissible area of occupation for freight business to be enlarged.

This bill was not brought before the House, because the parties interested in it were all ordered away to active duty in the military service.

1922. From District Commissioners' report to Senate District Committee:

The commissioners would state that if the bill is amended as recommended herein, the square referred to in Senate bill 3083, namely, square 710, would be included in the squares or parts of squares, which would be granted sidings as being within the industrial area.

PROPERTY ZONED AS INDUSTRIAL.

The zoning commission has classed this property as "industrial," which permits use for railroad purposes, and thereby substantiates the conclusion of the commissioners.

Need for additional industrial property in this locality, particularly for coal dumps, has become so acute that the grand jurors for the District of Columbia in the January term, 1921, made a special report on the situation to the Supreme Court. Square 710 is particularly suited for coal dumps and warehouses.

SCARCITY OF CENTRALLY LOCATED INDUSTRIAL PROPERTY.

Square 710 is not only particularly advantageously situated for practical industrial development, but it lies within a short distance of the center of population of the District. For the general public good such property should be developed. It is unwise to force distributing companies to locate their plants in distant sections of the city, because the increased haulage charges place increased burdens on the ultimate consumer.

OWNERS OF SQUARE ENTITLED TO SAME OPPORTUNITIES AS OTHER SURROUNDING PROPERTY OWNERS.

The owners of square 710 are at present unfairly handicapped. They can not utilize their property for the only purposes for which it is well adapted and for which other similar and surrounding property is utilized. Because of its location and suitability for industrial purposes it is taxed on an industrial valuation. Under existing conditions it can neither be sold nor utilized for purposes commensurate with such valuation. The growing needs of the city require its development industrially, and it is unjust discrimination to longer withhold the necessary legislation, for which the owners have now waited for many years.

LOUIS LEAVITT.

The next business in order on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 12223) for the relief of Louis Leavitt.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. BLANTON. I object.

Mr. WOODRUFF. I object.

Mr. STAFFORD. It is hardly necessary for me to put in my objection.

ISAAC JACK.

The next business in order on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 11825) authorizing the removal of the restriction from 40 acres of the allotment of Isaac Jack, a Seneca Indian, and for other purposes.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, this bill was incorporated in the Indian omnibus bill which passed the House Saturday, and therefore I object.

The SPEAKER. Objection is made.

LOUIS LEAVITT.

The next business in order on the Private Calendar was the bill (S. 3754) for the relief of Louis Leavitt.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I object.

Mr. WOODRUFF. I object.

Mr. STAFFORD. I object.

ABROGATING LEASE OF LAND AND WATER POWER, MUSKINGUM RIVER.

The next business in order on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 11561) authorizing and directing the Secretary of War to abrogate a contract lease of land and water power on the Muskingum River.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of this bill?

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I would like to inquire what the facts are. It is rather unusual to direct the Secretary of War to cancel a contract.

Mr. MOORE of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, this is a contract entered into by the Phoenix Mill Co., of Marietta, Ohio, and the Secretary of War in 1904 for the use of certain water power on the Muskingum River. In 1912 the mill that was being operated by the Phoenix Mill Co. burned down and ever since that time they have been paying an annual rental. The War Department, in a letter that is in the report, states that they are without authority to cancel the lease, but admits that it should be canceled, and the Secretary of War recommends that the authority of Congress be given to him to cancel this lease. They have been paying rental ever since that time and have not been able to utilize the water power at all, and it seems quite inequitable to ask them to continue further. There is only one more year, but there is a little due by them. They paid it until the bill was introduced and there is a certain amount in arrears.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I withdraw the reservation.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. MOORE of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that Senate bill 3611 be substituted for the House bill.

The SPEAKER. Is it substantially the same bill?

Mr. MOORE of Ohio. Exactly the same, but it increases the amount a little. It amends the clause authorizing the cancellation and strikes out the word "land," as the lease does not provide for any land but simply for water power.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Ohio asks unanimous consent to substitute the Senate bill. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the Senate bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That upon the payment of $155 additional by the lessee to the United States Government, to be paid within three months after this act is approved, and with the understanding that no part of the moneys paid by the lessee to the United States Government shall ever be refunded, and in satisfaction of all claims of both parties, the Secretary of War be authorized and directed to abrogate a contract lease entered into on the 24th day of June, 1904, between Robert Shaw Oliver, Assistant Secretary of War, for the United States of America, and the Phoenix Mill Co., by D. P. Torpy, its president, of Marietta, Ohio, for the water power at Dam No. 1 at Marietta, Ohio, on the Muskingum River, in the State of Ohio.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the third reading of the Senate bill.

The Senate bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, the similar House bill will be laid on the table.

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the next bill.

JAMES J. MEEHAN.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 11792) for the relief of James J. Meehan.

The title of the bill was read.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That James J. Meehan, who, while serving as an ensign, United States Naval Reserve Force, was found by a naval retiring board to be permanently incapacitated for active service by reason of physical disability incurred in the line of duty as the result of an incident of the service, but not in time of war, shall be eligible for retirement as if his physical disability was incurred in time of war; and the Secretary of the Navy is hereby authorized to place him upon the retired list with three-fourths pay of the grade held by him at the time such physical disability was incurred.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the next bill.

BRIDGE ACROSS LITTLE COLORADO RIVER.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (S. 2563) to provide for the completion of the bridge across Little Colorado River near Leupp, Ariz.

The title of the bill was read.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of this bill?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That there is hereby authorized to be appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $17,471.25 for payment to the Allied Contractors (Inc.), of Omaha, Nebr., as additional compensation for the construction of a bridge across the Little Colorado River near the Leupp Indian Agency, Ariz., under contract approved by the Secretary of the Interior on November 10, 1919, funds for said bridge having been appropriated by the acts of March 2, 1917 (39th Stat. L., p. 975), May 25, 1918 (40th Stat. L., p. 579), and June 30, 1919 (41st Stat. L., p. 11), and the cost thereof to the contractors having exceeded the contract price by said sum: Provided, That said amount shall be reimbursable to the United States from any funds now or hereafter placed in the Treasury to the credit of the Navajo Indians in Arizona, to remain a charge and lien upon the lands and funds of said tribe of Indians until paid.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the next bill.

WALTER RUNKE.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 5639) for the relief of Walter Runke.

The title of the bill was read.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. STAFFORD. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, I would like to inquire why we should reimburse a man for $800 attorney's fees when no trial was had?

Mr. HAYDEN. The man was tried and acquitted by the jury.

Mr. STAFFORD. Then I am wrong in my premises. But I understood that in the alleged trial for perjury, for which a claim for $800 attorney's fees was made, there was no trial.

Mr. HAYDEN. In any event this man is entitled to this relief. It represents the savings of a lifetime. He was shamefully treated, I am satisfied, and everything that he did was done in the line of duty.

Mr. STAFFORD. In such cases as these would he not have the right of representation by the Government attorney?

Mr. HAYDEN. He would if the Indian office here in Washington had directed it in the case; but instead of that they abandoned him, and left him in such shape that he had to spend his own funds. If the gentleman will read this report——

Mr. STAFFORD. I have read the report of the Secretary of the Interior, and I got the impression that $800 was for attorney's fees in the perjury case, where there had been no trial. Eight hundred dollars attorney's fee is a pretty large fee.

Mr. HAYDEN. That covers the fees in both cases.

Mr. STAFFORD. I beg the gentleman's pardon; he has here a fee for $2,500 for his defense in a murder trial.

Mr. HAYDEN. What the Department of the Interior would certify to would come up to the committee and be found good. I think it appropriates no money.

Mr. STAFFORD. I think in this case he really had some equitable claim for reimbursement. The only question is as to the amount.

Mr. HAYDEN. The amount is the minimum.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I see further down on the calendar there is a bill for the relief of this man.

Mr. HAYDEN. Yes. I was going to suggest the consideration of the Senate bill.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Is it the same case?

Mr. HAYDEN. Yes. This bill was reported prior to the Senate bill.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the bill.

Mr. BLANTON. It has not passed the unanimous-consent stage, Mr. Speaker. Is the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. STAFFORD] through? [Laughter.] Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, the distinguished gentleman from Arizona [Mr. HAYDEN] at one time was a very distinguished peace officer, and has been around the courthouses a lot. Does he think this kind of a bill is a wise precedent to establish?

Mr. HAYDEN. I believe the case is unprecedented. It could not happen again, and under the circumstances the man is entitled to relief.

Mr. BLANTON. Oh, the gentleman knows it could happen again. "There is nothing new under the sun."

Mr. HAYDEN. Here was an Indian, a wild Indian, among a wild tribe of Indians, and to show how bad an Indian he was, I will say that he absolutely refused to allow his children to go to school. It is not shown in the report, but the facts are that this Indian's daughter was sent to school, and this Indian so forcibly objected to it that I understand he threw her on the ground and gouged out one of her eyes with a piece of barbed wire.

That is the kind of a bad Indian that he was. They sent for him to tell him that he must put his children in school. He threatened to kill the officers. The agent then directed these two employees to go out and either bring him in or bring his children in. He resisted, and had to be killed. Then this man, Mr. Runke, was absolutely abandoned by the Indian Office—prosecuted, as I believe, maliciously—and the savings of a lifetime were lost. All I am asking is that he may submit an account of his expenses to the Interior Department, and let their finding be submitted to Congress, and then we can act on it.

Mr. BLANTON. You are asking merely that the expenses of an authorized prosecution and trial be paid back to him?

Mr. HAYDEN. Yes.

Mr. BLANTON. Just his actual expenses?

Mr. HAYDEN. Yes.

Mr. BLANTON. You are allowing him nothing for any alleged damage that may have occurred to him?

Mr. HAYDEN. Not at all.

Mr. BLANTON. I withdraw the reservation of objection.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. HAYDEN. I ask unanimous consent to substitute the Senate bill, S. 1829.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman asks unanimous consent to substitute the Senate bill. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the Senate bill.

The bill was read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That not to exceed $4,000 is hereby authorized to be appropriated to enable the Secretary of the Interior to reimburse Walter Runke, of Flagstaff, Ariz., formerly superintendent of the Western Navajo Indian Agency, Ariz., for actual and necessary expenses incurred by him from personal funds in connection with his defenses upon his trials in the United States District Court for the District of Arizona during the months of September, 1916, and March, 1918, his alleged offenses having been committed in the performance of his official duties, the charge against him in the first trial having been dismissed after a severance and after acquittal of his late co-defendants, and he having been acquitted in the second trial.

With the following committee amendment:

On page 1, line 10, strike out the words "months of September, 1916, and March, 1918," and insert "time between his indictment in March, 1916, until his acquittal in March, 1918."

The SPEAKER. The question is on the committee amendment.

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the third reading of the bill.

The bill as amended was ordered to a third reading, and was accordingly read the third time and passed.

By unanimous consent the House bill (H. R. 5639) was ordered to lie on the table.

WAR DEPARTMENT APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. ANTHONY. Mr. Speaker, I present a conference report on the War Department appropriation bill for printing under the rule.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Kansas presents a conference report on the bill the title of which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read the title of the bill (H. R. 13793) making appropriations for the military and nonmilitary activities of the War Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1924, and for other purposes.

The SPEAKER. Ordered printed under the rule.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, when a conference report is subject to a point of order because of a violation of the rules of the House, may I ask whether it is in order to make the point of order when it is first presented?

The SPEAKER. It can be made when the report is read.

Mr. BLANTON. It should not be made now?

The SPEAKER. It should not.

Mr. BLANTON. I reserve a point of order.

The conference report and statement of the House conferees are as follows:

CONFERENCE REPORT.

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 13793) making appropriations for the military and nonmilitary activities of the War Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1924, and for other purposes, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

STATEMENT.

The managers on the part of the House at the conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 13793) making appropriations for the military and nonmilitary activities of the War Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1924, and for other purposes, submit the following statement in explanation of the effect of the action agreed upon by the conference committee and submitted in the accompanying conference report:

On No. 1, relating to the appropriation for printing and binding: Limits the amount for printing and binding under the direction of the Chief of Engineers to $75,000 instead of $45,000, as proposed by the House, and $102,980, as proposed by the Senate.

On Nos. 2 and 3, relating to the appropriation for contingencies of the Army: Appropriates $70,480 instead of $62,980, as proposed by the House, and $77,980, as proposed by the Senate, and limits the amount for salaries of civilian employees connected with the sale of war supplies and the adjustment of war contracts and claims to $42,480 instead of $34,980, as proposed by the House, and $49,980, as proposed by the Senate.

On Nos. 4, 5, and 6, relating to the appropriation for contingencies, Military Intelligence Division, General Staff: Restores language stricken out by the Senate making the appropriation applicable to the rental of garages for military attachés; appropriates $149,000 instead of $130,000, as proposed by the House, and $162,680, as proposed by the Senate; and limits the amount that may be used for drafting, clerical, and messenger services in the Military Intelligence Division, in Washington, D. C., to $75,000 instead of $70,000, as proposed by the House, and $88,680, as proposed by the Senate.

On Nos. 7, 8, 9, and 10, relating to the appropriation for Army War College: Provides for seven clerks at $1,600, as proposed by the Senate, instead of six, as proposed by the House; provides for four watchmen at $720, as proposed by the House, instead of five, as proposed by the Senate; and provides for four firemen at $720, as proposed by the Senate, instead of three, as proposed by the House; making the total of the paragraph $60,540 instead of $58,220, as proposed by the House, and $61,260, as proposed by the Senate.

On No. 11, relating to the appropriation for general service schools, Fort Leavenworth, Kans.: Appropriates $45,000, as proposed by the House, instead of $42,200, as proposed by the Senate.

On Nos. 12, 13, 14, and 15, relating to the appropriation for military post exchanges: Appropriates $75,000, as proposed by the House, instead of $85,000, as proposed by the Senate, and limits the amounts for libraries and hostess houses to $30,000 each, as proposed by the House, instead of $37,500 each, as proposed by the Senate; and adds language proposed by the Senate prohibiting the use of funds from this appropriation for payment of teachers or for equipment of schools for children at military posts.

On Nos. 16, 17, 19, 20, and 22, relating to the Organized Reserves: Appropriates $900,000 for pay and allowances of reserve officers on duty for 15 days' training, as proposed by the House, instead of $1,100,000, as proposed by the Senate; appropriates $250,000 for pay of reserve officers on active duty for more than 15 days, instead of $200,000, as proposed by the House, and $300,000, as proposed by the Senate; appropriates $5,000 for pay of the Enlisted Reserve Corps, as proposed by the House, instead of $7,500, as proposed by the Senate; and appropriates $350,000 for establishment and maintenance of camps, as proposed by the House, instead of $494,400 for divisional and regimental headquarters and establishment and maintenance of camps, as proposed by the Senate.

On Nos. 23 and 24, relating to the appropriation for Reserve Officers' Training Corps: Appropriates $3,500,000 instead of $3,250,000, as proposed by the House, and $4,000,000, as proposed by the Senate; and agrees to Senate amendment eliminating the words "in so far as said stocks are in excess of actual requirements of the Regular Army for the fiscal year 1924" from language carried in the bill as it passed the House providing for the issue of material to the Reserve Officers' Training Corps from War Department surplus or reserve stocks in so far as such stocks are in excess of the requirements of the Regular Army for the fiscal year 1924.

On Nos. 25, 26, 27, and 28, relating to the appropriation for civilian military training camps: Appropriates $2,000,000, as proposed by the House, instead of $2,200,000, as proposed by the Senate; provides that the appropriation shall not be used for the training of any person over 24 years of age except those who received training in either of the training camps held during the calendar years 1921 or 1922 instead of prohibiting the training of any person over 27 years of age, as proposed by the House, or prohibiting the training of any person over the age of 24 except those who received training in a previous civilian military training camp and except veterans of the war with Germany under the age of 35, as proposed by the Senate; and agrees to Senate amendment eliminating the words "in so far as said stocks are in excess of actual requirements of the Regular Army for the fiscal year 1924" from language carried in the bill as it passed the House providing for the issue of material for use in civilian military training camps from War Department surplus or reserve stocks in so far as such stocks are in excess of the requirements of the Regular Army for the fiscal year 1924.

On No. 29: Substitutes language proposed by the Senate for language carried in the bill as it passed the House relating to the promotion of certain captains in the Army who were demoted under the provisions of the War Department appropriation act dated June 30, 1922, as amended by the act of September 14, 1922.

On No. 31, relating to the appropriation for aviation increase to enlisted men: Restricts the number of enlisted men who may be placed on flying status to 600 instead of to 500, as proposed by the House, and instead of providing no limitation, as proposed by the Senate.

On No. 32: Strikes out language proposed by the Senate providing that any officer whose name is now borne on the Army register and who served with credit as a general officer of the line during the World War, or who was recommended for appointment as a general officer of the line by the commander in chief American Expeditionary Forces, prior to November 11, 1918, shall be eligible for selection to the general officers' eligible list provided for in the national defense act, approved June 4, 1920, notwithstanding the fact that he shall now hold a grade below that of colonel of the line.

On No. 33: Appropriates $7,000,000 for pay of retired enlisted men, as proposed by the House, instead of $7,200,000, as proposed by the Senate.

On No. 35, relating to the appropriation for pay of nurses: Appropriates $660,000 instead of $650,000, as proposed by the House, and instead of $680,000, as proposed by the Senate.

On No. 37, relating to language carried in the House bill prohibiting payment of the six months' gratuity authorized by the act of December 17, 1919, to any child of a deceased officer or enlisted man who is not actually a dependent of such deceased officer or enlisted man: Adds the language "married child or unmarried child over 21 years of age," as proposed by the Senate.

On No. 39: Strikes out language proposed by the Senate authorizing the payment from river and harbor appropriations of mileage and other allowances incident to changes of stations of officers of the Corps of Engineers where such changes of stations are made primarily in the interest of river and harbor improvements.

On Nos. 40, 41, 42, and 43, relating to the appropriation for subsistence of the Army: Restores language stricken out by the Senate making the appropriation applicable to the enlisted men of the Enlisted Reserve Corps; appropriates $14,350,000 instead of $14,250,000, as proposed by the House, and $14,500,000, as proposed by the Senate; exempts sales commissaries in the Philippine Islands and China from the requirement that the prices charged in sales commissaries shall include overhead costs, as proposed by the Senate.

On Nos. 44 and 45, relating to the appropriation for regular supplies of the Army: Restores language stricken out by the Senate making the appropriation applicable to enlisted men of the Enlisted Reserve Corps; increases the limitation on the amount that may be expended for forage from $4,500,000, as proposed by the House, to $4,900,000, as proposed by the Senate.

On No. 46, relating to the appropriation for clothing and equipage: Restores language stricken out by the Senate making the appropriation applicable to enlisted men of the Enlisted Reserve Corps.

On Nos. 47 and 48, relating to the appropriation for transportation of the Army and its supplies: Strikes out language carried in the bill as it passed the House making the appropriation applicable to the Officers' Reserve Corps; restores language stricken out by the Senate making the appropriation applicable to enlisted men of the Enlisted Reserve Corps; and appropriates $15,850,000 instead of $15,500,000, as proposed by the House, and $16,000,000, as proposed by the Senate.

On No. 50, relating to the appropriation for water and sewers at military posts: Increases from $25,000, as proposed by the House, to $50,000, as proposed by the Senate, the amount which may be expended for new construction.

On No. 51, relating to the appropriation for horses for Cavalry, Artillery, Engineers, etc.: Increases the appropriation from $200,000, as proposed by the House, to $210,000, as proposed by the Senate.

On Nos. 52 and 53, relating to the appropriation for military posts: Increases the appropriation from $154,875, as proposed by the House, to $239,875, as proposed by the Senate, in order to provide $85,000 for barracks at Langley Field, Va.

On Nos. 54 and 55, relating to the appropriation for military posts, Hawaiian Islands: Increases the appropriation from $313,500, as proposed by the House, to $385,500, as proposed by the Senate, in order to provide $54,000 for the construction of six standard storehouses and $18,000 for the construction of a shop for care and preservation of ordnance material.

On Nos. 56, 57, 58, 59, and 60, relating to the appropriation for barracks and quarters: Strikes out the words "enlisted men of the Regular Army Reserve," carried in the bill as it passed the House; restores language stricken out by the Senate making the appropriation applicable to the enlisted Reserve Corps; strikes out language proposed by the Senate making the appropriation applicable to rental of garages and stables for military attachés abroad; strikes out language proposed by the Senate making the prohibition against the use of this appropriation for rentals for military attachés apply only to offices; adds language proposed by the Senate making the appropriation for barracks and quarters for the fiscal year 1923 applicable to rental of stables for military attachés.

On No. 61, relating to the appropriation for roads, walks, wharves, and drainage: Appropriates $650,000, as proposed by the House, instead of $600,000, as proposed by the Senate.

On Nos. 62 and 63, relating to the appropriation for construction and repair of hospitals: Increases the appropriation from $497,000, as proposed by the House, to $772,000, as proposed by the Senate, and authorizes the use of $275,000 for the construction of a hospital at Fort Benning, Ga.

On Nos. 64, 65, and 66, relating to the appropriation for salaries, office of the Quartermaster General: Provides for five messengers, at $840 each, as proposed by the Senate, instead of six, as proposed by the House; and restricts the amount which may be used for personal services in the cemeterial division, office of the Quartermaster General, to $25,000, as proposed by the House, instead of $35,000, as proposed by the Senate.

On Nos. 67, 68, and 69, relating to the appropriation for the Air Service: Restores language stricken out by the Senate making the amount appropriated for improvement of stations, hangars, and gas plants applicable only to those for the Regular Army, and adds language making it available for such other markings and fuel supply stations and temporary shelter as may be necessary; restores language stricken out by the Senate prohibiting public exhibition flights unless a bond of indemnity is given for damages to persons or property, amended to apply only to exhibition flights given by Army personnel upon other than Government fields.

On No. 70: Extends the availability of $400,000 of the appropriation for Air Service, fiscal year 1921, until June 30, 1924, in order to permit payment of obligations incurred under contracts executed during the fiscal year 1921.

On Nos. 71, 72, 73, and 74, relating to the appropriation for salaries, office of the Surgeon General: Increases the number of clerks of class 3 from 14, as proposed by the House, to 15, as proposed by the Senate; increases the number of clerks of class 2 from 34, as proposed by the House, to 35, as proposed by the Senate; and increases the number of clerks of class 1 from 56, as proposed by the House, to 57, as proposed by the Senate.

On No. 75, relating to the appropriation for Engineer operations in the field: Strikes out the word "purchase," inserted by the Senate to make the appropriation applicable to the purchase of passenger-carrying vehicles.

On No. 76: Inserts heading, "Seacoast defenses, insular possessions," as proposed by the Senate.

On No. 77: Adds an appropriation of $200,000, proposed by the Senate, for the installation and replacement of electric light and power plants at the defenses of the Philippine Islands.

On No. 78, relating to the appropriation for alteration and maintenance of mobile artillery: Appropriates $448,500, as proposed by the Senate, instead of $425,000, as proposed by the House.

On No. 79, relating to the appropriation for Chemical Warfare Service: Appropriates $700,000, as proposed by the Senate, instead of $650,000, as proposed by the House.

On No. 80, relating to the allotment roll in the office of the Chief of the Chemical Warfare Service: Authorizes the expenditure of $15,000, as proposed by the House, instead of $21,600, as proposed by the Senate.

On No. 81, relating to the appropriation for quartermaster supplies and services for rifle ranges for civilian instruction: Adds language, proposed by the Senate, making not to exceed $80,000 of the appropriation applicable to the payment of transportation and the supplying of meals or commutation thereof to civilian rifle teams, and making the appropriation available until expended; and appropriates $89,900, instead of $20,000, as proposed by the House, and $120,000, as proposed by the Senate.

On No. 82, relating to the appropriation for national trophy and medals for rifle contests: Appropriates $7,500, instead of $6,500, as proposed by the House, and $10,000, as proposed by the Senate.

On No. 83, relating to the appropriation for Infantry School, Fort Benning, Ga.: Makes the appropriation applicable to the employment of temporary services of all classes, as proposed by the Senate, instead of restricting the authority for temporary employments to clerical services, as proposed by the House.

On Nos. 84 and 85, relating to the appropriation for Cavalry School, Fort Riley, Kans.: Makes the appropriation applicable to the employment of temporary services of all classes, as proposed by the Senate, instead of restricting the authority for temporary employments to clerical services, as proposed by the House.

On Nos. 86, 87, and 88, relating to the appropriation for Field Artillery schools: Makes the appropriation applicable to the employment of temporary services of all classes, as proposed by the Senate, instead of restricting the authority for temporary employments to clerical services, as proposed by the House.

On Nos. 89, 90, 91, 92, 93, and 94, relating to the appropriation for arming, equipping, and training the National Guard: Appropriates $1,400,000 for forage, bedding, etc., for animals, instead of $1,250,000, as proposed by the House, and $1,465,000, as proposed by the Senate; appropriates $2,100,000 for payment of help for care of matériel, animals, and equipment, instead of $1,850,000, as proposed by the House, and $2,500,000, as proposed by the Senate; appropriates $10,200,000 for camps of instruction, instead of $10,000,000, as proposed by the House, and $11,000,000, as proposed by the Senate; appropriates $325,000 for expenses of National Guard officers and men at Army service schools, instead of $300,000, as proposed by the House, and $350,000, as proposed by the Senate; appropriates $70,000 for pay of property and disbursing officers for the United States, as proposed by the House, instead of $75,000, as proposed by the Senate; and appropriates $375,000 for transportation of equipment and supplies, as proposed by the House, instead of $400,000, as proposed by the Senate.

On Nos. 95 and 96, relating to the appropriation for arms, uniforms, equipment, etc., for field service, National Guard: Appropriates $2,500,000, instead of $2,250,000, as proposed by the House, and $3,250,000, as proposed by the Senate; and restores language stricken out by the Senate prohibiting the use of this appropriation for the purchase of Field Artillery, Engineer, or Signal matériel.

On Nos. 97, 98, 99, and 100, relating to the appropriation for salaries in the office of the Chief of the Militia Bureau: Provides $2,250 for the salary of the chief clerk, as proposed by the House, instead of $2,000, as proposed by the Senate; adopts Senate amendment striking out authority for a finance clerk at $2,000 carried in the bill as it passed the House; and provides for five clerks of class 3, as proposed by the Senate, instead of four, as proposed by the House.

On Nos. 102, 103, and 104, relating to the appropriation for pay of the United States Military Academy: Restores an appropriation of $1,000, stricken out by the Senate, for extra pay to the constructing quartermaster, making the total appropriation for pay of the Military Academy $1,664,586, as proposed by the House, instead of $1,663,586, as proposed by the Senate.

On No. 105: Changes the applicability of an appropriation of $3,500 carried in the bill as it passed the House so that it may be used for supplying materials, repairing, painting, and cleaning furniture in cadet barracks instead of painting and cleaning the cadet barracks.

On No. 107: Restores language stricken out by the Senate prohibiting the use of the funds appropriated for the supply, maintenance, and upkeep of athletic grounds and stands at the United States Military Academy for such purposes, unless the authorities at the Military Academy charge an admission to the principal public athletic contests on such grounds in which the cadets take part, and providing that the funds received from such charge shall be used solely for the improvement of athletic facilities at the academy.

On No. 108, relating to appropriation for payment of annuity to John R. Kissinger: Restores language stricken out by the Senate providing for deduction of one-half of each monthly payment until an amount equal to the aggregate of the amount of the pension which has been paid to Mr. Kissinger contrary to law shall have been deducted.

On No. 109, relating to the appropriation for maintenance of national cemeteries: Appropriates $370,220, as proposed by the Senate, instead of $350,000, as proposed by the House.

On No. 110, relating to the appropriation for repairs to roadways to national cemeteries: Appropriates $24,000, as proposed by the House, instead of $12,000, as proposed by the Senate.

On No. 111, relating to the appropriation for disposition of remains of officers, soldiers, and civilian employees: Appropriates $160,000, as proposed by the Senate, instead of $150,000, as proposed by the House.

On Nos. 112 and 113, relating to the appropriation for operation of the Lincoln Memorial: Provides for three watchmen at $720 each, as proposed by the House, instead of four, as proposed by the Senate, making the total appropriation $11,320, as proposed by the House, instead of $12,040, as proposed by the Senate.

On No. 114: Strikes out language proposed by the Senate providing the rank, pay, and allowances of a brigadier general for the engineer officer in charge of public buildings and grounds.

On No. 115, relating to the appropriation for construction and maintenance of roads, bridges, and trails in Alaska: Appropriates $650,000 instead of $465,000, as proposed by the House, and $1,000,000, as proposed by the Senate.

On No. 116, relating to the appropriation for a survey and preparation of plans and estimates for a dock at Juneau, Alaska: Appropriates $600, as proposed by the Senate, instead of $1,000, as proposed by the House.

On Nos. 117 and 118, relating to the appropriation for examinations, surveys, and contingencies for rivers and harbors: Appropriates $456,850, as proposed by the House, instead of $406,850, as proposed by the Senate, and strikes out language proposed by the Senate prohibiting the use of this appropriation for investigations concerning types of boats.

On No. 120: Substitutes the surplus fund, as proposed by the Senate, for the general fund, as proposed by the House, as the fund into which shall be covered the funds allotted to the National Home for Disabled Volunteer Soldiers by the Veterans' Bureau.

On Nos. 121, 123, 124, 125, and 126, relating to the appropriations for the Panama Canal: Provides, as proposed by the Senate, that the limitations on the expenditure of appropriations carried in the act elsewhere than under the head of the Panama Canal shall not apply to the appropriations for the Panama Canal, instead of providing, as proposed by the House, that the limitations on the expenditure of appropriations for salaries and wages of civilian employees shall not apply to the appropriations for the Panama Canal; appropriates $575,000 for sanitation instead of $550,000, as proposed by the House, and $584,422.28, as proposed by the Senate, and appropriates $930,000 for civil government, as proposed by the House, instead of $1,006,200, as proposed by the Senate.

The committee of conference has not agreed upon the following amendments:

On No. 18, relating to mileage for reserve officers.

On No. 21, authorizing expenditures for divisional and regimental headquarters for the Organized Reserves.

On No. 30, relating to the age of recruits that may be enlisted in the Army.

On No. 34, relating to the employment in the Government service at salaries in excess of $2,500 per annum of retired enlisted men of the Army, Navy, Marine Corps, or Coast Guard.

On No. 36, prohibiting the issue of heat or light in kind to any person in the Army, Navy, Marine Corps, Coast Guard, Coast and Geodetic Survey, and Public Health Service while such person is receiving an allowance for rental of quarters.

On No. 38, relating to the employment of retired Army officers.

On No. 49, authorizing the payment of transportation charges from certain appropriations.

On No. 101, authorizing the retirement of the master of the sword at the United States Military Academy.

On No. 106, relating to the use of stop watches or other time-measuring devices and the payment of bonuses to Government employees.

On No. 119, authorizing the Secretary of War to permit the erection of monuments or memorials in the Chickamauga and Chattanooga National Military Park to commemorate encampments of Spanish War organizations.

On No. 122, authorizing the purchase of artificial limbs or other appliances for indigent persons who were injured in the service of the Isthmian Canal Commission or the Panama Canal prior to September 7, 1916.

D. R. ANTHONY, Jr.,
WILLIAM N. STAFFORD,
T. U. SISSON,
Managers on the part of the House.

FRANK A. JAHN.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the next bill.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 12138) for the relief of Frank A. Jahn.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, will the author of this bill state why this man should be placed on the retired list?

Mr. SWING. Mr. Speaker, there are three different and distinct reasons showing that the Navy Department made a mistake in this case. It is one of the plainest propositions that has ever been brought before this House. In fact, with all due respect to the Navy Department, the department ought never to have forced the bringing of this bill before Congress. In the first place, this man was in the hospital at the time the act of July 12, 1921, was passed. He was there all the time that that act was running until it expired on October 1, 1921. The Navy Department, through its medical bureau and through the Bureau of Navigation, knew where he was, knew what he was there for, and what he was suffering with, and they were charged with knowledge of his disability. In the second place, he was examined in May and found physically disqualified for service by the medical board on his application for promotion. The Navy Department in other similar cases has held that where a man has been examined as to his fitness by a medical board as this man was before the law of July 12, 1921, was passed, they were charged with knowledge of his condition, and it was not necessary for him to make an application for retirement under that law.

Mr. STAFFORD. What is the reason that the President directed that the proceedings and findings of the board be disapproved?

Mr. SWING. I assume that we know some one acts for the President in the Navy Department and also acts for the President in the War Department and in the various other departments. The Judge Advocate General or some one in his office wrote up an opinion stating that this man had not made an application within the purview of the law. As a matter of fact he had made an application and the department now admits that he did. That is the third point. He applied just as the law provided he should apply, in August, during the time the law was in effect, but no attention was paid to his application until December. Then when they acted upon it the Judge Advocate General held that they had acted too late to be effective; but upon reading the law you will see, and in other cases the Judge Advocate General himself has held, that the law does not require the Navy Department to have acted on the application before October 1. It merely requires the application to have been made before October 1. That was done in this case.

Mr. STAFFORD. The gentleman has stated enough to show that there are some exceptional facts in this case that may be a warrant for this bill, and I withdraw the reservation.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the bill.

The bill was read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the President is authorized to appoint Frank A. Jahn a lieutenant (junior grade) in the United States Navy and to retire him and place him upon the retired list of the Navy with the retired pay and allowances of that grade.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, and was accordingly read the third time and passed.

MAX B. BALDENBURG.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (S. 462) for the relief of Max B. Baldenburg.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of this bill?

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, as I recall this bill the amount is too large. It is not a very large amount, only $789, and, of course, as these things go through the House that is a mere pittance; but I made a notation here that it should be only $347.

Mr. SCOTT of Tennessee. The gentleman will note by looking at page 3 of the report that the Secretary of War has O. K'd this claim in the full amount.

Mr. STAFFORD. The Secretary of War puts his fist to a good many things that he does not know anything about. This was submitted to some subordinate officer.

Mr. COLTON. I will state to the gentleman that this is the actual amount that he paid back. After the amount had been allowed him by the officers and he had actually paid it out, then they called on him and he had to pay $789 back out of his own salary.

Mr. STAFFORD. And the gentleman thinks the full amount is owing?

Mr. SCOTT of Tennessee. The gentleman from Utah [Mr. COLTON] is correct in his statement. Mr. Baldenburg received this per diem and afterwards had to refund $789.

Mr. STAFFORD. The gentleman is certain that the amount is proper?

Mr. SCOTT of Tennessee. Yes.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, I withdraw my reservation of objection.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized and directed to pay to Max B. Baldenburg, formerly employed as civilian clerk, Engineer Department at Large, United States Army, on duty with the American Expeditionary Forces, the sum of $789, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, such sum being the difference between the amount due the said Max B. Baldenburg as per diem allowances while so employed, under the terms of his employment and as established and authorized by the Chief Engineer, base section No. 3, and the amount allowed for such purposes by the Comptroller of the Treasury.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

ALLIE MELINDA OUTTERSIDE.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill H. R. 4653, for the relief of Allie Melinda Outterside.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. STAFFORD. Reserving the right to object, I have had some difficulty in bringing myself around to favor this bill by reason of the fact that the injured person dodged into the airplane, trying to alight in the public street.

Mr. GARRETT of Texas. The facts are stated by the committee in its report, and are accurate and reflect the true situation as I understand it. The airplane was landed in a marsh near the city and the officers were not able to rise from that position, so they moved the airplane over into the main thoroughfare of Texas City, and attempted to make a rise from that point. The injured person, with others, were getting out of the way. He was on the pavement when the machine started. When the plane took off one wheel struck a pump, throwing the wing over, and struck against the guy wire of a post, which tilted it, and it started the machine toward the injured person. In this moment of bewilderment and excitement the injured person in his attempt to escape injury moved toward the machine, so they say. But, if that be true, I submit to the gentleman from Wisconsin as a lawyer that if this case was in court the uniform decisions are that where an injured person finds himself in a perilous position, brought about by the conduct of the party inflicting the injury, and in his bewilderment he seeks to make an escape and runs into the injury, the defendant is liable. That is the uniform decisions of the courts.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, as I am going back to practice in the courts shortly, and as the gentleman from Texas has reminded me of some legal lore that I had forgotten I will withdraw my reservation of objection. [Laughter.]

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will read the bill.

The Clerk read the bill as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to Allie Melinda Outterside, widow, of the county of Harris and the State of Texas, the sum of $10,000, in full compensation for the death of her husband, T. R. Outterside, who was killed on the 26th day of September, 1918, at Texas City, Tex., by an airplane, which was being operated by an officer of the United States Army.

The committee amendment was read as follows:

In line 7, after the word "of" strike out the figures "$10,000" and in place thereof insert the figures "$5,000."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read the third time, was read the third time, and passed.

COMMERCIAL PACIFIC CABLE CO.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 6852) to carry out the findings of the Court of Claims in the case of the Commercial Pacific Cable Co.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. STAFFORD. I object.

TRUSTEES OF MILLIGAN COLLEGE, TENNESSEE.

The next bill on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 10088) for the relief of L. D. Riddell and George W. Hardin, trustees of Milligan College, Tennessee.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. STAFFORD. Reserving the right to object, I have given considerable attention to this, because it is for the relief of an educational institution. I do not know whether we should adopt a policy of reimbursing educational institutions for damages resulting from the occupation of the premises during the period of the war when the students were virtually students of the college. If we are going to recognize the policy for all damages resulting from the Students Army Training Corps we may be burdened with a tremendous liability.

Mr. REECE. I hardly think you will find that to be the case, because there is no other building burned as a result of the Students Army Training Corps that the Government has any knowledge of.

Mr. STAFFORD. Well, Mr. Speaker, this is virtually a gratuity to this struggling, sectarian college, as I understand, way up in the backwoods of eastern Tennessee, and I will give the benefit of the doubt to education and this sectarian institution, and withdraw the objection.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. REECE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to substitute a Senate bill of like import, S. 3048.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Tennessee asks unanimous consent to substitute the Senate bill for the House bill. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will read the Senate bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay to L. D. Riddell and George W. Hardin, trustees of Milligan College, Tennessee, out of any moneys not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $23,096.37, being the balance due to said trustees of said college because of the destruction by fire of sundry buildings at Milligan College, Tennessee, on November 16, 1918, while in the use and occupation of the War Department of the United States.

Mr. TILSON. Mr. Speaker, I move to strike out the last word. I am very glad to see the bill for this claim put on the road to passage. This "struggling college" of which the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. STAFFORD] speaks is situated at the entrance to Happy Valley on the beautiful Watauga River, in east Tennessee, near the birthplace and former home of the inimitable Bob Taylor, who in the long time ago served a term in this House, having the honor of being the only Democrat elected from the district in 60 years. Later he served three terms as Governor of the State of Tennessee, and died in Washington while a Member of the United States Senate from that State.

It was also the birthplace and former home of that stalwart Republican, Alf Taylor, who served three terms in this House and who has just retired from the office of Governor of Tennessee. He now lives in the village of Milligan and very near the college, in which he is very greatly interested. Besides being the birthplace of these two great men, I can say with all becoming modesty that my own birthplace was also nearby. [Applause and cries of "Vote!"]

Mr. Speaker, it will be observed that I did not mention this fact until after unanimous consent for consideration had been granted. Now, the objection stage having been safely passed, I can speak fearlessly. [Laughter.] Having reached the place where there is no further danger, I can now speak my mind, which is that I am very grateful to the House for permitting this bill to be passed to-night. Although I have not lived in Tennessee for many years, nevertheless the good people of that region where I was born are still my people. My kindred and friends live there; my father and mother lie buried there. Sometimes when there is a little rough spot in the road to get over like this, those people still come to me and ask me to help. You will all realize how exceedingly glad I am to do it.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. The gentleman reserved a very powerful argument against objection, if any had been made.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

A similar bill (H. R. 10088) was laid on the table.

SETTLEMENT WITH LESSEES, CAMP FUNSTON, KANS.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (S. 851) authorizing the Secretary of War to make settlement with the lessees who erected buildings on a five-year lease on the zone at Camp Funston, Kans., and for other purposes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, authorized to make such settlement as he thinks just and proper, with the several lessees who erected buildings under a five-year lease, with renewal clauses, on the zone of Camp Funston activities and amusements at Camp Funston, Kans., the buildings having been erected under the authority of the War Department and at the invitation of the department of camp activities, under leases which were properly approved but which have been canceled before the expiration of any of said leases and over the protest of the holders.

With the following committee amendment:

Page 2, after line 6, insert: Provided, That in no case the amount paid in settlement shall exceed the actual losses sustained.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the committee amendment.

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

ORDNANCE STOREKEEPER IN THE ARMY.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (S. 834) to authorize the appointment of an ordnance storekeeper in the Army.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, I object.

MAJ. RUSSELL B. PUTNAM.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 11738) for the relief of Maj. Russell B. Putnam.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the consideration of the bill?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury of the United States not otherwise appropriated, to Maj. Russell B. Putnam, assistant paymaster, United States Marine Corps, the sum of $2,173 to cover the loss sustained by him through the embezzlement of such amount of Government funds by Robert H. Rudolph, pay clerk, United States Marine Corps, in 1915, while serving as pay clerk to the said Major Putnam, at Marine Barracks, Philadelphia, Pa., and on expeditionary duty in the West Indies, and which amount Major Putnam was required to and did deposit with the Treasurer of the United States.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

MILTON M. FENNER.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 1887) for the relief of Milton M. Fenner.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, I object.

Mr. KRAUS. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman withdraw his objection?

Mr. STAFFORD. Yes.

Mr. KRAUS. Of course, if the gentleman is going to object, I shall not take up any time. I call his attention to the fact that although this is a case in effect seeking to retire a midshipman, the records disclose that he has had three such cases that Congress has acted upon severally. I believe the facts in this case are almost substantially like the facts in these other cases which Congress has heretofore acted upon.

Mr. STAFFORD. He is entitled to a pension to-day, is he not?

Mr. KRAUS. No; he is not.

Mr. BUTLER. He has no status of any kind. This is the ninth case. We examined it with very great care. This lad is a total wreck, and we felt that he ought to come within the other cases. I can recall when the first exception was made. These young men at the academy have no right of retirement. This young man in the performance of his duty was taken sick of typhoid fever and afterwards with varicose veins. We considered the case very carefully and were unanimously of opinion that because of his physical condition, which is frightful, he ought to have the relief which has been given to others.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, we can not begin the practice of giving retired pay to men who have not graduated from the academies. If we begin, we will get into all sorts of trouble.

Mr. KRAUS. He graduated from the academy.

Mr. BUTLER. I endeavored to prevent the establishment of the precedent, but it has become established. It is my recollection that this is the ninth case within my service here as a Member. The Secretary of the Navy has said that he can see no reason why this young man should not have the benefit that other young men have had in similar circumstances. While the gentleman from Wyoming and I were here I endeavored to prevent the establishment of a precedent, but Congress on several occasions has acted.

Mr. BLANTON. What is so repugnant about giving retired pay to a young man?

Mr. BUTLER. There is nothing whatever.

Mr. BLANTON. When the Congress has just provided that a general in the Army shall have retired pay, although he is employed by a big corporation.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, I object.

UNITED DREDGING CO.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (S. 3570) for the relief of the United Dredging Co.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of this bill?

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I object.

Mr. EDMONDS. Will the gentleman reserve the objection?

Mr. BLANTON. I intend to object, but I will reserve it.

Mr. EDMONDS. I would like to ask the gentleman why he objects? There is not any reason——

Mr. BLANTON. If the gentleman will come over to my office to-morrow morning at half past 8 o'clock I will tell him.

Mr. EDMONDS. This amendment only puts the case in court.

Mr. BLANTON. I object.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the next bill.

STEAMSHIP "MOHICAN."

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 1758) for the relief of the owners of the Steamer Mohican.

The clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of this bill? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. BLAND of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the bill S. 4310 be taken from the Speaker's table and considered in lieu of the House bill.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Virginia asks unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table Senate bill 4310 and consider it in place of the House bill. Is there objection?

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, during the consideration of the Unanimous Consent Calendar this afternoon, request was made to substitute a Senate bill for a House bill. I assumed the Senate bill was substantially or identically the same as the House bill, but I have since found it was not. It has been the general understanding that when a unanimous consent is asked to substitute a Senate bill for a House bill that it is virtually identical with the House bill. I find it is necessary now to make the inquiry so as to protect the rights of the Members of the House.

Mr. BLAND of Virginia. I have personally compared the bill with the bill as amended by the House committee and it is identical.

Mr. STAFFORD. I have no objection to having the Senate bill substituted therefor.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the Senate bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the claim of the Clyde Steamship Co., a corporation organized under and by virtue of the laws of the State of Maine, with its principal place of business in the city and State of New York, owners of the steamship Mohican, for damages alleged to have been caused by collision between said vessel and the United States tug Barlow on the 31st day of July, 1919, while said steamship Mohican was moored at Pier No. 2, Empire Stores, Brooklyn, N. Y., may be sued for and submitted to the United States District Court in and for the Southern District of New York, sitting as a court of admiralty, and acting under the rules in admiralty governing such court, and said court shall have jurisdiction to hear and determine such suit and to enter a judgment or decree for the amount of such damages and costs, if any, as shall be found to be due against the United States in favor of the owners of the said steamship Mohican, or against the owners of the said steamship Mohican in favor of the United States, and upon the same principles and measures of liability as in like cases in admiralty between private parties and with the same rights of appeal: Provided, That such notice of the suit shall be given to the Attorney General of the United States as may be provided by order of the said court, and it shall be the duty of the Attorney General to cause the United States attorney in such district to appear and defend for the United States: Provided further, That said suit shall be brought and commenced within four months of the date of the passage of this act.

The bill was ordered to be read the third time, was read the third time, and passed.

Mr. BLAND of Virginia. I ask that the House bill be laid on the table.

The SPEAKER. Without objection a similar House bill is laid on the table.

There was no objection.

STEAM LIGHTER "COMPORT."

The next business in order on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 1759) for the relief of the owners of the steam lighter Comport.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. EDMONDS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that Senate bill 4311, for the relief of the owners of the steam lighter Comport, now on the Speaker's table, be taken up in lieu of the House bill.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania asks unanimous consent that a similar Senate bill be substituted for the House bill. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. The Clerk will report the Senate bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the claim of the New York & Cuba Mail Steamship Co., a corporation organized under and by virtue of the laws of the State of Maine, with its principal place of business in the city and State of New York, owners of the steam lighter Comport, for damages alleged to have been caused by collision between said vessel and the United States steam lighter President, now called the General Sawtelle, on the 1st day of March, 1919, near piers Nos. 13 and 14, East River, N. Y., may be sued for and submitted to the United States District Court in and for the Southern District of New York, sitting as a court of admiralty and acting under the rules in admiralty governing such court; and said court shall have jurisdiction to hear and determine such suit and to enter a judgment or decree for the amount of such damages and costs, if any, as shall be found to be due against the United States in favor of the owners of the said steam lighter Comport, or against the owners of the said steam lighter Comport in favor of the United States, and upon the same principles and measures of liability as in like cases in admiralty between private parties and with the same rights of appeal: Provided, That such notice of the suit shall be given to the Attorney General of the United States as may be provided by order of the said court, and it shall be the duty of the Attorney General to cause the United States attorney in such district to appear and defend for the United States: Provided further, That said suit shall be brought and commenced within four months of the date of the passage of this act.

The bill was ordered to be read the third time, was read the third time, and passed.

Mr. EDMONDS. Mr. Speaker I ask unanimous consent that the bill H. R. 1759 be laid on the table.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

SCHOONER "T. K. BENTLEY."

The next business in order on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 12315) for the relief of the owners of the schooner T. K. Bentley.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, may we have the bill reported?

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of the Treasury of the United States, from funds not otherwise appropriated, $4,170.45, under such conditions as the Secretary of the Navy may direct, to J. Newton Pugsley, of Parrsboro, Nova Scotia, managing owner, in full settlement for damages sustained by the schooner T. K. Bentley as a result of collision with the U. S. S. North Dakota on January 3, 1922.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, is not this one of the class of claims which, if deemed proper for settlement, the Secretary of the Navy has authority already to settle?

Mr. EDMONDS. Mr. Speaker, I presume so, if it amounted to less than $3,000. The Secretary of the Navy is only allowed to settle claims up to $3,000.

Mr. BLANTON. I understand, but does not the gentleman believe that the amount of many of these claims is put in at an exorbitant figure, and if we let this pass a little while the gentleman will be very glad to have the Secretary of the Navy consider it under the authority of law which is given him?

Mr. EDMONDS. Well, the Secretary of the Navy, I assume, has offered $3,000, and it has been refused, in all probability, by the party.

Mr. BLANTON. I do not think so. The report does not show it.

Mr. STAFFORD. Will my colleague yield? The original claim in this case was $6,054.15——

Mr. BLANTON. Why, they cut off $2,000.

Mr. STAFFORD. And in that amount there was a claim of $3,240 for demurrage. The department has disallowed the demurrage claim in substance, and as this is not an American citizen and the owner lives in Nova Scotia the claim of $4,000, to me, at least, seems to be reasonable under the circumstances. Perhaps if we should hold it up in the air he might take $3,000, but if it is a meritorious claim we should not withhold payment.

Mr. BLANTON. Is a claim held by a foreigner more meritorious than a claim of an American citizen?

Mr. STAFFORD. Oh, no. But, owing to the spirit of comity existing between the two countries, where a foreigner makes a claim of $6,000 and the department cuts it down to $4,000 and there is proof that it is a reasonable amount——

Mr. BLANTON. We settled a $2,500,000 claim of Norway the other day for $11,000,000——

Mr. STAFFORD. I agree with the gentleman that the Europeans think we are a mint over here.

Mr. BLANTON. They think we are easy.

Mr. STAFFORD. And all that is to be done is to put their hands in the Treasury and drag it out.

Mr. BLANTON. I believe they are correct about that. I withdraw the objection.

Mr. HUDSPETH. Mr. Speaker, I object.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the next bill.

D. H. MACADAM.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 12159) for the relief of D. H. MacAdam.

The title of the bill was read.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of this bill?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to D. H. MacAdam, of Honolulu, Hawaii, the sum of $8,749.39, being the extent of liability of D. H. MacAdam, as postmaster at Honolulu, Hawaii, to the Government of the United States, owing to the embezzlement of Federal funds by the assistant postmaster at Honolulu, Hawaii, prior to and during the term of office of D. H. MacAdam as postmaster at Honolulu, Hawaii.

Mr. EDMONDS. Mr. Speaker, I have an amendment that I would like to offer.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. EDMONDS: In line 6, strike out the figures "$8,749.39" and insert in lieu thereof "$5,514.39."

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the next bill.

AMERICAN TRUST CO.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 13205) for the relief of the American Trust Co.

The title of the bill was read.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of this bill?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he hereby is, authorized and directed to pay to the American Trust Co., of Charlotte, N. C., a banking corporation, existing by law, or its assigns, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $4,000, with interest at the rate of 4½ per cent per annum from February 2, 1920, to the date of payment, the amount of the principal and interest due it as owner of four United States Treasury certificates of indebtedness of series TM-4-1920, numbered 18462, 18463, 18464, and 18465, each dated February 2, 1920, and due March 15, 1920, of which the American Trust Co. has established loss from its possession; and shall require the American Trust Co. to furnish to the Secretary of the Treasury a bond in the penal sum of double the principal amount of the lost United States Treasury certificates and the interest accrued on such obligation, with such security or surety as the Secretary of the Treasury may require to indemnify the United States against any loss from any claim that may subsequently be made upon such lost United States Treasury certificates of indebtedness.

With a committee amendment, as follows:

Strike out all after the enacting clause down to and including line 11, on page 2, and insert in lieu thereof the following:

"That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to redeem United States Treasury certificates of indebtedness numbered 18462, 18463, 18464, and 18465, in the denomination of $1,000, series TM4-1920, dated February 2, 1920, and maturing March 15, 1920, with interest at the rate of 4½ per cent per annum from February 2, 1920, to March 15, 1920, in favor of the American Trust Co., of Charlotte, N. C., or its assigns, without presentation of the said certificates, the certificates of indebtedness having been lost, stolen, or destroyed: Provided, That the said certificates of indebtedness shall not have been previously presented for payment, and that no payment shall be made hereunder for any coupons which shall have been previously presented and paid: And provided further, That the said American Trust Co., of Charlotte, N. C., shall first file in the Treasury Department a bond in the penal sum of double the amount of the lost, stolen, or destroyed Treasury certificates of indebtedness and the interest payable thereon, in such form and with such surety or sureties as may be acceptable to the Secretary of the Treasury to indemnify and save harmless the United States from any loss on account of the lost, stolen, or destroyed certificates of indebtedness herein described."

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I offer an amendment. After the last number of the bond given and preceding the words "in the denomination" insert the word "each."

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Texas offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. BLANTON: On page 2, line 15, after the figures "18465," insert the word "each."

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the committee amendment.

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the next bill.

HELENE M. LAYTON.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 13250) for the relief of Helene M. Layton.

The title of the bill was read.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of this bill?

There was no objection.

Mr. EDMONDS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the bill S. 4113. It is the same as the House bill.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania asks unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the bill S. 4113 and consider it in lieu of the House bill. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the Senate bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (S. 4113) for the relief of Helene M. Layton.

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to Helene M. Layton, administratrix, cum testamento annexo, of the estate of Lewis W. Mustard, deceased, the sum of $2,852.43 by reason of an overcharge in connection with the estate tax on the above estate arising out of the requirement of the United States Court in China, at Shanghai, China, that the tax be paid by Edward H. Dunning, the executor in China, before the account of said executor could be closed.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

Mr. EDMONDS. Mr. Speaker, I move that the similar House bill be laid on the table.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the gentleman's request?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the next bill.

CHARLES F. PEIRCE.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 13208) for the relief of Charles F. Peirce.

The title of the bill was read.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of this bill?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Comptroller General of the United States be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to allow credit in the account of Charles F. Peirce, as superintendent and special disbursing agent of the Indian school at Flandreau, S. Dak., for the quarter ended March 31, 1920, for payment of $1,110 to Frank L. Van Tassel, of Yankton, S. Dak.; said sum being the difference between the original contract price of flour purchased from the said Frank L. Van Tassel and the price specified in a modified contract approved by the Secretary of the Interior.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the next bill.

HARRY CADEN.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 11353) to provide for reopening the accounts of Harry Caden and charging of certain expenses therein to a different appropriation from the one used in payment.

The title of the bill was read.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of this bill?

Mr. STAFFORD. Which one is this, Mr. Speaker?

Mr. BLANTON. No. 370 on the calendar.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the accounting officers of the United States Treasury be, and they are hereby, authorized and directed to reopen the accounts of Harry Caden, special disbursing agent for the Flathead irrigation project for the quarters ended September 30 and December 31, 1917, and to charge expenditures shown therein for increase of compensation of employees, amounting to $13,838.96, to the appropriation "Increase of compensation, Indian Service, 1918," instead of to the appropriation "Irrigation systems, Flathead Reservation, Mont., reimbursable," as paid by said Harry Caden and allowed by the Auditor for the Interior Department.

The SPEAKER. The question in on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the next bill.

POST PUBLISHING CO.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 1593) for the relief of the Post Publishing Co.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. BLANTON. I object.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Texas objects. The Clerk will report the next bill.

HOWARD R. GURNEY.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 12039) for the relief of Howard R. Gurney.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of this bill?

There was no objection.

Mr. EDMONDS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table S. 4333 and substitute it for this House bill.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman asks unanimous consent that the similar Senate bill be substituted. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $4,391.44 to Howard R. Gurney, of Springfield, Mass., as full compensation against the Government for injuries sustained by him when struck by a United States Navy truck in the city of Springfield, Mass., on October 26, 1920.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I move to strike out the last word. There are two reasons why I do not object to this bill, although a similar bill concerning just exactly the same kind of transaction down in Texas was objected to a moment ago and put off the calendar.

Mr. STAFFORD. Will the gentleman yield? What bill does the gentleman refer to?

Mr. BLANTON. Just one minute. As I said, there are two reasons why I do not object to this bill. One is that this is one of the bills of our distinguished Speaker, and I am going to let it pass on that account. [Applause.] The other reason is that I have purposely let a number of bills go by here to-night that ordinarily I should object to, under unanimous consent. There was one bill for reimbursement down in Kansas, for instance, that I have objected to here for the last two years at least, but I purposely let it go by to-night, and I will tell you why. If we can just keep enough stuff going into the other end of the Capitol for the next 10 days in order to give them an excuse for keeping busy there, we can save the people of this country $50,000,000 a year on a certain measure that is now being forced down the throats of the American people. [Applause.] I want to give our distinguished colleagues over there at the other end of the Capitol—they are our colleagues for they are employed by the American people just like we are—I want to give the ones who are fighting for the interests of the American people a good excuse for killing that pernicious subsidy bill. Therefore we have been letting a few bills involving thousands of dollars go over there to-night in order to save millions.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, if we are going to pass any more bills on this calendar, we will have no stump speeches. If gentlemen want to make stump speeches, we will rise.

Mr. BLANTON. This is to offset some of the Wyoming stump speeches that we have here every day and every night. I let some Wyoming bills go by here to-day, because I do not like to send a colleague back home without any bacon. [Laughter.] I let them go by, but I think under ordinary circumstances I should have had some help from the gentleman from Wisconsin. I am not going to take up any more time.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, I rise in opposition to the pro forma amendment, just for one purpose. The gentleman who has just taken his seat stated that just a minute ago there was a bill affecting some person in Texas, a bill of a similar import, that was objected to. I do not recall that bill. In going over these bills, so far as I am concerned, I do not consider at all the question as to who introduced them, and I should like to inquire of the gentleman what that bill was, because we play fair, regardless of the position that any gentleman occupies.

Mr. BLANTON. Was there not a truck bill objected to a few minutes ago?

Mr. STAFFORD. There was not.

Mr. BLANTON. I beg the gentleman's pardon. The gentleman made a reservation on it, but I think he withdrew it.

Mr. STAFFORD. Does the gentleman refer to the bill that his colleague [Mr. GARRETT of Texas] was interested in?

Mr. BLANTON. Yes. The reservation was made, and I stepped out of the room for a moment, and I did not know it had been withdrawn.

Mr. STAFFORD. We do not want the statement to go into the RECORD that we are playing favorites here. We do not. We treat everybody equally and fairly.

Mr. BLANTON. Then I withdraw that statement from the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to a third reading, and was accordingly read the third time and passed.

By unanimous consent H. R. 12039, the corresponding House bill, was ordered to lie on the table.

ALICE M. GORMAN.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (S. 3350) for the relief of Alice M. Gorman.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the bill.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury of the United States not otherwise appropriated by law, to Alice M. Gorman the sum of $2,500 for injuries received when the automobile in which she was riding collided with an Army truck near North East, Md., April 17, 1921.

With the following committee amendment:

Page 6, after the word "of," strike out the figures "$2,500" and insert in lieu thereof "$1,000, in full settlement against the Government."

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to a third reading, and was accordingly read the third time and passed.

Mr. HUDSPETH. Mr. Speaker, I wish to withdraw my objection to H. R. 12356.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Texas withdraws his objection to the bill H. R. 12356. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, I think we had better continue the consideration of the calendar.

The SPEAKER. Objection is made, and the Clerk will report the next bill.

CAPT. EDWARD T. HARTMAN.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (S. 1281) for the relief of Capt. Edward T. Hartmann, United States Army, and others.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. BLANTON. Reserving the right to object, this claim is 24 years old. Has not there been a just Congress since 1899?

Mr. EDMONDS. This has been up a number of times. The reason the committee passed this bill at this time and brought it before the Congress was that all the other officers have been paid, but for some reason or other these have not got their money.

Mr. BLANTON. I sat on the committee with the gentleman from Pennsylvania, and when I was sitting with him the gentleman was opposed to claims of this kind.

Mr. EDMONDS. Well, what are we going to do? Here were a lot of officers who lost their personal property, and all of the others have got their pay.

Mr. BLANTON. When the bandits can drive up to a paymaster and take $46,000 of Government money and tie the men to a tree and get away with it, it ought to teach these Army officers to be more careful with Government money.

Mr. EDMONDS. This is not money; this is for personal property lost on a shipwreck of a transport. All of the other officers who lost property got paid. These officers, it strikes me, ought now to get theirs.

Mr. BLANTON. Why have they not got their pay?

Mr. EDMONDS. The bill has been introduced here at every Congress, and it has been up at every session.

Mr. BLANTON. We had a number of bills of this kind in the Sixty-sixth Congress, and the gentleman led the fight against them.

Mr. EDMONDS. I know I did; I did so in the case of the Alaska.

Mr. BLANTON. I have never been much in favor of limitations, but I think the limitations have run against this claim, and I object.

Mr. EDMONDS. The gentleman will have it up next session.

ROBERT EDGAR ZEIGLER.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill S. 107, an act for the relief of Robert Edgar Zeigler.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay and reimburse Capt. Robert Edgar Zeigler in the sum of $725, same being for the amount of personal property stolen from him while his household goods were in Government custody at United States Army General Hospital, No. 20, Whipple Barracks, Ariz.

With the following committee amendments:

In line 4, after the word "pay," add a comma and insert the following: "out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated."

In line 5 strike out the figures "$725" and insert in lieu thereof "$585."

The committee amendments were agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, I make the point that there is no quorum present.

ADJOURNMENT.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, I move the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; accordingly (at 9 o'clock and 46 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned until to-morrow, Tuesday, February 20, 1923, at 12 o'clock noon.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS, ETC.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, executive communications were taken from the Speaker's table and referred as follows:

1013. A letter from the Secretary of the Interior, transmitting for consideration a tentative bill authorizing the payment from the appropriation for contingent expenses for the Department of the Interior for 1923, to S. Livingston, of Washington, D. C., the sum of $110; to the Committees on Appropriations and Claims.

1014. A communication from the President of the United States, transmitting an estimate of appropriation for the legislative establishment of the United States for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1923, in the sum of $20,000; to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES ON PUBLIC BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS.

Under clause 2 of Rule XIII,

Mr. BLANTON: Committee on the District of Columbia. H. R. 12997. A bill granting relief to the Metropolitan police, and to the officers and members of the fire department of the District of Columbia; without amendment (Rept. No. 1650). Referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

Mr. COLE of Iowa: Committee on Foreign Affairs. S. J. Res. 263. A joint resolution to authorize the Secretary of Agriculture to accept membership for the United States in the Permanent Association of the International Road Congresses; without amendment (Rept. No. 1651). Referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

Mr. SINNOTT: Committee on Public Lands. S. 4197. An act to authorize the Secretary of the Interior to issue to certain persons and certain corporations permits to explore, or leases of, certain lands that lie south of the medial line of the main channel of Red River, in Oklahoma, and for other purposes; with amendments (Rept. No. 1653). Referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

Mr. HAUGEN: Committee on Agriculture. H. R. 14326. A bill establishing standard grades of naval stores, preventing deception in transactions in naval stores, regulating traffic therein, and for other purposes; with an amendment (Rept. No. 1655). Referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

Mr. HAUGEN: Committee on Agriculture. H. J. Res. 457. A joint resolution authorizing the appointment of a joint committee of the Senate and House of Representatives to represent the Congress of the United States at the World's Dairy Congress; without amendment (Rept. No. 1656). Referred to the House Calendar.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES ON PRIVATE BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS.

Under clause 2 of Rule XIII,

Mr. McSWAIN: Committee on War Claims. S. 34. An act for the relief of the Pacific Commissary Co.; with an amendment (Rept. No. 1652). Referred to the Committee of the Whole House.

Mr. KLECZKA: Committee on War Claims. S. 2984. An act for the relief of Thurston W. True; without amendment (Rept. No. 1654). Referred to the Committee of the Whole House.

PUBLIC BILLS, RESOLUTIONS, AND MEMORIALS.

Under clause 3 of Rule XXII, bills, resolutions, and memorials were introduced and severally referred as follows:

By Mr. HUDSPETH: A bill (H. R. 14379) authorizing an extension of and an additional loan to the Kansas City, Mexico & Orient Railroad by the United States Government; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

By Mr. HERRICK: A bill (H. R. 14380) making it unlawful for any Member of Congress, either of the House or Senate, or any Cabinet officer, or any other salaried employee of the Government, to practice nepotism; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. WILLIAMSON: A bill (H. R. 14381) granting the consent of Congress to the State of South Dakota for the construction of a bridge across the Missouri River between Charles Mix County and Gregory County, S. Dak.; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

Also, a bill (H. R. 14382) granting the consent of Congress to the State of South Dakota for the construction of a bridge across the Missouri River between Hughes County and Stanley County, S. Dak.; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

Also, a bill (H. R. 14383) granting the consent of Congress to the State of South Dakota for the construction of a bridge across the Missouri River between Brule County and Lyman County, S. Dak.; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

Also, a bill (H. R. 14384) granting the consent of Congress to the State of South Dakota for the construction of a bridge across the Missouri River between Potter County and Dewey County, S. Dak.; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

Also, a bill (H. R. 14385) granting the consent of Congress to the State of South Dakota for the construction of a bridge across the Missouri River between Walworth County and Corson County, S. Dak.; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

By Mr. ANDERSON: A bill (H. R. 14386) to remit the duty on a carillon of bells to be imported for the House of Hope Church, St. Paul, Minn.; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

By Mr. FOSTER: A joint resolution (H. J. Res. 454) proposing an amendment to the Constitution of the United States; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. VOLSTEAD: A joint resolution (H. J. Res. 455) to amend the China trade act; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. HAUGEN: A joint resolution (H. J. Res. 456) authorizing the chairman of the Committee on Agriculture to appoint a subcommittee to consist of not more than eight members of the Committee on Agriculture to join with a like committee of five heretofore appointed by the Senate to investigate problems relating to reforestation, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Agriculture.

Also, a joint resolution (H. J. Res. 457) authorizing the appointment of a joint committee of the Senate and the House of Representatives to represent the Congress of the United States at the World's Dairy Congress; to the Committee on Agriculture.

By Mr. FORDNEY: A resolution (H. Res. 541) providing for extra compensation for clerks to the Committee on Ways and Means for extra and overtime services performed; to the Committee on Accounts.

By Mr. SINNOTT: A resolution (H. Res. 542) for the immediate consideration of S. 4197; to the Committee on Rules.

By Mr. NEWTON of Missouri: A resolution (H. Res. 543) authorizing payment of six months' salary and funeral expenses to Henrietta Mueller on account of death of T. J. Mueller, late a clerk to the Hon. L. C. DYER; to the Committee on Accounts.

By Mr. ANDERSON: A resolution (H. Res. 544) to pay J. W. M. Austin for special janitor services; to the Committee on Accounts.

By Mr. TYSON: A resolution (H. Res. 545) authorizing the creation of a committee of the House of Representatives looking to the improvement of our national harbors, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Rules.

By the SPEAKER (by request): Memorial of the Legislature of the State of Idaho urging Congress to enact legislation providing for the relief of disabled veterans; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

Also (by request), memorial of the Legislature of the State of Idaho requesting Congress to postpone all payments overdue upon reclamation projects and spread all of the remaining payments to fall due, together with said past-due payments, over a period of 40 years; to the Committee on Irrigation of Arid Lands.

Also (by request), memorial of the Legislature of the State of Oregon urging Congress to appropriate money for the construction of highways through and adjacent to our national forests; to the Committee on Agriculture.

By Mr. WILLIAMSON: Memorial of the Legislature of the State of South Dakota urging Congress to take such prompt action as will result in immediate development of the Great Lakes-St. Lawrence deep waterway; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

By Mr. HAWLEY: Memorial of the Legislature of the State of Oregon, opposing further immigration into the United States in excess of the present quota; to the Committee on Immigration and Naturalization.

Also, memorial of the Legislature of the State of Oregon, requesting Congress to construct highways near and adjacent to national forests after appropriating funds from the National Treasury; to the Committee on Appropriations.

PRIVATE BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS.

Under clause 1 of Rule XXII, private bills and resolutions were introduced and severally referred as follows:

By Mr. BEGG: A bill (H. R. 14387) granting a pension to Lillian Bolton Miller; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. GERNERD: A bill (H. R. 14388) to provide for the carrying out of the award of the War Labor Board of July 31, 1918, in favor of certain employees of the Bethlehem Steel Co., at Bethlehem, Pa.; to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. HAWLEY: A bill (H. R. 14389) granting a pension to Louise P. Glaze; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 14390) granting an increase of pension to Eliza M. Trayler; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. KOPP: A bill (H. R. 14391) granting a pension to Stella E. Rossell; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. RAKER: A bill (H. R. 14392) for the relief of A. S. Conner; to the Committee on Claims.

Also, a bill (H. R. 14393) granting a pension to Emma Jane Mooers; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

PETITIONS, ETC.

Under clause 1 of Rule XXII, petitions and papers were laid on the Clerk's desk and referred as follows:

7349. By Mr. ANSORGE: Petition of New York League of Unitarian Women, New York City, urging the speedy passage of the child labor measure, Senate Joint Resolution 232; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

7350. By Mr. FROTHINGHAM: Petition from the citizens of the town of Stoughton, Mass., asking legislation to fix a maximum price on coal; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

7351. By Mr. KISSEL: Petition of Associated Musicians of Greater New York, New York City, N. Y., favoring an amendment to the Volstead Act permitting the use of light wines and beer; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

7352. Also, petition of Schwarzenbach, Huber & Co., New York City, N. Y., opposing the passage of the truth in fabrics bill; to the Committee on Agriculture.

7353. Also, petition of State fire marshal, New Orleans, State of Louisiana, favoring the passage of House bill 13448, to prohibit the transportation of inflammable films in interstate and foreign commerce; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

7354. By Mr. MICHENER: Petitions of sundry citizens of Michigan, indorsing joint resolution purporting to extend immediate aid to the people of German and Austrian Republics; to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

7355. By Mr. TAGUE: Petition of 104 laborers of the United States customs service at Boston for action by Congress on House bill 14071, giving the Secretary of the Treasury discretion to adjust compensation and salaries in the customs service; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

7356. By Mr. WATSON: Petition of Spring City Council, No. 500, junior Order United American Mechanics, in opposition to House bill 14273; to the Committee on Immigration and Naturalization.

SENATE.

TUESDAY, February 20, 1923.

(Legislative day of Monday, February 19, 1923.)

The Senate met at 11 o'clock a. m., on the expiration of the recess.

THE MERCHANT MARINE—FILLED MILK.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 12817) to amend and supplement the merchant marine act, 1920, and for other purposes, the pending question being on the motion of Mr. LADD that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill (H. R. 8086) to prohibit the shipment of filled milk in interstate or foreign commerce.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will call the roll.

The reading clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Ashurst	Fletcher	McCumber	Sheppard
Ball	Frelinghuysen	McKellar	Shields
Bayard	George	McKinley	Shortridge
Borah	Glass	McNary	Smith
Brandegee	Hale	Moses	Smoot

Dillingham	Lenroot	Ransdell
Edge	Lodge	Reed, Pa.
Ernst	McCormick	Robinson

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Seventy-seven Senators have answered to their names. A quorum is present. The Senator from Texas [Mr. SHEPPARD] is entitled to the floor.

DEVELOPMENT OF HYDROELECTRIC ENERGY.

Mr. NORRIS. I ask the Senator from Texas if he will not yield to me, in order that I may ask unanimous consent for the reading of a resolution passed by the house of representatives of the Nebraska Legislature and my answer to it.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. President, I want to say to the Senator from Texas that I shall not make any point of order or object to anything like the matter the Senator from Nebraska desires to present. It is a matter of courtesy to Senators.

Mr. SHEPPARD. Very well. With that understanding I yield.

Mr. NORRIS. I send to the desk a resolution certified as having been passed by the house of representatives of the Nebraska Legislature and my reply thereto, which I ask may be read.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the Secretary will read as requested.

The reading clerk read as follows:

Whereas, according to the United States Geological Survey, Nebraska has 366,000 hydroelectric horsepower, the greater part of it still undeveloped;

Whereas the great river system of Nebraska, the Loup rivers, the Niobrara, the Elkhorn, the Plattes, the Blues, the Nemahas, and the Republican, are situated in the midst of a fertile agricultural region easy of access of railroads and market facilities, producing yearly 60,000,000 bushels of wheat, 200,000,000 bushels of corn, with approximately 10,000,000 head of horses, cattle, swine, and sheep, capable of furnishing food to a population of more than 10,000,000 people, in a temperate and healthful climate adapted to the highest development of the human race;

Whereas the present horsepower used in Nebraska industries is approximately 90,000, by far the larger part of which is produced from coal and petroleum, both of which are expensive, diminishing in quantity, and involved in distant transportation and labor difficulties;

Whereas the present available hydroelectric power in Nebraska, if utilized, would save the annual consumption of 4,000,000 tons of coal and furnish more reliable and cheaper industrial basis for the development of the State;

Whereas Henry Ford, of Detroit, has made a proposition to the United States Government for the development of the hydroelectric power at Muscle Shoals, on the Tennessee River, and violent opposition to the acceptance of Mr. Ford's offer renders difficult its adoption;

Whereas the development of Nebraska's water power for industrial purposes would bring to our State millions of industrious people, intermingling manufacture with agriculture in a most desirable manner, enabling our farmers to sell their food products in a home market and producing manufactures which would supply the needs of our farmers and people of the Middle West: Therefore be it

Resolved by the House of Representatives and Senate of Nebraska, That we hereby memorialize Henry Ford to make an industrial survey of the hydroelectric power of Nebraska and to engage in its development, pledging him the most cordial support from our government, State and municipal, and from our people.

Resolved, That we urgently request the Members of Congress from the State of Nebraska to support the passage of the Ford tender for Muscle Shoals before March 4, 1923, so that a precedent can be set for similar developments in Nebraska.

Resolved, That the chief clerk of the house and secretary of the senate transmit to Mr. Ford copies of this memorial, inviting him to fix a date when we may meet with the legislature now in session and enter upon the industrial campaign herein suggested, and that copies of this memorial be forthwith forwarded to every Member of Congress from the State of Nebraska.

I hereby certify that the foregoing resolution was adopted by unanimous vote of the house of representatives this 16th day of February, 1923.

F. P. CARRICK, Chief Clerk.

UNITED STATES SENATE,
Washington, D. C., February 20, 1923.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,
Nebraska Legislature, Lincoln, Nebr.

GENTLEMEN: I am just in receipt of a resolution which your chief clerk certifies was unanimously passed by your body on the 16th day of February, 1923. This resolution, it can be fairly stated, has two objects in view: First, it requests the Members of Congress from the State of Nebraska to "support the passage of the Ford tender for Muscle Shoals," and, second, it extends an invitation to Henry Ford to come to Nebraska and make an industrial survey of the hydroelectric power of Nebraska with a view to its development.

The resolution frankly states that the reason why you want the Nebraska Members of Congress to support the Ford offer as to Muscle Shoals is "so that a precedent can be set for similar developments in Nebraska." The reason you give for the support of the Muscle Shoals proposition is one of the many reasons why I have been opposed to the acceptance of Mr. Ford's offer for Muscle Shoals. The acceptance of the Muscle Shoals offer, as you truly state in your resolution, would be a precedent which would be used as a basis for similar action all over the United States, and as a result we would give the control of the development of hydroelectric energy from our navigable streams over entirely to corporations of wealth without retaining any control or regulation whatsoever for the benefit of the people at large.

The reasons you give in your resolution confirm me in the righteousness of my opposition to the acceptance of the Ford offer. I am unwilling to give away the birthright of millions of unborn citizens for the enrichment of private corporations at the expense of the taxpayers of America, and I am unwilling to do this even when requested to do it by so high and honorable body as the House of Representatives of the Nebraska Legislature.

Of course, you gentlemen have studied the Ford offer. You certainly would not ask the Members of Congress to accept it unless you had thoroughly studied and analyzed it, and if you have thus analyzed it, you are aware of the fact that the only obligation Mr. Ford assumes in the Muscle Shoals proposition is that he will organize a corporation with a paid-up capital stock of $10,000,000, and that, as a matter of fact, when he has organized this corporation his responsibility has entirely ceased and we are therefore dealing with a corporation. We turn over to this corporation in absolute fee-simple title property that has cost the taxpayers of America about $90,000,000 for the paltry sum of $5,000,000. Part of this property so turned over consists of property that is not necessary in the development or operation of Muscle Shoals, and which Mr. Ford's corporation will be able to dispose of at once for an amount that can be fairly estimated in excess of the $5,000,000 which the corporation pays to the Government. The buildings on this property were built, it is true, at war prices, but the real estate has enormously enhanced in value since it was purchased. It consists in part of two towns, modern in every respect, equipped with electric light, waterworks, and macadamized streets, all built and constructed in an up-to-date manner. This gift to Mr. Ford's corporation is the smallest part of the transaction. In addition, the Ford offer provides that the United States Government shall give him a lease on the water power at Muscle Shoals for 100 years; that the Government of the United States shall pay all the money necessary to construct and equip the dams necessary to the development of the hydroelectric energy, and in addition to this it is provided that the Government of the United States must keep most of this property in repair during the hundred years for the payment of a very modest and inadequate sum. Mr. Ford assumes no risk for earthquake, high water, or washouts. He pays a small sum annually to the Government, which his shrewd lobbyists advocate is an amortization fund, but when analyzed and Mr. Ford's corporation given credit for every dollar paid at the time it is paid it is found that it amounts to paying interest on the Government's investment at less than 3 per cent annually; and when we consider that this loan to Ford's corporation from the Federal Treasury runs for 100 years, we can easily see that it is giving to this corporation a gift of the American taxpayers' money so elaborate and so great as to make every legislative job of a similar character from the dawn of civilization fade into insignificance.

Taking up now the second proposition contained in your resolution—that Henry Ford be invited to come to Nebraska and look over the water-power sites—I have learned from statements in the daily press that Mr. Ford has declined this invitation, and one of the main purposes of this communication is to give you the benefit of my experience with this business, in order that you may change your invitation in such a way as to secure the assent of Mr. Ford to come to Nebraska and look us over. If you will couple with your invitation an offer to deed him all the water-power sites in fee simple, to give him a lease on the power developed for 100 years, and to loan him the money to make the development at less than 3 per cent per annum, and then provide that the electricity thus developed shall be free from any regulation by the Nebraska Legislature or any other body, I feel confident that Henry could be induced to reconsider his declination of your invitation and come to our great State and make an examination of our water-power resources.

If I can be of any further service to you in the way of inducing Mr. Ford to accept your invitation, please be free to call upon me.

I have the honor, gentlemen, to remain,

Very truly yours,

G. W. NORRIS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The matter which has been read at the desk will be referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. President, as I said, if any Senator desires to present a petition or anything of that kind which would not occupy any time I shall not object; but otherwise I wish to ask that Senators during the day shall not for the purpose of presenting a petition or asking unanimous consent for the transaction of business interrupt the Senator who has the floor.

Mr. SHIELDS. Mr. President, will the Senator from Texas before proceeding yield to me for a moment?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Texas yield to the Senator from Tennessee?

Mr. SHEPPARD. The Senator from Washington [Mr. JONES] indicated that he would object to any interruption.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I would not object now if the Senator from Tennessee desires to have anything inserted in the RECORD.

Mr. SHIELDS. I did not hear the statement of the Senator from Washington.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I rather invited any Senator if he had any routine matter to present to present it now, but hereafter I am going to object.

POWER OF THE SUPREME COURT.

Mr. SHIELDS. Mr. President, in view of the discussion of last Saturday with reference to the power of the Supreme Court, I desire to say that I have here an article written by an able lawyer, Mr. F. Dumont Smith, of the Hutchinson, Kans., bar, upon that subject, and published in the American Bar Association Journal. I think the article is very illuminating and instructive, and that it ought to follow the argument of the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. OWEN] upon that subject. The particular subject of this article is the case of Marbury against Madison, which is reported in First Cranch, page 137, and the great opinion delivered in that case by the then great Chief Justice of the Supreme Court of the United States. I ask unanimous consent that the article may be printed in the regular type in the RECORD, with the exception of the last paragraph, which might be considered as a reflection upon a Senator, and which, therefore, I have stricken out.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection?

There being no objection, the article was ordered to be printed in the RECORD in 8-point type, as follows:

DECISIVE BATTLES OF CONSTITUTIONAL LAW.

I. MARBURY v. MADISON.

(First Cranch, 137.)

(By F. Dumont Smith, of the Hutchinson (Kans.) bar.)

This is the first of a series of articles by F. Dumont Smith, of the Kansas bar, on those crucial decisions of the Supreme Court of the United States which have molded and formed the Federal Government, altered or modified its course, and profoundly affected the happiness and prosperity of the American people. The historical setting of each case will be given, the opposing contentions, the reasoning of the court, with illuminating extracts from the decisions. The busy lawyer will refresh his mind as to all that is important in each in a half-hour's reading. Our readers will, no doubt, find these articles of much interest.

The case of Marbury v. Madison, perhaps the most important in the judicial history of this country or any other, involved so small a matter as the right to the office of the justice of the peace for the District of Columbia. Marbury had been appointed by President Adams for a term of five years, an office not revocable at the will of the President. The appointment was duly confirmed, the commission signed and attested with the great seal of the United States by Marshall, who was then Secretary of State, but for some reason, probably carelessness, had not been delivered when Jefferson became President.

Jefferson, conceiving that a commission, like a deed, took effect at the time of its delivery, revoked the appointment and gave it to another. At the December term, 1801, Charles Lee, Attorney General of the United States under Adams, appeared before the court at its first sitting in the city of Washington and the first session at which Marshall presided as Chief Justice, and asked for a rule to James Madison, Jefferson's Secretary of State, to show cause why a writ of mandamus should not issue to him, commanding to deliver this commission to Marbury. Lee made a brief statement to the court and presented affidavits to prove the facts above stated. The rule was granted requiring Madison to show cause why the mandamus should not issue.

The case was unique in several respects. Madison did not appear and no argument was made for him or brief filed on his behalf. No written brief was filed by Lee. The case in effect was ex parte. The court was not aided, as it was in its later constitutional decisions, by the genius and eloquence of such lawyers as Webster, Pinckney, and Wirt. The case was not finally heard until February, 1803. This delay was caused by political maneuvers on the part of the Republican majority in Congress. The triumph of Jefferson had carried with a Republican majority in both branches of the national legislature.

Just before the expiration of Adams's term the Federalists, seeking to reform the old judiciary act of 1789, had provided for 16 new circuit judges to relieve the Justices of the Supreme Court from the onerous labor of riding circuit, a labor which was deemed by the Federalists and most of the Justices themselves unconstitutional. Adams had promptly filled these positions with staunch Federalists, almost in the last moments of his term. "The midnight judges" they were termed by the Republicans. The new judiciary act was repealed by the Republicans, the new judges ousted, and, in order to prevent Marshall and his associates from interfering in any way judicially with the operation of the repeal, the August term, 1802, was discontinued, so there was an interval of 14 months after Marbury v. Madison was filed before the court again met.

In the meanwhile the case had been much bruited and had become political in its aspect. The Republicans were determined to purge the Supreme Court of its Federalist majority. Judge Pickering, district judge of New Hampshire, had been impeached for "high crimes and misdemeanors," although it was clearly proven that he was insane. Chase, an associate of Marshall, was then under impeachment, although he was later acquitted by a narrow margin.

In the discussion during the winter of 1801 and 1802 over the repeal of the judiciary act the question of the power of the Supreme Court to declare invalid an act of Congress or to issue a writ of mandamus to a member of the President's Cabinet was warmly debated. It was a cardinal doctrine of the Republican faith that Congress was the sole judge of the constitutionality of its own acts. The Republicans openly declared that if Marshall issued a writ of mandamus to Madison, it would be ignored and Marshall would be impeached.

This was the political situation when Marshall pronounced this decision, a decision which he knew would be rejected and its force denied by the President and his Cabinet, by a majority of both Houses of Congress, and by at least two-thirds of the citizens of the United States. If I shall speak here of the decision as Marshall's decision, I do no injustice to the other justices. Marshall conceived the idea of pinning this great judgment upon the trifling case before the court, and he persuaded the other judges to concur with him. The judgment is Marshall's; the opinion is Marshall's. Nearly 70 years were to elapse before the court was again called upon to declare unconstitutional an act of Congress. If Marshall had not seized this occasion, it is highly probable that long acquiescence in the assertion of the right of Congress to judge of its own acts would have foreclosed the court from ever uttering such a judgment.

Deprived of advice of counsel for the defendant, the court itself acted as counsel for Madison and suggested every possible objection that might be urged to the issuance of the writ, and then answered them. Marshall propounded three questions to be answered. First, "Has the applicant a right to the commission he demands?" Second, "If he has a right, and that right has been violated, do the laws of his country afford him a remedy?" Third, "If they do afford him a remedy, is it a mandamus issuing from this court?"

Upon the first proposition Marshall held that a commission is unlike a deed; that there are three things that constitute a lawful appointment: First, the appointment by the President; second, the confirmation by the Senate; third, the signing of the commission by the President. These three are all voluntary acts, with the exercise of which the court could not interfere; but when the commission is signed all of those things necessary to the appointment which are done in the exercise of a discretion have spent their force. Nothing remains but to attest it with the great seal of the United States by the Secretary of State, and the law makes this his duty. Marshall held that the appointment was complete when the President had signed the commission; that it would be complete without the affixing of the seal, which was simply incontestable proof of the fact that the commission had lawfully issued; that the duty of affixing the seal and delivering the commission were administrative acts which added nothing to the validity of the commission. He showed that universally the tenure of an office dates from the date of the commission and not its delivery; the salary begins at the date of the commission. If the appointee refuses the office after the commission has issued, the new appointee succeeds him and not the prior incumbent.

He held that to make the validity of the commission dependent upon the actual delivery of the commission, through the mails, for instance, was to expose the tenure of office to all the accidents, of theft, fire, etc.

Upon the second branch, whether a mandamus would issue to Madison, Marshall admitted the court was treading upon delicate ground, but he drew that clear distinction, novel then, which has been followed as a conclusive precedent from that date—that the court could not and would not interfere with the political powers of the Executive; that whenever the Secretary of State acted under the orders of the President in the exercise of his political duties the court could not interfere; but when the act is administrative, no officer is too highly placed to be beyond the writ of a court when his failure to perform his administrative act violates the right of a citizen; that no citizen is too humble or his right too minute to deny the relief. So the court held that Marbury was entitled to the office and entitled to a writ of mandamus to the Secretary of State to compel the delivery of his commission.

In closing this branch of the case Marshall said:

"It is not by the office of the person to whom the writ is directed but the nature of the thing to be done that the propriety or impropriety of issuing a mandamus is to be determined. Where the head of a department acts in a case in which executive discretion is to be exercised—in which he is the mere organ of executive will—it is again repeated that any application to a court to control in any respect his conduct would be rejected without hesitation.

"But where he is directed by law to do a certain act affecting the absolute rights of individuals, in the performance of which he is not placed under the particular direction of the President, and the performance of which the President can not lawfully forbid and therefore is never presumed to have forbidden—as, for example, to record a commission or a patent for land which has received all the legal solemnities, or to give a copy of such record—in such cases it is not perceived on what ground the courts of the country are further excused from the duty of giving judgment that right be done to an injured individual than if the same services were to be performed by a person not the head of a department."

Proceeding to the third branch of the case, the question involved was whether the judiciary act of 1789, which attempted to confer original jurisdiction in mandamus upon the Supreme Court, was valid, or whether the grant in the Constitution of the subjects of original jurisdiction, although in affirmative words, was a limitation and a restriction to the particular jurisdiction there described. It is impossible to abstract or digest Marshall's opinion on this point. I prefer to quote:

"The question whether an act repugnant to the Constitution can become the law of the land is a question deeply interesting to the United States but happily not of an intricacy proportioned to its interest. It seems only necessary to recognize certain principles, supposed to have been long and well established, to decide it.

"That the people have an original right to establish for their future government such principles as in their opinion shall most conduce to their own happiness is the basis on which the whole American fabric has been erected. The exercise of this original right is a very great exertion; nor can it nor ought it to be frequently repeated. The principles, therefore, so established are deemed fundamental. And as the authority from which they proceed is supreme and can seldom act, they are designed to be permanent.

"This original and supreme will organizes the Government and assigns to different departments their respective powers. It may either stop here or establish certain limits not to be transcended by those departments."

The Government of the United States is of the latter description. The powers of the legislature are defined and limited; and that those limits may not be mistaken or forgotten, the Constitution is written. To what purpose are powers limited, and to what purpose is that limitation committed to writing, if these limits may at any time be passed by those intended to be restrained? The distinction between a government with limited and unlimited powers is abolished if those limits do not confine the persons on whom they are imposed and if acts prohibited and acts allowed are of equal obligation. It is a proposition too plain to be contested that the Constitution controls any legislative act repugnant to it or that the legislature may alter the Constitution by an ordinary act.

Between these alternatives there is no middle ground. The Constitution is either a superior paramount law, unchangeable by ordinary means, or it is on a level with ordinary legislative acts and, like other acts, is alterable when the legislature shall please to alter it.

If the former part of the alternative be true, then a legislative act contrary to the Constitution is not law; if the latter part be true, then written constitutions are absurd attempts on the part of the people to limit a power in its own nature illimitable.

Certainly all those who have framed written constitutions contemplate them as forming the fundamental and paramount law of the nation, and consequently the theory of every such government must be that an act of the legislature repugnant to the constitution is void.

This theory is essentially attached to a written constitution, and is consequently to be considered by this court as one of the fundamental principles of our society. It is not, therefore, to be lost sight of in the further consideration of this subject.

If an act of the legislature repugnant to the Constitution is void, does it, notwithstanding its invalidity, bind the courts and oblige them to give it effect? Or, in other words, though it be not law, does it constitute a rule as operative as if it was a law? This would be to overthrow in fact what was established in theory, and would seem at first view an absurdity too gross to be insisted on. It shall, however, receive a more attentive consideration.

It is emphatically the province and duty of the judicial department to say what the law is. Those who apply the rule to particular cases must of necessity expound and interpret that rule. If two laws conflict with each other, the courts must decide on the operation of each.

So, if the law be in opposition to the Constitution—if both the law and the Constitution apply to a particular case, so that the court must either decide that case conformably to the law, disregarding the Constitution, or conformably to the Constitution, disregarding the law—the court must determine which of these conflicting rules governs the case. This is of the very essence of judicial duty.

If, then, the courts are to regard the Constitution—and the Constitution is superior to any ordinary act of the legislature—the Constitution, and not such ordinary act, must govern the case to which they both apply.

Those, then, who controvert the principle that the Constitution is to be considered in court as a paramount law are reduced to the necessity of maintaining that courts must close their eyes on the Constitution and see only the law.

This doctrine would subvert the very foundation of all written constitutions. It would declare that an act which, according to the principles and theory of our Government, is entirely void, is yet, in practice, completely obligatory. It would declare that if the legislature shall do what is expressly forbidden, such act, notwithstanding the express prohibition, is in reality effectual. It would be giving to the legislature a practical and real omnipotence with the same breath which professes to restrict their powers within narrow limits. It is prescribing limits and declaring that those limits may be passed at pleasure.

That it thus reduces to nothing what we have deemed the greatest improvement on political institutions, a written constitution, would of itself be sufficient in America, where written constitutions have been viewed with so much reverence for rejecting the construction. But the peculiar expressions of the Constitution of the United States furnish additional arguments in favor of its rejection.

The judicial power of the United States is extended to all cases arising under the Constitution.

Could it be the intention of those who gave this power to say that in using it the Constitution should not be looked into; that a case arising under the Constitution should be decided without examining the instrument under which it arises?

This is too extravagant to be maintained.

In some cases, then, the Constitution must be looked into by the judges. And if they can open it at all, what part of it are they forbidden to read or to obey?

Why otherwise does it direct the judges to take an oath to support it? This oath certainly applies in an especial manner to their conduct in their official character. How immoral to impose it on them if they were to be used as the instruments, and the knowing instruments, for violating what they swear to support!

The oath of office, too, imposed by the legislature, is completely demonstrative of the legislative opinion on this subject. It is in these words: "I do solemnly swear that I will administer justice without respect to persons, and do equal right to the poor and to the rich; and that I will faithfully and impartially discharge all the duties incumbent on me as ———, according to the best of my ability and understanding agreeably to the Constitution and laws of the United States."

Why does a judge swear to discharge his duties agreeably to the Constitution of the United States if that Constitution forms no rule for his government, if it is closed upon him and can not be inspected by him?

And he closes with this blow from the hammer of Thor:

"If such be the real state of things, this is worse than solemn mockery. To prescribe or to take this oath becomes equally a crime."

Thousands of pages have been written in support or defense of this decision. Other thousands have been written in criticism or condemnation, not a line of which has added to or detracted from this great opinion. At the time it was rendered the country was tremendously excited over the acquisition of Louisiana, and for a time it was little noted except by the bar. Jefferson denied its validity, declared it was extrajudicial, and anathematized it to the day of his death and his fellow Republicans followed suit, but it remained the law of the land.

Magna Charta, that great achievement of the Anglo-Saxon race, was a limitation upon the power of the Crown only. The power of Parliament remains omnipotent, despotic, with no check or restriction. For hundreds of years after Magna Charta Parliament condemned men without trial, sent them to the block, forfeited their goods, punished the guilty and innocent alike. The peculiar distinction of the American Constitution was that it for the first time protected the individual against the aggression not only of the Executive but of the legislative. But this Constitution would have failed in that particular but for the decision in Marbury against Madison. This feature of the Constitution interpreted by the great Chief Justice is America's contribution to the democracy of the world. It remains to-day the corner stone of American liberty. AMENDMENT TO THIRD DEFICIENCY APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. SHORTRIDGE submitted an amendment providing that the General Accounting Office be authorized and directed to credit, in the accounts of William J. McGee, as Assistant Treasurer of the United States, San Francisco, Calif., the sum of $514.95, etc., intended to be proposed by him to the third deficiency appropriation bill, which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

COMMITTEE SERVICE.

On motion of Mr. LODGE, and by unanimous consent, it was—

Ordered, That the Senator from New York [Mr. CALDER] be relieved at his own request from further service on the Committee on Finance and that the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. REED] be assigned to service on that committee.

WORK OF THE LEAGUE OF NATIONS.

Mr. SHEPPARD resumed the speech begun by him on yesterday. After having spoken for some time,

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Texas yield to the Senator from California?

Mr. SHEPPARD. With the consent of the Senator from Washington, I yield temporarily.

Mr. JONES of Washington. That is entirely satisfactory.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. But there are others here who may want to have the rules observed. The Senator from Washington is not running the Senate.

Mr. SHEPPARD. The Senator from Washington has stated he would not consent to any further interruptions by unanimous consent.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Then I shall object to having any interruption.

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. I ask merely to file a report of the Judiciary Committee.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I object. This is not a one-sided Senate.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Nebraska objects, and the Senator from Texas will proceed.

Mr. SHEPPARD resumed his speech. After having spoken for some time,

WALTER RUNKE.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. STERLING in the chair). Does the Senator from Texas yield to the Senator from Arizona?

Mr. SHEPPARD. I yield, with the consent of the Senator from Washington, and also the consent of the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. HITCHCOCK], who has heretofore objected. I will be glad to yield, if they have no objection.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. President, I should like to make my position clear. I do not think the Senator from Nebraska understood my position. I am merely standing on the rules as to no business being transacted since the last call for a quorum. I will make no point, however, against the Senator from Arizona or any other Senator who desires to present a matter that involves no discussion and will consume no time.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, the matter which I wish to call up is a matter of high privilege. I would have the right to call it up at any time, but I thank the Senator from Washington for his courtesy. However, Rule VII, clause 7, provides:

7. The Presiding Officer may at any time lay, and it shall be in order at any time for a Senator to move to lay, before the Senate any bill or other matter sent to the Senate by the President or the House of Representatives, and any question pending at that time shall be suspended for this purpose. Any motion so made shall be determined without debate.

I will not resort to the rule; I prefer to resort to the courtesy that has been extended to me by the Senator from Washington [Mr. JONES]. Therefore I ask that the amendment of the House of Representatives to Senate bill 1829 be laid before the Senate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER laid before the Senate the amendment of the House to the bill (S. 1829) for the relief of Walter Runke, which was, on page 1, line 10, to strike out "months of September, 1916, and March, 1918," and insert "time between his indictment in March, 1916, until his acquittal in March, 1918."

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, I move that the Senate concur in the amendment of the House.

The motion was agreed to.

COINAGE OF COMMEMORATIVE 50-CENT PIECES.

The PRESIDING OFFICER laid before the Senate the amendment of the House to the bill (S. 4468) to authorize the coinage of 50-cent pieces in commemoration of the three hundredth anniversary of the settling of New Netherland, the Middle States, in 1624, by Walloons, French and Belgian Huguenots, under the Dutch West India Co., which was, on page 2, after line 14, to insert:

SEC. 3. That the coins herein authorized shall be issued only upon the request of the Fifth National Bank of New York, and upon payment of the par value of such coins by such bank to the United States Treasury.

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. Mr. President, will the Senator from Texas yield to me to make a motion in connection with the amendment just laid before the Senate?

Mr. SHEPPARD. I yield to the Senator with the same understanding as before.

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. I move that the Senate concur in the amendment of the House.

The motion was agreed to.

ELEPHANT BUTTE IRRIGATION PROJECT, N. MEX.

Mr. BURSUM. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Texas yield to the Senator from New Mexico?

Mr. SHEPPARD. I yield to the Senator, if it be agreeable to the Senator from Washington and the Senator from Nebraska.

Mr. JONES of Washington. If the matter the Senator from New Mexico desires to present will not take any time or involve any discussion, I shall make no objection.

Mr. BURSUM. If it shall do so, I will withdraw the request I am about to make.

Mr. President, yesterday Senate bill 4232 was reached on the calendar, but, after discussion, objection was made to its consideration. The bill provides for adjusting certain accounts between the Government and the water-users' association. It is very important to the farmers of my State and also to the farmers of a section in Texas who are operating farms under the Elephant Butte Reservoir Dam. Yesterday the Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT] objected to the consideration of the bill, but later on, after reading the report of the Secretary of the Interior, he consented that the bill might pass. The morning hour, however, had expired before I could ask to have the bill considered. I desire now to ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of the bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from New Mexico?

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. President, I feel, so far as the consideration and passage of bills are concerned, that, of course, if I allow one Senator to have an unobjected bill considered and acted upon, other Senators would be entitled to the same privilege. I hope we shall be able to arrange so that we may take these measures from the calendar in a very short while. So I shall have to object to the request of the Senator from New Mexico at this time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Objection is made.

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. President, if we can adjourn this afternoon, we shall have a morning hour to-morrow, and then we can take up these measures.

WORK OF LEAGUE OF NATIONS.

Mr. SHEPPARD resumed his speech. After having spoken for some time,

MISSISSIPPI RIVER BRIDGE.

The PRESIDING OFFICER laid before the Senate an amendment of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 4411) granting the consent of Congress to the cities of Minneapolis and St. Paul, Minn., or either of them, to construct a bridge across the Mississippi River in section 17, township 28 north, range 23 west of the fourth principal meridian, in the State of Minnesota, which was, on page 1, line 7, after "in," to insert "or near."

Mr. CALDER. I move that the Senate concur in the House amendment.

The motion was agreed to.

LOWE HAYDEN BIBBY.

The PRESIDING OFFICER laid before the Senate the amendment of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 3690) for the relief of Lowe Hayden Bibby, which was, on page 1, line 12, after "accepted," to insert "but that he shall not be entitled to receive any pay or allowances for the time he has not been in active service."

Mr. HARRISON. I move that the Senate concur in the amendment of the House.

The motion was agreed to.

WORK OF THE LEAGUE OF NATIONS.

Mr. SHEPPARD resumed his speech. After having spoken for some time,

PAYMENT OF CHARGES ON RECLAMATION PROJECTS.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, will the Senator from Texas yield, so that the Chair can hand down certain amendments of the House to a Senate bill?

Mr. SHEPPARD. With the consent of the Senator from Washington, I will yield.

Mr. JONES of Washington. This is a message from the House, so the Chair has a right to lay it before the Senate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. SPENCER in the chair) laid before the Senate the amendments of the House to the bill (S. 4187) to extend the time for payment of charges due on reclamation projects, and for other purposes, which were, on page 2, to strike out lines 3 to 7, inclusive; on page 2, line 8, to strike out "b" and insert "SEC. 3"; on page 2, line 10, strike out "4" and insert "6"; on page 2, line 20, to strike out "1923, and 1924" and insert "and 1923"; and on page 2, after line 20, to insert:

SEC. 5. That where an individual water user, or individual applicant for a water right under a Federal irrigation project constructed or being constructed under the act of June 17, 1902 (32 Stat. L. 388), or any act amendatory thereof or supplementary thereto, is unable to pay any construction or operation and maintenance charge due, excepting operation and maintenance charges for drainage on the Boise, Idaho, project for the year 1922, or prior thereto, the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized in his discretion to add such accrued and unpaid charges to the construction charge of the land of such water user or applicant, and to distribute such accumulated charges equally over each of the subsequent years, beginning with the year 1924, at such rate per year as will complete the payment during the remaining years of the 20-year period of payment of the original construction charge: Provided, That upon such adjustment being made, any penalties or interest which may have accrued in connection with such unpaid construction and operation and maintenance charges shall be canceled, and in lieu thereof the amount so due, and the payment of which is hereby extended, shall draw interest at the rate of 6 per cent per annum, paid annually from the time said amount became due to date of payment: Provided further, That the applicant for the extension shall first show to the satisfaction of the Secretary of the Interior detailed statement of his assets and liabilities and actual inability to make payment at the time of the application and an apparent ability to meet the deferred charges in 1924 and subsequent years: And provided further, That in case the principal and interest herein provided for are not paid in the manner and at the time provided by this act, any penalty now provided by law shall attach from the date the charge was originally due: And provided further, That similar relief in whole or in part may be extended by the Secretary of the Interior to a legally organized group of water users of a project, upon presentation of a sufficient number of individual showings made in accordance with the foregoing proviso to satisfy the Secretary of the Interior that such extension is necessary.

Mr. McNARY. I move that the Senate concur in the House amendments.

Mr. HARRISON. I desire to propound an inquiry. Will the Senator from Oregon explain the bill—the Agricultural appropriation bill, is it not?

Mr. McNARY. This is a measure to relieve some of the water users in the far West, who live on irrigation projects. It was reported from the Committee on Irrigation and Reclamation and not from the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry, of which the Senator from Mississippi is an able member.

Mr. HARRISON. Will the Senator explain just what the House amendment is? Of course, so many of these bills are passed that it is hard to keep up with all of them.

Mr. McNARY. That is true. Some months ago the Senate passed a bill giving temporary relief to water users having water rights on reclamation projects. On account of the depressed condition of agriculture it was found necessary to extend the time of the payment of the construction charges on these various projects. The Senate passed a bill which called for a rate of interest of 4 per cent on the deferred payments. The House increased the rate from 4 to 6 per cent. Otherwise the two measures are identical, except in a few minor particulars. I am asking at this time for the concurrence of the Senate in the House amendments, the principal one of which increases the rate on deferred payments for construction charges from 4 to 6 per cent. It does not affect the Senator's part of the country at all; it is confined to the Western and Intermountain States.

Mr. HARRISON. I was just thinking that the increase in the interest rate from 4 to 6 per cent is a pretty large increase.

Mr. McNARY. I thought so. It was not within my heart to exact that large interest rate, but when the bill reached the House I found the Members there not so sympathetic as were Senators.

Mr. HARRISON. What has been the interest rate heretofore?

Mr. McNARY. There has not been a rate, because this is practically the first time those living on the projects have found it necessary to ask for a deferment of the payments on account of the construction charges on the projects.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Let me suggest, too, that under the House amendment the payments on these deferred charges are spread over the remainder of the time until the final construction period, and those on the project are relieved from the penalties which may have accrued under the previous law. So in a way it gives them a relief which probably compensates for the higher interest rate fixed on the deferred payments. I think the penalties amount to 12 per cent.

Mr. HARRISON. The House amendment is satisfactory to all the representatives from the western country who are interested?

Mr. JONES of Washington. I think so.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, we would have much preferred the Senate 4 per cent rate, but I think it is impossible to keep that in the bill. If we insisted it would be necessary to take the matter back to conference, and judging from the situation in the House as I have viewed it, I do not believe the House would agree to the 4 per cent. I have taken the pains to telegraph back to one of the most prominent projects in my State in regard to the matter, and the agent of the settlers on that project, who has recently spent a week or two here looking the situation over, has advised us to accept the bill as it is amended and agree to the 6 per cent rate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on concurring in the House amendments.

The amendments were concurred in.

RAILROAD SIDINGS IN THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

The PRESIDING OFFICER laid before the Senate the amendments of the House to the bill (S. 3083) to authorize the construction of elevated railroad sidings adjacent to steam-railroad tracks in the District of Columbia, which were to strike out all after the enacting clause and insert:

That the Baltimore & Ohio Railroad Co. is hereby authorized to construct and maintain elevated sidings in the city of Washington, D. C., across N Street north, between First and Second Streets east, and across Second Street east, between N Street and Florida Avenue north, said sidings to be connected with and to spring from any of its tracks in square No. 711, or from any of its tracks south of Florida Avenue, and to connect with elevated tracks in square No. 710: Provided, That such sidings shall not be at a lower grade above the present grade of N Street than the siding in N Street, constructed and maintained under authority of the act of Congress approved June 27, 1906.

And to amend the title so as to read: "A bill authorizing the Baltimore & Ohio Railroad Co. to construct an elevated railroad siding adjacent to its tracks in the city of Washington."

Mr. BALL. I move that the Senate concur in the House amendments.

Mr. HARRISON. Will not the Senator explain just what the House amendments are before the Senate votes on the motion?

Mr. BALL. I ask the Secretary to read the House amendment. It is very short.

Mr. HARRISON. I heard it read, but it is a very complicated matter.

Mr. BALL. This is a bill to permit the Baltimore & Ohio Railroad to construct some bridges over certain streets leading to certain terminals.

Mr. CARAWAY. May I ask the Senator if this is not the very railroad construction against which the Methodist Hospital people were protesting?

Mr. BALL. No; that is the so-called switching bill.

Mr. CARAWAY. This has nothing to do with that?

Mr. BALL. No; nothing.

Mr. HARRISON. Does the Senator think the amendment is all right?

Mr. BALL. I think the bill as amended is all right.

Mr. HARRISON. And that it is very necessary for the welfare of the District as well as the continuation of the Baltimore & Ohio Railroad?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on concurring in the amendments of the House.

The amendments were concurred in.

ALICE M. GORMAN.

The PRESIDING OFFICER laid before the Senate the amendment of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 3350) for the relief of Alice M. Gorman, which was, on page 1, line 6, to strike out "$2,500" and insert "$1,000 in full settlement against the Government."

Mr. CAPPER. I move that the Senate concur in the amendment of the House.

Mr. HARRISON. Before the motion is put, this matter is quite important. There is a difference of $1,500 in the amount allowed, if I heard the amendment read correctly.

Mr. CAPPER. The House reduced the amount $1,500.

Mr. HARRISON. What was the original amount?

Mr. CAPPER. The original amount was all right, but $1,000 was as much as the House would allow, and I think the amount agreed upon will be satisfactory to the parties interested.

Mr. HARRISON. It seems that Alice M. Gorman was riding in an automobile, which was run into by an Army truck.

Mr. CAPPER. Yes; it is just a small claim. The committee went into it pretty carefully.

Mr. HARRISON. What is the reason why the House reduced the amount from $2,500 to $1,000?

Mr. CAPPER. I do not think they had a good reason for reducing it.

Mr. HARRISON. They just followed their usual course?

Mr. CAPPER. They simply would not allow the larger amount, and we had to take a thousand dollars or not get anything at all. So the parties who were interested believed they had better take the smaller amount.

Mr. HARRISON. I suppose it will be agreeable to Alice M. Gorman?

Mr. CAPPER. It will be.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on concurring in the amendment of the House.

The amendment was concurred in.

BUILDINGS AT CAMP FUNSTON, KANS.

The PRESIDING OFFICER also laid before the Senate the amendment of the House to the bill (S. 851) authorizing the Secretary of War to make settlement with the lessees who erected buildings on a five-year lease on the zone at Camp Funston, Kans., and for other purposes, which was, on page 2, line 2, after "holders" to insert ": Provided, That in no case the amount paid in settlement shall exceed the actual losses sustained."

Mr. CURTIS. The bill was originally drawn by Secretary of War Baker and indorsed by him and afterwards indorsed by Secretary of War Weeks. It passed the Senate, and an amendment was made in the House which simply carries out the purpose of the bill. I move that the Senate concur in the amendment of the House.

The motion was agreed to.

WORK OF THE LEAGUE OF NATIONS.

Mr. SHEPPARD resumed his speech. After having spoken for some time,

COLUMBIA BASIN IRRIGATION PROJECT.

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the amendments of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 3808) authorizing the Secretary of the Interior to investigate and report to Congress upon the Columbia Basin irrigation project, which were to strike out all after the enacting clause and insert:

That the following sums are hereby authorized to be appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to be immediately available for expenditure by the Secretary of the Interior, namely:

For investigations of the feasibility of irrigation by gravity or pumping, water sources, water storage, and related problems on the Columbia River and its tributaries, including the Columbia Basin project, $100,000; the Umatilla Rapids project, $50,000; in all, $150,000.

For cooperative and miscellaneous investigations of the feasibility of reclamation projects, $125,000 annually.

And to amend the title so as to read: "An act authorizing the Secretary of the Interior to investigate the feasibility of reclamation projects on the Columbia River and various other irrigation projects."

Mr. McNARY. I move that the Senate concur in the House amendments.

The motion was agreed to.

FOREIGN POSTAGE AND REVENUE STAMPS.

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the amendments of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 2703) to allow the printing and publishing of illustrations of foreign postage and revenue stamps from defaced plates, which were, on page 1, line 8, to strike out "of" and insert "in black and white of foreign," and on page 2, to strike out lines 1 and 2 and to insert:

And nothing in said sections shall be construed to forbid or prevent similar illustrations, in black and white only, in philatelic or historical articles, books, journals, albums, or the circulars of legitimate publishers or dealers in such stamps, books, journals, albums, or circulars of such portion of the border of a stamp of the United States as may be necessary to show minor differences in the stamp so illustrated, but all such illustrations shall be at least four times as large as the portion of the original United States stamps so illustrated: Provided, however, That no such postage or revenue stamp is printed or published without the printer or publisher thereof first having obtained the written consent of the Secretary of the Treasury for such purpose.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. I move that the Senate disagree to the House amendments and request a conference with the House upon the bill and amendments, and that the Chair appoint the conferees on the part of the Senate.

The motion was agreed to; and the Vice President appointed Mr. DILLINGHAM, Mr. CUMMINS, and Mr. SHIELDS conferees on the part of the Senate.

AMERICAN NIAGARA RAILROAD CORPORATION.

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the amendments of the House to the bill (S. 4358) to authorize the American Niagara Railroad Corporation to build a bridge across the Niagara River between the State of New York and the Dominion of Canada, which were on page 1, line 7, after "railway," insert the words "and highway"; and on page 2, line 2, after the word "Provided," to insert the words "That said bridge shall contain and furnish adequate and suitable ways for the passage in both directions of horse-drawn and motor-driven vehicles and a way for pedestrians: And provided further."

Mr. WADSWORTH. I move that the Senate concur in the House amendments.

The motion was agreed to.

WORK OF THE LEAGUE OF NATIONS.

Tuesday, February 20, 1923.

EPIDEMIC COMMISSION.

Mr. SHEPPARD. Mr. President, after a review of the work of the epidemic commission the council resolved on January 14, in pursuance of the decision of the assembly on September 23, 1921, to place the commission under the control of the provisional health organization of the league and especially under the supervision of the medical director, authorizing the commission to continue to act as long as health conditions in Poland and eastern Europe made it necessary, its budgetary independence to be preserved and its staff not to be incorporated in the health section of the secretariat.

INTERNATIONAL INTELLECTUAL COOPERATION.

The council resolved on January 14, pursuant to the resolution of the second assembly, dated September 21, 1921, to form a committee of 12 members, including women, to examine the question of international intellectual cooperation, the personnel of the committee and the date of its meeting to be determined at a subsequent session.

TRAFFIC IN WOMEN AND CHILDREN.

The council on January 14 established the advisory committee referred to in Resolution XI of the final act of the Geneva Conference on the Traffic in Women and Children, providing that the following countries should be invited to name representatives: France, Great Britain, Japan, Poland, Spain, Rumania, Denmark, Italy, and Uruguay; that five assessors should be named, as follows, (a) one appointed by the international office for the suppression of the traffic, (b) one appointed by the international women's organizations, (c) one appointed by the Federation of National Unions for the Protection of Girls, (d) one appointed by the Jewish Association for the Protection of Girls, (e) one appointed by the International Catholic Association for the Protection of Girls; that the council should decide at a subsequent session when the committee should meet.

DRAFT MANDATE FOR PALESTINE; MINORITIES IN ESTHONIA, LATVIA, AND LITHUANIA.

The council decided on January 14 to postpone until its next session the appointment of the president of the committee on religious questions contemplated in article 14 of the draft mandate for Palestine. It also made similar postponement of the question of protection of minorities in Esthonia, Latvia, and Lithuania.

PUBLICITY OF COUNCIL'S PROCEEDINGS.

Considering on January 14 the question of publicity of the council's proceedings, Mr. Wilson Harris and Mr. Filliol, president and vice president of the International Association of Journalists, accredited to the League of Nations, were invited to take seats at the council table.

Mr. Harris submitted a memorandum expressing the views of the association.

The memorandum stated that it should be regarded as axiomatic that the League of Nations depended on public opinion not merely for success but for its existence; that it was essential therefore that information as to every phase of league activity should not only be available to those seeking it but should be widely circulated throughout the world; that it was necessary that the league should cultivate both passive and active publicity, the first meaning the mere elimination of secrecy, the second the taking of affirmative measures to secure world-wide dissemination of important information concerning the league; that both forms of publicity were properly combined when the league proceedings were of such character and so conducted as to attract to its meetings journalists of all nations, and when such journalists were provided with all practicable facilities in connection with their vocation; that the International Association of Journalists recognized that the league had already gone far along these lines; and that it was this fact rather than any idea of complaint or criticism that had led the association to make certain suggestions for further progress in these respects.

The memorandum stated that it was of the highest importance that the council should sit habitually in public, and only as an exception in private; that only such a rule could bring about regular attendance at council meetings of journalists from centers like London, Paris, and Rome; that the council's recent public meeting on Albania showed how valuable such a meeting could be made; that the public was interested in active controversy, not a colorless rehearsal of differences of opinion but the actual expressions and variances characterizing them as they occurred; that the sessions should develop spontaneously before the public eye if the public interest was to be permanently engaged, even at the risk of precipitating the unexpected; that it was the unanticipated and unexpected that aroused popular interest; that when for special reasons a private meeting should be necessary, a communique should be issued promptly, containing a full and lucid account of the proceedings; that the communiques issued by the committees of the recent Washington conference were good examples to follow, as well as most of the reports of the private meetings of subcommittees contained in the assembly journal at the last assembly.

The memorandum suggested that a member of the information section of the league should be on hand at public meetings of the council to advise journalists as to the significance of the proceedings; that few journalists were sufficiently versed in the details of the league's activities to follow unassisted the council's deliberations at any particular time; that a stenographic report of the deliberations, issued sheet by sheet, if practicable, should be available to journalists as soon as possible after a public sitting; that this was the usual case with public meetings in the United States, as well as the French Parliament and high court of justice.

The memorandum stated that the policy of the league as to debates in the assembly was ideal, both from the standpoint of active and passive publicity; that the distribution to journalists of stenographic reports of debates and the speed of distribution were most admirable.

The memorandum stated that inasmuch as so many assembly committees met at the same time it might be well to provide stenographic reports of their proceedings also, as well as a member of the information section for public committee meetings to enable journalists to keep up with them all.

The memorandum requested that a press table be furnished at public meetings of the council and of committees; that during assembly sessions all communiques and other press notices be posted in duplicate at the secretariat and the Hotel Victoria; that journalists had to be sometimes at one of these places and sometimes at the other.

The memorandum praised the decision to establish branch offices of the information section of the league at Paris, London, and Rome; that the representative of this section at Paris had done notable work of great value to the league in connection with the meeting at that place of the commission on Austrian relief credits.

When this memorandum had been presented, the president of the council stated that most of its recommendations had already been adopted; that most of the council's meetings at the present session had been public, the private meetings dealing principally with questions of the council's internal administration; that it was impossible without an increase of staff to issue to the press regular stenographic reports of the meetings of the council and of the committees of the assembly. He suggested that the Association of Journalists consider improved methods for transmission of news to the press by the information section of the secretariat and report results at the next session of the council.

The secretary general announced that press tables would be provided in the council room.

STATISTICAL INQUIRY ON DISARMAMENT.

The secretary general presented a statement on January 14 to the effect that the statistical inquiry on disarmament which the assembly on October 1, 1921, had decided to institute was in process of organization, that considerable work had been done, but it was not yet possible to indicate results. The president was authorized to approve appointments of additional members of the temporary mixed commission on armament by said commission.

INTERNATIONAL CREDITS ORGANIZATION.

The council resolved on January 14 in reference to its resolution of December 14, 1920, regarding the international credits scheme to ask the financial committee to present at the council's next session a report on the work to date of the international credits organization, and on the proposed future activities of the committee.

NEXT SESSION.

It was decided on January 14 that the council's next session should be called for April 25, 1922. Mr. da Cunha, who under the rule would preside at the next session, stated he would not be in Europe at the time. It was agreed that in such event he should notify the secretary general, that Mr. de Leon would then be invited to act as president, and that Mr. da Cunha would be asked to officiate at a subsequent session.

SAAR GOVERNING COMMISSION.

During the sixteenth session of the council Mr. Lambert (Belgian), Count de Moltke-Huitfeldt (Dane), Mr. Rault (French), and Mr. Waugh (Canadian), were reappointed members of the Saar Basin Governing Commission for one year from February 13, 1922, Mr. Rault being reappointed chairman for that time.

COMMITTEE ON PROCEDURE OF CONCILIATION.

During its sixteenth session the council, pursuant to the assembly resolution of October 4, 1921, appointed a committee to investigate procedure of conciliation, as outlined by amendments proposed by the Norwegian and Swedish Governments, composed as follows: Messrs. Adatci (president), Alvarez, Hold von Ferneck, Löfgren, and de Visscher.

COMMITTEE ON ALLOCATION OF LEAGUE EXPENSES.

The council requested the committee on allocation of expenses to continue its work.

ADJOURNMENT.

At the conclusion of its labors on Saturday, January 14, 1922, the sixteenth session of the council ended.

PERMANENT COURT OF INTERNATIONAL JUSTICE.

The official journal of the league shows that on January 12, 1922, Cuba, having ratified the statute of the Permanent Court of International Justice, deposited its deed of ratification with the permanent secretariat of the league, and that on January 21, 1922, Latvia signed the statute of court.

SAAR BASIN.

The league's official journal for March, 1922, contained a special report from the governing commission of the Saar Basin on the economic situation in the Saar territory under date of December 21, 1921, as well as the tenth periodical report of the governing commission under date of January 3, 1922, and covering November and December, 1921. The latter pointed out, among other things, that the administrative work to which the commission had devoted its energies for the last two years was almost completed—that the commission had succeeded in assuring the autonomy of the Saar Basin as prescribed by the treaty of peace.

PROTECTION OF MINORITIES.

The official journal shows that on November 8, 1921, Hungary adhered to the council's resolution of June 27, 1921, regarding the protection of minorities, and that on January 18, 1922, Bulgaria announced its adhesion. It shows also that on January 10, 1922, Latvia submitted a memorandum to the secretary general on the rights and position of minorities within its boundaries. It shows also that on January 23, 1922, the secretary general filed a note on the subject of the protection of German minorities in Poland.

AUTONOMOUS RUTHENIAN TERRITORY SOUTH OF CARPATHIANS.

The official journal contains a report filed for the council on February 8, 1922, by Mr. Hymans, Marquis Imperiali, and Viscount Ishii relating to the autonomous Ruthenian territory south of the Carpathians. The report stated that on September 10, 1921, the political party of Ruthenes in Hungary addressed a petition to the League of Nations complaining that the Czecho-Slovak Government had not yet granted autonomy to the Ruthenian territory south of the Carpathians—as it was obligated to do under articles 10 to 13 of the treaty of St. Germain of September 10, 1919—that the articles of that treaty dealing with the rights of minorities had not been observed so far as Ruthenian territory was concerned.

The report stated further that the Czecho-Slovak Government in its reply of November 18, 1921, pointed out that the treaty obligations as to Ruthenian autonomy had been legally carried out, because they had been incorporated in the constitutional charter of the Czecho-Slovak Republic—that they could be put into operation only by degrees, since the territory lacked the elements essential to self-government, possessing no educated population and no body of competent native officials. The Czecho-Slovak Government then summarized its efforts to educate the people and fit them for self-government. The report then expressed its confidence in the Czecho-Slovak Government and its conviction that this Government would in the near future establish the Ruthenian territory south of the Carpathians as an autonomous country, the Czecho-Slovak State, in accordance with the treaty of September 10, 1919, keeping the league informed of measures taken to this end. The report requested the secretary general to bring its contents to the notice of the Czecho-Slovak Government and the other members of the League of Nations.

RUSSIAN AND UKRAINIAN RELIEF WORK BY CZECHOSLOVAKIA.

The league's official journal contains a memorandum filed with the secretary geheral by the foreign minister of the Czecho-Slovak Republic on January 28, 1922, detailing the relief work carried out by Czechoslovakia on behalf of Russian and Ukrainian emigrants and the famine-stricken population in Russia—a work involving large expenditure of funds and extensive relief measures.

TRAFFIC IN WOMEN AND CHILDREN.

The official journal contains a reply by the German Empire on February 8, 1922, to the league's questionnaire as to measures against the traffic in women and children, and by New South Wales on the same date.

TRAFFIC IN OPIUM.

The journal also contains the program of the second session of the advisory committee on the traffic in opium, which was to be held on April 19, 1922.

INTERNATIONAL LANGUAGE; ESPERANTO.

On January 23, 1923, the secretary general sent a circular letter to league members stating that the second assembly had decided on September 15, 1921, to put the question of teaching Esperanto in schools on the agenda of the third assembly and to request the secretariat in the meantime to prepare a report on experiments already made and results obtained in this direction; that a questionnaire was accordingly inclosed to which a reply was desired; and that also inclosed were copies of the report of the second committee of the first assembly on the question of an international language and of the undersecretary general's report of his official mission to the Thirteenth Universal Esperanto Congress at Prague, August, 1921.
